NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN. Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

G. L. Taber has returned to Glen St. Mary, Fla., after a month's trip to New York.

The Georgia State Horticultural Society will hold its thirty-second annual meeting at Cornelia August 12 and 13.

The Minnesota State Horticultural Society held its summer meeting at St. Anthony Park June 23. The organization now has 2,745 members.

Large dealers in peonies report that there is no call from the trade for roots of Festiva Maxima for fall delivery; the public buys, but not the trade. It simply shows how well everyone is stocked up on this variety. Possibly the largest call is for Peony M. Jules Elie.

Wild Bros. Nursery Co., Sarcoxie, Mo., will make a specialty of peonies and devote more attention than formerly to ornamentals. As recently announced in the Review, Henry N. Wild, one of the founders of the business, has lately secured the entire stock and good will of the company and joined hands with his sons, C. M. Wild and A. O. Wild. They will do business under the corporate name. This unites two large stocks, especially of peonies, those of the old firm and the former firm of C. & M. Wild.

SUITABLE LOW HEDGE PLANT.

We have a California privet hedge around a flower garden with a path two feet wide inside of same. The hedge roots are a solid, hairy mat from four to six feet in the beds, killing many choice lilies and other flowers. What can I replace this hedge with that will not encroach with its roots and will not need so much trimming as privet? I do not want anything more than eighteen inches high. I want something hardy, that will not winter-kill. N. C. G.

Berberis Thunbergii is probably as suitable a plant as you can use. It does not root so strongly as the California privet and will require less trimming. It makes the best hedge if not trimmed at all, but as it may possibly grow a little wider than you care to have it, you may find it necessary to shear it in at the sides somewhat. All hedges will, of course, encroach more or less on your flower border, but the berberis in this respect will be found much less destructive than the privet. W. N. Craig.

WESTERN NURSERYMEN MEET.

The Western Association of Nurserymen held its semi-annual meeting at the Coates house, Kansas City, July 8 and 9. There was a good attendance, for this is one of the places where conditions and not theories are discussed. General satisfaction was expressed with the spring season, with confidence in the next one. Stock in some places has been damaged by flood, but, except for a few localities, the heavy rains have been a help rather than otherwise. The program was as follows:

Introductory by President Bernardin.

"Can Commercial Fertilizers be Used Profitably in Our Western Nurseries?" George H. Johnson.

"Would a National Inspection Law be a Benefit to the Wholesale Nurseryman?" W. P. Stark.

"Budding from Scions of Previous Season's

DAYTON, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Trade took a gradual drop after the busy month of June and at the present time it is down to its usual standard, such as the florist realizes each season at this time of the year. Some days business will be somewhat brisk and others exceedingly quiet. These conditions, however, are governed by the demand for funeral work.

The carnation crops are getting smaller every day, as the old plants which have done their share in the last year are being hurried to the dump and new ones taking their place. The roses have been doing exceptionally well the last two weeks, but at present they are under the influence of another spell of exceedingly hot weather and are gradually becoming scarcer, although Kaiserin is plentiful and still holds its usual popularity among the florists as a good summer rose. In about a week's time we will have home-grown asters on the market, which will be gratefully received.

Various Notes.

Mr. Lempke, of W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, called at Dayton again and was a guest at the home of George Bartholomew July 12.

Vacations are now in order and several of our florists are taking advantage of it. W. G. Matthews has recently returned from Chicago, where he spent a few days.

Arno Hendrichs returned from New York City July 13, where he has been spending a month. Mr. Hendrichs says he had a fine time.

D. Rusconi, of Cincinnati, was one of last week's visitors. R. A. B.

ROCKFORD, ILL.

Frank Fernback, who for the last nine years has had charge of J. J. Soper's greenhouses, on North Church street, is now associated with C. H. Woolsey, in charge of his greenhouses at East State, Longwood and Charles streets. Mr. Woolsey is certain that he has thus secured an expert assistant, as Mr. Fernback is acknowledged to be one of the best florists in the city.

Mr. Woolsey will soon build two more houses, 8x45 and 27x55, both for growing carnations. The John C. Moninger Co., of Chicago, has the order for the material.

AMHERST, MASS.—The trustees of the Massachusetts Agricultural College have published a notice to contractors, inviting proposals for the erection of a range of greenhouses on the college grounds.

DENVER.

The Market.

Trade has not been at all bad for the two weeks in July. The first week witnessed a better trade and a better return for money than the same week last year. During the last week we have had the national democratic convention and there was an appreciable increase in the floral line. While the crowd was not as large as was expected, those who were here spent some money and the florists got their share, or will as soon as it gets circulated around. There were several dinners, and medium sized decorations were the rule, while several speakers at the convention were presented with good sized bouquets.

The auditorium where the convention was held was well decorated, the work being done by Mr. Bush, of Daniels & Fisher.

Stock is somewhat scarce, so the retailer is generally cleaned up at night. Roses are nearly at their lowest ebb, as concerns quality, but a steady improvement is looked for from now on. American Beauties were, perhaps, the best sellers last week, but the quantity was limited, one of the larger stores being obliged to have some shipped in on account of the great demand. Carnations are still coming in fair quantity, but the quality is not so good, the Red Victory and White Enchantress being the best of any grade.

Sweet peas are now coming in quantity from the outside; hence, the price has tumbled, but the call has been good, the ruling price being from 25 cents to 35 cents per hundred. A few asters have appeared, but they are not of the quality as yet that attracts much attention. Gypsophila is now seen in quantities in all the stores. Shasta daisies are also fairly abundant. E. S. K.

Lockport, N. Y.—Thomas Mansfield has an interesting hobby, which furnishes him with profit as well as recreation. He has twenty-two hives of bees, which he understands perfectly, and he can talk in an entertaining way about their habits, peculiarities, etc. Mr. Mansfield's houses are looking fine and he reports having had a good bedding plant business.

Ridgefield, Conn.—George I. Haight has closed his place of business on West Lane. The greenhouses and other buildings have all been removed, and Mr. Haight will be kept busy this summer superintending the erection of his greenhouses on Danbury avenue. He expects to resume business early in September.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

The hot wave prevalent in the east struck here the latter part of last week and put an end to what little business there was. Vacation days are here, and the florist has no qualms about leaving his trade for a spell, for there are not many big orders to corner. Carnations are smaller. Enchantress and white seem to hold their own better than the others. Young roses are blooming and, though scarce, they are good. Gladioli and larkspur are the popular outdoor cut just now.

Various Notes.

James Souden had some good orders the first part of the week, and exhibited some fine stock.

The Shriners' convention will occasion a few orders, but not much is expected on account of the season of the year.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. is getting in its coal supply for the coming winter. This firm is cutting some fine Kaiserin.

M. E. M.

PEORIA, ILL.

Peoria florists are taking advantage of the slight lull in business by doing a great deal of improving and repairing.

D. U. Augspurger & Sons have purchased an acre of ground adjoining their property. They will begin at once to erect four new houses, one of them to be used exclusively for propagating purposes. They are also improving their houses, tearing out old benches and replacing with new ones. Superintendent M. D. Augspurger stated that his firm would probably add palms as a specialty. As they have achieved a huge success by specializing ferns of all kinds, we may look for "something doing" by these people in palms in the near future.

James Cole, of Cole Bros., reports business good on the whole, but not much indoor business, as picnics, excursions, etc., are taking up most of the flower lovers' time.

Two new houses are being constructed by Chas. Loveridge. Foreman J. Salmons reports a good business for June.

H. C. R.

NOROTON, CONN.—Ezra Hartwright is preparing for the coming season by enlarging and improving his greenhouses.

READING, PA.—During the night of July 4 a bullet was fired through the large plate glass window of the store of E. H. Beears & Sons, at 38½ North Ninth street. The bullet imbedded itself in the wall.

CANNAS.

TO THE GROWERS OF CANNAS.
Brethren:
There has been a movement on foot, for several years, among the growers of that "Queen" of summer bedding plants, the canna, among those who are members of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I am only in the business on a large place for the pleasure that there is in it, and do not sell, and for that reason I have not favored a canna organization. I now think the time has come that a National Canna Society should be organized, and I hope that all the growers will be at the convention at the Falls, so there can be an exchange of opinions.
Yours truly,
H. D. Seele, Canna Specialist,

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.

Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.

Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.

As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.

Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The Nassau County Horticultural Society held its monthly meeting in Pembroke hall July 8. President Jaenicke occupied the chair. Acceptances were read from several gentlemen who were invited to act as judges at the hall exhibition. Two new members were proposed and three elected. Three honorary members were elected. Mr. Mackenzie, chairman of the executive committee, presented a schedule for the fall show, which was approved. Contributions of special prizes were offered by Stumpp & Walter Co., Peter Henderson & Co., and W. E. Marshall Co., New York; also W. H. Weeks, Sea Cliff. Several of the members also offered prizes. It was voted that no member could compete for his own prize, and the executive committee was asked to have a preliminary schedule prepared by next meeting. It was also voted to have a dahlia show in October. A proposal that essays be read and discussed was received favorably, and J. F. Johnston consented to have one on evergreens for next meeting. President Jaenicke announced that members are invited to exhibit at the Queens-Nassau Agricultural Exhibition. The awards of the exhibits for points were: H. F. Meyer, corn, 81; Valentine Cleres, poppies, 71; Oscar Adder, rhubarb, certificate of culture; yuccas, honorable mention. An exhibit of evergreens by Mr. Johnston received a vote of thanks. Mr. Johnston gave an interesting talk on evergreens and Mr. Adder told how he grew his rhubarb. J. R.

THE COAL MARKET.

Florists who command the cash, and most of them do, can make more than the going rate for money by filling up the coal bins now. This season more than in preceding ones an advantage is to be had by buying during the season of slack demand. Indeed, an authority in the coal trade deplores the present tendency to cut prices on the ground that buyers have learned to take only those coals which have proved to produce the desired results and will be willing to pay usual prices for them a little later.

"The fact that a keen need for coal will exist later on in the winter and that prices then will be higher than they are now does not seem to influence any buying at this low figure," says this authority. "The people in general consequently are willing to pay a higher price for coal later on if they can get the use of their money for other purposes now. This indicates, as it should, to the coal trade that the sacrificing of values in order to bring about a movement of coal is usually of no value and especially is this true right now. Coal operators have had this point impressed upon their minds more and more in the last few years and will probably come to realize the importance of the proposition later on that there is no virtue in trying to force coal on an unwilling market."

OVERHAUL THE PLANT.

"A stitch in time saves nine," or even ten, if it is in a greenhouse heating plant.

In the last few years there has been great improvement in the character of the heating apparatus used by florists, for it has come to be realized that the facilities for warming are about the most important subject the grower has to consider. In these days of close competition it may easily happen that the efficiency of the heating apparatus may spell loss or profit: Without enough heat, properly distributed and controlled, the stock will not be of its best quality; and the difference in fuel consumed as between an economical arrangement and an extravagant one will eat a big hole in the receipts.

It is a far cry from the primitive flue to the up-to-date systems now used in the big, modern plants, like that of W. H. Elliott, who circulates steam by gravity through a half mile of pipe. The big growers employ experts to plan the heating arrangements and consider the service so valuable that they are not only willing to pay well for advice but expend large sums in following it. To the small grower the subject is of no less importance.

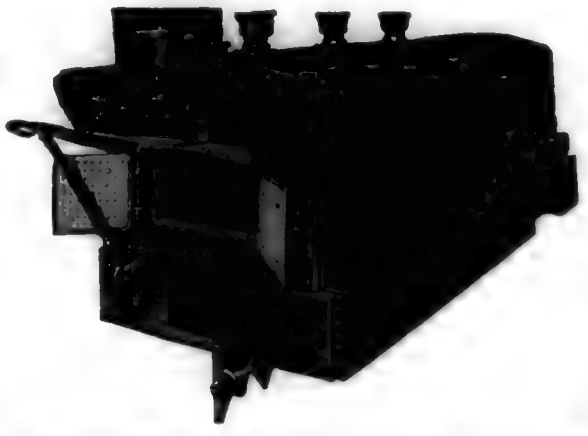
This is the season at which the apparatus should be overhauled from A to Z and put in apple-pie order. Changes, if needed, take time and the cool nights, with their need for heat, will be here almost before you know it.



Hot water not only remains the best medium for warming, under certain conditions, but its range has been greatly extended in the last few years and it is now employed satisfactorily and economically in much larger units than heretofore. Steam has been so developed, as applied to greenhouse heating, that many of the largest growers have found it a profitable investment to concentrate the entire boiler plant in one central station, which may include pumps, dynamos and even cold storage apparatus.

While the best heating apparatus, small or large, is the one with the fewest frills, it is not always possible to employ either water or steam in its simplest form; conditions in each case must be met, and can be satisfactorily met by study. It is not possible to say that any one system is the best under all circumstances and it may require, and, indeed, in possibly the majority of cases does require, the addition of one or more of the mechanical aids to secure the right results. Especially are these needed in the numerous establishments that have grown

LINCOLN, ILL., January 8, 1906.

THE JOHN DAVIS COMPANY, Chicago, Ill.

GENTLEMEN:—You can strongly and unhesitatingly recommend the "Eclipse" piston type reducing valve to florists. We have two purchased of you last year. We would not have them out for double their cost and find them as sensitive as a watch. We will be in Chicago soon to take up the vacuum system with you.

Yours truly,

W. H. GULLETT & SONS, FLORISTS.

from small beginnings without plan or other reason than the need for "another house" to care for increasing business.

Nowadays there are half a dozen ways of making hot water do things it would not do before the inventors got to work. And steam is assisted on its rounds by regulators, condensation traps and mechanically created vacuums. Even pipe joints at trifling cost may be made tight with the guarantee that they will not rust and become inseparable.

By all means go over your heating apparatus now. Study its defects and rectify them; if not by such simple changes as frequently accomplish the desired result, then by employing one or more of the devices which are needed to make the apparatus both efficient and economical. Money spent in this way frequently comes back quickly; growers using small coal found a rocking grate with closely spaced bars quickly paid for itself through the saving of fuel that had dropped through their old, wide bars.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Florists all over the city are satisfied with business. In fact, never before in years has the outlook for July been more favorable. With the thermometer registering from 90 to 97 degrees, it is remarkable how business is keeping up, and stock is in good condition. There were a number of large funerals last week, and most of the florists were kept busy in consequence.

The local sweet peas are of exceptional quality.

Various Notes.

Among the notable recent events was the wedding of Miss Grace N. Peck, daughter of S. N. Peck, and O. F. Halloway, a real estate dealer. The church was elaborately decorated by Mr. Peck.

Mrs. E. Suder received a large shipment of Richmond and Killarney roses this week from Chicago. They are a very good quality.

Notable among the events of the week was the Foutz-Percival wedding at the Washington Congregational church. The decorations were furnished by S. N. Peck.

Mr. Schoen furnished a number of the designs at the funeral of Attorney Hanley.

Mrs. E. Suder furnished most of the offerings at several out-of-town funerals. Several large pieces went to Weston, O., and a number were shipped to Delta, O.

P. R. Quinlan & Co. are preparing to grow orchids on an extensive scale, having received a large importation, filling one of the large houses. Among the varieties are some fine specimens of dendrobiums, cattleyas, cypripediums, lælias, etc. They are just finishing up their bedding plant business, which they report has been good.

Bannister Bros. have just completed a new fern house, 10x100, to be used for growing small ferns, of which they handle a large number.

H. D. Mann & Co. report good business for this season of the year. B.

Current Comment.

Hot and dry weather is what we are now experiencing, and all outdoor stock is suffering; also the supply of cut flowers, and unless rain soon falls the supply will be short. Business is fairly good for this time of year.

Mrs. A. Pahud died on the evening of July 6. She had been sick for the last three months. The family has the sympathy of many friends in the loss they have sustained.

Herman Junge is building a residence on the Cumberland property and will move there shortly. He says country life is conducive to sweetness of temper.

The City Florists' Club will give a picnic July 22, at Germania park. All are invited and a good time will be had. A ball game, races and amusements for the ladies and children will be provided.

Ben Pritchard, formerly with A. Wiegand & Sons, has taken a position at Council Bluffs. He will be missed by his many friends here, and all wish him every success. S.

The Market.

There is not much doing at present, aside from a number of funerals, which use a considerable quantity of flowers. Roses and carnations are scarce. Asters are slow in coming, owing to continued dry weather. June was the driest month in eleven years.

Various Notes.

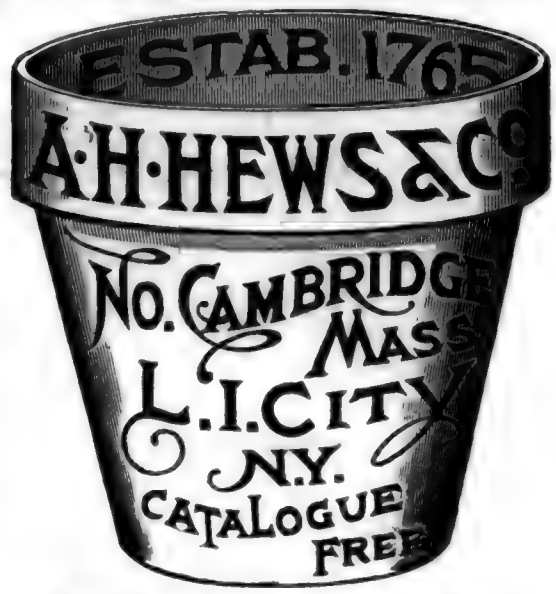
Julius Niednagel is in Europe, visiting his old home in Germany. His business is in capable hands, being left in care of his sons. They will rebuild all of the benches in the rose houses, lifting the dried-off roses and replanting as they build.

The Blackman Floral Co. has been cutting nice quantities of sweet peas and lilies.

Royston & Fenton report a fair business for the year just ending. This is their first year and they expect to do much better the coming season. They grow only roses for wholesale. They will have roses and carnations shipped in this season, to supply their increasing trade. Their roses are being rested, one house being started into new growth, which gives promise of doing well.

Ben Kramer sold his greenhouses and opened a store. He reports doing nicely. E. L. F.



OGDEN, UTAH.—B. Van der Schuit has placed an order with the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, for material for a carnation house 27x100.

OLEAN, N. Y.—D. R. Heron is having a fine house erected, 22x150, for carnations, also one adjoining, 8x150, for propagating. The construction is of steel and cement, latest approved appliances. The work is being done by the King Construction Co., Tonawanda, N. Y.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE LEANING CROSS.

The leaning cross is one of the series of funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia, now appearing in the REVIEW. Great care is paid, Mr. Fox assures me, to the angle at which the leaning cross is placed: just that angle that will make it appear to the best advantage when viewed by a person standing in front of it. The cross is always made up first and attached to the base when complete. Mr. Fox disapproves all lettering, but when it must be used he endeavors to make the letters as graceful and unobtrusive as possible. Pure white is the color idea, brought out by lilies and carnations, relieved by delicate green ferns, the one color used in this design.

CO-OPERATION OF RETAILERS.

The aim of every true florist should always be in the direction of a betterment of the conditions of the retail trade in general. While there is great necessity to exert every faculty to the improvement of the growing and production, we fear that the vital section of our business does not come in for its share of recognition, and he who is the mainstay, the prop, as it were, is not considerate enough of the why and wherefor, and fails to recognize the great necessity for the free exchange of ideas and the general coöperation of the retailers.

We hear of peony clubs, carnation and rose societies, etc., but the ear of the writer has been patiently waiting at the track of progress to catch the first sound of the approach of a society for the advancement of the retailer.

There are many clubs where good work is done, but we have failed to discover one as yet where the dominating influence is not the grower. Think it over, retailers. Perhaps you have reached the same conclusion as ourselves, after making a few visits to the "rooms" and listening to discussions on bulbs, roses, insecticides, etc. Though these subjects are instructive and interesting, still they fail to draw the attendance of the men who make possible the magnificent growing establishments of which we have so many.

Let us, retailers, coöperate, that the public may be the better educated to the possibilities of flowers when arranged by artists. Thereby increasing the demand, we will give the incentive to even further effort by the growers in the cultivation and perfection of the floral family.

SHOP RULES.

The following notice was recently posted in the shipping room of a Kansas City retail store:

To Delivery Boys.

Your position is an important one. Your services are just as valuable to us as you make them. Serve us cheerfully, earnestly and conscientiously, and watch your pay envelope. Your salary will be what you make yourself worth to the concern. Follow daily the rules below if you would serve our interest, your interest as well:

(1) Arrive promptly at 7 a. m. each morning unless otherwise instructed on the previous evening by the one in charge.

(2) At all times be cheerful and willing to serve those in authority to give orders.

(3) Maintain a neat, clean and tidy appearance, always.

(4) Particularly making boxes of all sizes, keeping shelves filled with boxes, emptying water from jars whenever needed, keeping flower jars straightened up and the floor and counters clean.

(5) When in the store keep busy. Ask some of the other employees what to do. Make yourself useful.

(6) See that every package in your charge is delivered in a neat, clean condition. Handle same carefully.

(7) Deliver all packages given to you by anyone with authority as promptly as possible. Endeavor to get there and back in the shortest possible time.

(8) Before leaving the house with a package ascertain the correct address and which way to go.

(9) When a delivery is to be made, never leave the house without the delivery book.

(10) When a delivery is made, never fail to get purchaser's signature on the delivery sheet.

(11) You are expected to return every sheet to the person directing you and you will be held responsible for the sheet until it is so returned. For every one that you lose you will be charged 75 cents.

The Leaning Cross.

(12) When taking a package to express office, up town or at depots, when the package is accepted by the person who signs for the package, always get the time delivered written on the sheet.

(13) In case person to whom package is directed is not home, endeavor to find some person who will be willing to sign for the package and deliver to the proper person at the earliest possible time.

(14) Each shall take his turn in staying in the evening after 6 o'clock, until such is released by the person in charge.

(15) Each shall take his turn at extra Sunday work and remain on duty until released by the person in charge; 50 cents will be allowed for overtime on Sunday.

(16) In every case sign your name to delivery sheet before turning it over to the person sending you out.

(17) Place order sheet No. 2 in special aluminum book, which book must be returned, as you are required to leave on deposit $1.50 to pay for same in case you should lose it.

(18) Should you not be able to find the street or address by order sheet, never return at once, but call us up by Home Phone, 1806 Main, or Bell Phone, 2991 Grand, and we will advise concerning same.

A BOSTON STORE.

This is the season at which the retail florist begins to agitate his thinking apparatus with the subject of changes to be made in his store during the summer, in preparation for the busy autumn. House-cleaning in many lines of business is in May, but with the retail florists July and August are the months chosen for brightening things up in anticipation of renewed activity in selling. For this reason retail florists in the early summer pay many visits to those similarly engaged in other cities, for the purpose of gathering fresh ideas on the subject of retail flower store arrangement and decoration.

Boston is well worth visiting by anyone who is interested in modern retail flower stores, for it has a number which are excellent examples of their kind. One of the newest is that of S. Hoffman, on Massachusetts avenue at the corner of Commonwealth. This is one of the best sections of the city and the store is a credit to the neighborhood. Mr. Hoffman is one of the young men who have carved their own way in the flower business. Starting with practically nothing, he has built up for himself a trade which justified the maintenance of a first-class establishment. He was one of the first in the matter of automobile delivery, and his showy car has been an excellent advertisement during the season which has passed.

It was less than five years ago that Hoffman opened a small store at 925 Boylston street. A little later he secured the store which had been occupied for six years by Norton Bros., but after two years there he found that he needed additional space and last season removed to his present location.

Several years ago Mr. Hoffman acquired greenhouses at Cambridge, where he turns out much good stock, having had exceptional results this season.

Referring to the tendency of some retailers to go slow in the matter of increasing their facilities, and of course their expenses, Mr. Hoffman says that immediately upon opening this new store his trade began to increase at what was a really surprising rate and that his venture has been fully justified. It has been a somewhat quiet season in Boston this year, but he is fully satisfied.

A TIMELY REMINDER.

The Confidence of Customers.

The majority of the retail growers of the country are men who depend on a local business. Their transient trade, in most instances, does not amount to much, and in order to be successful, whether you have competition in your town or locality or not, it is necessary to know the business, to act upon the square and to show a constant desire to satisfy the customers—to give them their full money's worth every time and be as much concerned in regard to the success with whatever plants they may buy as they are themselves. There are but few people who do not appreciate these attentions, and those who do not are not wanted as customers.

It is, or should be, a real pleasure to fill an order for a customer whose confidence you have, and to continuously strive to keep it assures success; and he who can make the greatest number of his customers believe that their orders receive the best attention, will be most successful. The days when it was just a matter of finding ways and means by which one could obtain a big price for something not worth it, are over.

Misrepresentation means the ruination of any business, and there is at least as much room for this in the florists' business as in any other. And much of this misrepresentation is unintentional, as, for instance, in the retail seed stores, where during the rush months a lot of inexperienced help has to be employed to wait on customers. When a lady is informed that a cobæa is a hardy climber, that hollyhocks will bloom in June from seed sown in May, or that a Paul Neyron rose will bloom all summer, all this is doing a great deal of harm to the business. I have often wondered whether it would not pay the big seed houses to maintain in their stores during the very busy season an information bureau. It would only take one good man, who in a few words could answer all the many questions which come up daily, and thereby avoid a lot of misunderstanding and bad feelings.

One Way of Winning Confidence.

The object of this article is to call attention to a fact often entirely overlooked by many, and that is, that a little attention should be paid at this time of the year to some of the stock which has been delivered to customers during the bedding season. During the rush of business in May and June, when it is simply impossible to attend to all the details of filling orders as one would like to, quite often it is likely that a window box, vase or wire hanging basket has to be filled and delivered the same day the order comes in. With a window box or vase, this is not so bad, for if done by the proper man everything should be in good shape when the goods leave the place, and remain so if taken care of at all. With moss-lined hanging baskets, however, it is quite different. After they have been filled a short time, the moss is bound to settle along the rim of the basket. The little water they usually get will run off and everything will dry up in short order.

Store of S. Hoffman, Boston.

We have made it a practice, therefore, for the last few years to send a good man, a wagon with some soil, moss, and a few plants such as are used for baskets, boxes or vases, to as many of our near-by customers as possible, and look over their places. We do this toward the latter part of July, and wherever moss, soil, or a fresh plant is needed, it is put in free of charge, and wherever no gardener is in charge—and in most places there is none—instructions are given in regard to the care of the plants, and this in most cases means more water. A man can go over many places in a day. Quite often there is nothing to replace or to be attended to, but even at such places the owner usually appreciates our intentions in looking after things. While a bed of geraniums or a veranda box should look well when put out, yet much depends on the care they get afterward in order to be showy during the few summer months. Often a suggestion offered, or advice given, will help to please a customer and this is the only kind that can please you. F. B.

THE DISCOUNT FOR ICE.

Opinion of a Cincinnati Shipper.

I have had an interview with the agent of one of the large express companies here, and he says that there is no ruling whereby the express agents could allow ice to be used in a shipment of flowers without paying for the full weight. But, at the same time, cases have come under my own observation where the agent at a certain shipping point in a neighboring state did, and does allow, the shipper to use not to exceed ten pounds of ice, and those ten pounds are deducted from the original weight.

In reading over the classification, it would look as though discrimination were being indulged in by the express companies, but this is possibly due to ignorance of what is required in the shipping of cut flowers, and it might be that if said companies were advised of our wants, they would gladly grant our request.

Personally I have never had a just grievance against any of the several companies with which I do business, that was not remedied when properly explained. What looks to me to be more of a grievance than this, is the fact that the express companies refuse to haul our empties from our houses to the depots unless we will pay them 40 cents per hundred for so doing, and at the same time they are getting paid for sending the boxes back to the grower. This seems to me to be a squeeze game, pure and simple, and I hope it will be fully discussed at our meeting at Niagara Falls. I am surely in sympathy with Mr. Reid and I wish him success. E. G. GILLETT.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

At the Holland House show of the Royal Horticultural Society, London, opened July 7, Alexander Dickson & Sons, Newtownards, Ireland, were fortunate in receiving four awards of merit for roses; namely, Molly Sharman Crawford (tea), Mrs. David Jardine (H. T.), Florence Edith Coulthwaite (H. T.), and George C. Waud (H. T.).

E. G. Hill, of the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., was among the visitors and brings his European trip to a close in a few days.

The Independence day celebrations at the London house of the American ambassador brought together a large gathering of Americans over here at present. Over 3,000 Americans passed up the great marble staircase during the afternoon. In the vestibule at the foot of the stairs two large flags were formed of flowers, the American standard and the Union Jack, each composed of red geraniums, blue cornflowers and white stocks.

SWEET PEA VINES DYING.

I enclose one of a number of sweet pea vines, which all at once seem to dry up and wither away. Over half of the peas I planted this spring behaved in this way. Can you tell me the reason for this? J. A. B.

With both peas and sweet peas the trouble you refer to is much in evidence this year. Earthing up the peas after growth has started causes this dying off in some cases. Excessive dryness at the root is responsible for a good deal of it. The fact that a good deal of pea seed was of poor quality, as a result of last year's drought, may have something to do with it. The chief trouble, however, seems to be of a bacterial nature, attacking the stems just below the surface of the soil. We are not aware that any remedy has been suggested for this latter disease beyond change of soil, careful selection of seed and as early planting as possible. As a rule, the later sowings seem this season to be generally and badly affected, and the early ones more immune. Possibly your soil is somewhat acid, in which case an application of lime in the fall will be beneficial. C. W.

A BOSTON STORE.

This is the season at which the retail florist begins to agitate his thinking apparatus with the subject of changes to be made in his store during the summer, in preparation for the busy autumn. House-cleaning in many lines of business is in May, but with the retail florists July and August are the months chosen for brightening things up in anticipation of renewed activity in selling. For this reason retail florists in the early summer pay many visits to those similarly engaged in other cities, for the purpose of gathering fresh ideas on the subject of retail flower store arrangement and decoration.

Boston is well worth visiting by any one who is interested in modern retail flower stores, for it has a number which are excellent examples of their kind. One of the newest is that of S. Hoffman, on Massachusetts avenue at the corner of Commonwealth. This is one of the best sections of the city and the store is a credit to the neighborhood. Mr. Hoffman is one of the young men who have carved their own way in the flower business. Starting with practically nothing, he has built up for himself a trade which justified the maintenance of a first-class establishment. He was one of the first in the matter of automobile delivery, and his showy car has been an excellent advertisement during the season which has passed.

It was less than five years ago that Hoffman opened a small store at 925 Boylston street. A little later he secured the store which had been occupied for six years by Norton Bros., but after two years there he found that he needed additional space and last season removed to his present location.

Several years ago Mr. Hoffman acquired greenhouses at Cambridge, where he turns out much good stock, having had exceptional results this season.

Referring to the tendency of some retailers to go slow in the matter of increasing their facilities, and of course their expenses, Mr. Hoffman says that immediately upon opening this new store his trade began to increase at what was a really surprising rate and that his venture has been fully justified. It has been a somewhat quiet season in Boston this year, but he is fully satisfied.

A TIMELY REMINDER.

The Confidence of Customers.

The majority of the retail growers of the country are men who depend on a local business. Their transient trade, in most instances, does not amount to much, and in order to be successful, whether you have competition in your town or locality or not, it is necessary to know the business, to act upon the square and to show a constant desire to satisfy the customers—to give them their full money's worth every time and be as much concerned in regard to the success with whatever plants they may buy as they are themselves. There are but few people who do not appreciate these attentions, and those who do not are not wanted as customers.

It is, or should be, a real pleasure to fill an order for a customer whose confidence you have, and to continuously strive to keep it assures success; and he who can make the greatest number of his customers believe that their orders receive the best attention, will be most successful. The days when it was just a matter of finding ways and means by which one could obtain a big price for something not worth it, are over.

Misrepresentation means the ruination of any business, and there is at least as much room for this in the florists' business as in any other. And much of this misrepresentation is unintentional, as, for instance, in the retail seed stores, where during the rush months a lot of inexperienced help has to be employed to wait on customers. When a lady is informed that a cobæa is a hardy climber, that hollyhocks will bloom in June from seed sown in May, or that a Paul Neyron rose will bloom all summer, all this is doing a great deal of harm to the business. I have often wondered whether it would not pay the big seed houses to maintain in their stores during the very busy season an information bureau. It would only take one good man, who in a few words could answer all the many questions which come up daily, and thereby avoid a lot of misunderstanding and bad feelings.

One Way of Winning Confidence.

The object of this article is to call attention to a fact often entirely overlooked by many, and that is, that a little attention should be paid at this time of the year to some of the stock which has been delivered to customers during the bedding season. During the rush of business in May and June, when it is simply impossible to attend to all the details of filling orders as one would like to, quite often it is likely that a window box, vase or wire hanging basket has to be filled and delivered the same day the order comes in. With a window box or vase, this is not so bad, for if done by the proper man everything should be in good shape when the goods leave the place, and remain so if taken care of at all. With moss-lined hanging baskets, however, it is quite different. After they have been filled a short time, the moss is bound to settle along the rim of the basket. The little water they usually get will run off and everything will dry up in short order.

We have made it a practice, therefore, for the last few years to send a good man, a wagon with some soil, moss, and a few plants such as are used for baskets, boxes or vases, to as many of our near-by customers as possible, and look over their places. We do this toward the latter part of July, and wherever moss, soil, or a fresh plant is needed, it is put in free of charge, and wherever no gardener is in charge—and in most places there is none—instructions are given in regard to the care of the plants, and this in most cases means more water. A man can go over many places in a day. Quite often there is nothing to replace or to be attended to, but even at such places the owner usually appreciates our intentions in looking after things. While a bed of geraniums or a veranda box should look well when put out, yet much depends on the care they get afterward in order to be showy during the few summer months. # THE PEONY IS POPULAR

PEONY LADY ALEXANDRA DUFF.

In July, 1906, I stated in the Review that Kelway & Son had already sent to persons in America five different peonies, all as Lady Alexandra Duff, and concluded with the deduction that it was my belief that there was no such peony.

Kelway & Son saw this article and replied in the Review that there was such a peony and, at the time of writing, "it can be seen flowering in our nurseries." Now the second chapter:

I instructed A. H. Fewkes, secretary of the American Peony Society, to offer to buy one, with this understanding: Kelway & Son must guarantee it. I was to pay the cost and was to take it and grow it. As soon as it was fit to be divided I was to give a root to Mr. Fewkes, as secretary of the society. Mr. Fewkes asked that they send a photo of the bloom and a full description of the flower. The whole thing was declined by Kelway & Son, with the excuse that there was none for sale.

In the meantime I had asked to be made good on the two lots of five each which were mistakes, they having said publicly in their article that they were willing so to do.

In April of 1907 one root came to me by parcel post, with a label reading: "Peony Lady Alexandra Duff. True." Although it was sent gratis, I had to pay the duty of nearly $4.

James McKissock, of West Newton, Mass., had a standing order with Kelway & Son, and also with Barr & Son, of London, to send him one Lady A. Duff as soon as any were for sale. He received both of these roots before the one came to me. Now for the result:

One sent to Mr. McKissock by Kelway & Son, bloomed this year, about as red as Felix Crousse. It bore a label reading similar to the one sent me.

The other one, which came through Barr & Son, bloomed very late, at the same time as Baroness Schroeder. It looked like Schroeder and was of the same perfume.

The one that came to me bloomed different from either of those which Mr. McKissock had, and which had cost him, with duty and charges, about $35 each.

This gives three more peonies, two guaranteed to Mr. McKissock and one sent to me for the purpose of convincing me that there was such a variety, "a lovely French white, the finest peony in existence."

What a mess! All three are different. All three are different from any of the five which I specified in my article two years ago.

PEONY P. DUCHARTRE.

C. Betscher, Canal Dover, O., says that P. Duchartre is one of the best of the late peonies. An illustration of it in this issue serves to show the form of the flower, but the photographer neglected to indicate the size, for Mr. Betscher says he often has seen blooms eight to ten inches in diameter, large as that may seem. The color is soft blush salmon.

SOME PEONY OBSERVATIONS.

Demand for Finest Sorts.

The season has been an excellent one with most growers. The demand is more and more for the finest sorts and the ordinary stuff will be a heavy glut in a few seasons. There are far too many sorts that possess little merit, and this refers just as much to some "novelties" as to the old-timers. Again, there are many old-timers that possess exceptional merit. I cannot understand why the older growers have overlooked their exceptional merits.

Causes of Failure.

Some growers have not had a good crop for three seasons. Quite a few causes contribute to this. The peony might be called in great degree a bi-annual perennial; that is, it will store up capability to produce a full crop the next season after it is disappointing. In old clumps this does not seem so much the case as with smaller ones, and in some sorts more than others. Many sorts can be cut almost devoid of foliage, and the next season they are fine; others under such treatment almost perish.

Many of our sorts were planted in 1902, 1903 and 1904. Some gave grand blooms the following spring, but in a few cases we have not had typical ones until this season. This leads me to believe that many sorts have been passed as of no merit because not developed to their full character.

Quite a few sorts are annually variable in their colorings and markings, thus adding to the confusion in nomenclature and descriptions. Far too many sorts have no particular merit, especially from the cut flower or landscapic viewpoint. Many are of poor color, lack freedom, etc. Some seemingly will come blind through quite a number of causes. I feel that many failures are brought about by one not understanding some details of culture. I have noticed plants of Whitleyi come into full bloom annually, while other plants apparently just as large or larger, in the best of soil, were a failure. On my own grounds I have noticed the same thing, but I cannot believe that frost has had much to do with it, as in each of the last three seasons we have had fine blooms on most of our sorts. One season we had a severe two-day freeze with drying winds, after the stems were eighteen inches or more high. While many stems were split open from the effects of the 10 degrees of frost, when June came we had a fine crop of bloom. Some other growers, with much less cold, had a complete failure. From various experiments and observations I am fully convinced that wrong methods of culture are the cause of failure generally attributed to late frosts.

Some sorts seemingly stand any sort of ill-treatment, while others are exceedingly sensitive to the least wrong feature. The Lady Bramwell type seemingly is more sensitive to wrong treatment than others, but from my observations in hybridizing various plants I think this type is the product of Whitleyi parentage, so that point may more than ever indorse my observations as to wrong treatment, etc.

Peony P. Duchartre.

Too Many Varieties.

Last season nearly every one of our 1,200 sorts gave us grand blooms on plants with twelve to thirty-six blooms, but out of the list we have selected about 200 that we consider worthy of increasing; the others we shall discard, all but two plants for test-plot purposes.

I cannot understand what some specialists mean in sending out sorts as new that possess so little merit as many do. Out of about 300 newer sorts I will retain not over twenty-five as being AA1 in every way.

We know of eight importations that gave eight different varieties under the same name. Out of about 100 sorts, new and old, we have received Andre Lauries under ten different names, Cherita under as many, but I may add that this is also the case in other items. This season we imported a lot of gladioli and got one sort under three names. This same condition also exists with a number of growers on this side. I paid $10 for a root of Milton Hill which proved to be Pottsi Alba; $5 per root for John Richardson which was Andre Lauries, etc., but the average grower or dealer invariably is pleased to make good any errors. One trouble with many growers is that they are not up on nomenclature except on a small list of sorts. We have little matter of an authoritative nature on peonies.

Sarah Bernhardt (Dessert, 1895) is La France (Polman-Mooy, about 1870). Mr. Dessert found this in Dessert & Mechin's collection. This is our earliest Chinese sort. Last season we cut it with the first officinalis sorts. Usually we cut it about the third day after the first officinalis blooms, but before we have the officinalis cleaned up La France is done. Reine des Francaise often brings this sort, but is a quite different sort under its correct name.

Cultural Suggestions.

I find many growers, striving for the limit of development, are overfeeding their peonies. A peony, while vigorous, is also sensitive. Peonies can not stand overfeeding. We now have no disease in our peonies. At first we had much rosette, which is a symptom of overfeeding. The wilt disease is the same thing in the last stages. Remove the cause and it disappears. When this disease appears the best remedy is to remove some of the overrich soil and replace with as much poor soil; also give each plant a good sprinkling of slaked lime, or remove the plant entirely. Remove any damaged root and lime the root; then plant into poor soil, but keep the plants well watered for a week. Thus they may be dug up at any time and not harm them. As a rule, when a plant shows the symptoms of wilt it is in a pretty bad shape, although not always hopeless.

We plant our peony ground to potatoes or corn previous to planting peonies. We first prepare the ground and sow to rye early in the fall, then manure it heavily in December with fresh manure. By plowing early and planting to corn it gets the plot in the best of shape, so that there is little loss of plants dying or getting diseased. Any plants that are bought and have any trace of disease may be given a good dusting of lime, which will help to eliminate it. After the plants have been growing for two or three years we give a good dressing of manure over the soil about December, or earlier, during the growing season. Where a large tract is to be planted for cutting, it will be good to sow oats about August 15; then put the manure on during January. This will put the ground in excellent condition in the spring.

Peony Mme. De Verneville.

PEONY MME. DE VERNEVILLE.

It always takes a new peony a long time to secure any sort of general appreciation and distribution, but Mme. De Verneville is one that William A. Peterson thinks has not progressed in popularity as rapidly as its age and merits would seem to indicate it should. It is one of the many good things that have originated with Crousse, in France, first sent out in 1885, and it is now in the lists of the large growers throughout the world, but is not widely planted for all that.

Mme. De Verneville is described as pure white with a faint blush tint in the center; very delicate, early, free and exceptionally fragrant. It has been grown at Peterson Nursery for fifteen years and not once in all that time has it failed to bloom satisfactorily. Florists who grow peonies for cut flowers need in white an early, a mid-season and a late sort, and those who want to be sure of a crop grow two varieties in each class, as, for instance, Couronne d'Or and Mme. Dupont would not both be needed except that one seems sure to bloom in the season when the other fails. According to the Peterson experience, Mme. De Verneville needs no understudy where planted as a main crop early white for cutting. Not only is it absolutely hardy, but it multiplies possibly more rapidly than any other peony, and therefore produces more stalks and more blooms, for the growths are never blind. Mr. Peterson says it is both as free a bloomer and as reliable as Golden Harvest, and that is high praise, in addition to which it has an advantage in color.

GERANIUMS FOR MEMORIAL DAY

Will you please give me the treatment of geraniums from the time of propagation to finish, in order to have them in for Decoration day? W. P.

In propagating, the best success is to be attained by not starting before the last of September. During hot weather the cuttings are liable to damp off, and I would not advise you to do any propagating for a couple of months yet. The cuttings can either be inserted singly in 2-inch pots of sandy loam or thickly in flats of clean, sharp sand. Place on a greenhouse bench. Soak well with water. Then apply no more until the sand or loam becomes quite dry. When rooted, water should only be given in sufficient quantities to prevent shriveling. No shade should be given geranium cuttings at any season of the year. In fall a house kept at 45 degrees at night is sufficiently warm. For spring propagating, pots are preferable to flats, and some bottom heat is an advantage.

In February the cuttings in the flats can be potted off and those in pots shifted to the 3-inch size, being again moved into 4-inch when ready. In this latter size most of the geraniums for Memorial day trade are sold. To describe fully how geraniums should be grown from start to finish would occupy considerable space, but as these will be frequently referred to in the Review, you will be able to glean any points not given now. C. W.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Housing the Plants.

If you are not already bringing in your carnations, it is time now to begin, if you want to begin cutting blooms early in October in good quantity. This cannot be done from plants that are housed late in August or early in September, which is the time many growers still house their carnations. True, a few varieties will throw up flower shoots at once and give blooms six weeks after being housed, but that does not make it pay to delay the planting. If the first buds are removed and the plants allowed to become well established, the blooms produced in October will be far superior and more in number, even on those varieties which come into bloom quickly. To us it seems that everything is in favor of the early housing, providing the houses are at your disposal.

Favorable Conditions.

I have on previous occasions mentioned the advantage of transplanting when the plants are in proper condition, etc.; that is, making very little growth. During the last month or more we have had little rain and the plants in the field have grown slowly, but in spite of that they are in fine condition to transplant and large enough, in most cases, for this early. Plants benched during last week are taking hold finely, and seem to be enjoying the moist soil and the more pleasant growing atmosphere of the greenhouse. They are really much better than plants which have had much rain and are consequently more soft and sappy.

If your plants are undersized on account of dry weather, do not make the mistake of leaving them out for the purpose of making larger plants before you bench them. Bear in mind that a small plant will recover more quickly and easily than a large one, and, what is more important, your plants will grow faster in the greenhouse than they will in the field, especially if the dry weather continues.

Soil Should Be Mellow.

So, if the soil is in proper condition to dig well, do not delay housing your plants for any of the above mentioned reasons. If, however, the soil comes up lumpy, so that the roots will be much broken, it will be better to wait for a good, soaking rain. You want all the roots you can get of the smaller, fibrous kinds, and these are the ones you lose in digging up lumpy soil. If the soil is mellow and all drops off on account of being dry, without tearing the roots, it will do no harm. In such case the plants should not be out of the ground long, as the plants suffer quickly if the roots are exposed to the air. We prefer to get the plants up with a ball of soil as large as your fist, but this cannot always be done, especially if the soil is of a sandy nature.

Plants Should Be Fresh.

In lifting plants in dry weather, there is one thing you should be careful of: Do not dig up plants which are wilted. No doubt you have noticed how poorly a bloom will keep if it is cut from a plant which is suffering for want of water. Plants which are suffering for water to the extent of flagging will be slow in taking hold of the new soil and will wilt badly for a long time, with a consequent loss of foliage and plants. You will find during a dry spell, even if the plants flag some during midday, that they will be fresh and crisp in the morning hours on account of the dew. While they are fresh is when you want to dig as many plants as you will need for the day's planting. Place them in deep trays, set them in a cool shed where no draughts will strike them, sprinkle and cover them with burlap until needed for planting. Plants handled in this manner will suffer very little, and in no case should they be allowed to stand around in the sun or draught. Always cover them as the trays are brought in, unless they are planted at once.

Shading Should Be Moderate.

Previous to last year we always shaded our houses quite heavily, either with lime or with a mud-wash. The idea was to exclude the sun and to reduce the temperature, thereby preventing the plants from wilting. When the plants are soft and sappy I believe this is a good idea, but with plants in the proper condition we find this to be a mistake. Last season our plants were in nice condition and we put on no extra shading above what had been put on earlier for the old plants. We found that our plants held up splendidly and took hold more quickly than when a dense shade was applied. More syringing and damping down was required to keep the atmosphere moist, on account of the more rapid evaporation.

When you come to think of it, it stands to reason that the plants will resume their natural growth more quickly when the conditions are kept as near normal as possible. Under the dense shade the plants soften quickly and, by the time root action is resumed, the plants have become so tender that the shade must be removed with great care, else they will suffer again. Root action, too, is more active under a strong light than it is under a heavy shade. Under this method there will be far less trouble experienced with stem-rot and spot diseases and they are less active under a strong light. While the atmosphere is kept just as humid, yet it is kept in that condition a shorter period of time, as the plants reëstablish themselves more quickly.

In this latitude we do like a little shade over the plants, however, to break the fierce rays of the hot sun during July and August. Nearly all plants seem to enjoy it during this time and, if it is not too dense and is taken off early in the fall, we can see no harmful results. A. F. J. Baur.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Railroad Rates.

No reduction in railroad rates to the convention have been obtainable from the west, except the usual summer excursion rates to Niagara Falls. From points east of Buffalo, including Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland and the city of Washington, a rate of a fare and three-fifths on the certificate plan has been secured.

Hotel.

Applications for hotel reservation should be addressed to Mr. Isaacs, manager Cataract House, Niagara Falls, N. Y. The entire hotel will be set aside for the florists if sufficient reservations are made.

Convention Program.

The preliminary program for the convention is as follows:

First day, Tuesday, August 18—Opening session, 2 p. m. Address of welcome and responsive address.

Annual address of the president. Reports of secretary, treasurer, state vice-presidents, committees and other officers.

Judges will examine and prepare their reports upon the novelties and new inventions in the trade exhibition immediately after the close of the opening session.

Annual meeting Florists' Hail Association, 4:30 p. m.

President's reception, 7:30 p. m.

Second day, Wednesday, August 19—Morning session, 9:30 a. m.

The members of the Canadian Horticultural Association will attend this session.

Welcome to our guests, by President Traendly.

Response by President Walsh.

Paper, "Fertilizers and Fertility," J. F. Cowell. Discussion.

The selection of the location of the next meeting (polls open one hour) and nomination of officers for next year will take place at this session.

Ladies' Auxiliary of the S. A. F., 10 a. m., annual meeting.

Afternoon, 2:30 p. m. The members of the S. A. F. are invited to attend the session of the Canadian Horticultural Association at the Clifton House, Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Evening session, 7:30 p. m. Illustrated lecture by J. Horace McFarland, "How Florists May Aid in the Crusade Against Ugliness."

The members of the Canadian Horticultural Association are invited to be present at this meeting, and the public will be admitted. Admission by ticket, to be obtained from Secretary Ewing, for members C. H. A.; Secretary Rudd, for members S. A. F. All tickets not applied for by 12 o'clock noon, Wednesday, will be distributed to the public, and members delaying their application beyond that time must take their chances of tickets being available.

Third day, Thursday, August 20—Morning session, 9:30 a. m. Paper, "Out-of-Door Roses," W. C. Barry. Discussion.

Election of officers. Polls will be open at 10:30 a. m., and remain open two hours.

The following amendments to the constitution and by-laws of the S. A. F. have been recommended by the executive board:

To amend Article 1, by striking out the words "regularly organized" in the seventh line; Article 2, Section 2, by inserting after word "one," in the sixth line, and before the word "state," the words "or more"; Article 3, (1) by inserting after the word "treasurer," in the fifth line, the word "and"; (2) by striking out the words "and the duly accredited delegates of," "coöperative societies as hereinafter provided," in the fifth, sixth and seventh lines; Article 4, Section 2, by striking out the section entire and inserting in place thereof the following: "Any eligible person may become a member of the society on the payment of $5, and such payment shall cover annual dues for the balance of the calendar year." "The annual dues shall be $3 per year, payable in advance on the first day of January. Any annual member in good standing may become a life member on payment of $25, and be exempt from all future assessments."

Afternoon session, 2 p. m., the national flower show: Address by E. G. Hill; reports by W. F. Kasting, J. C. Vaughan. General discussion.

Special meeting American Carnation Society, 4:30 p. m.

The evening session will be omitted in order to allow the members an opportunity for an evening view of the Falls and other scenery.

Fourth day, Friday, August 21—Morning session, 9:30 a. m. Address, "School Gardens," L. C. Corbett. Discussion.

Paper, "State Florists' Associations: Their Value and the Relation They Should Bear to the S. A. F.," Albert T. Hey. Discussion.

Paper, "Planting for Winter Effect in the Northern States," George E. McClure. Discussion.

The afternoon and evening will be in the hands of the Buffalo Florists' Club. The bowling contests will be held at Buffalo at this time.

National Flower Show Committee.

W. N. Rudd has been prevailed upon to accept the position of manager of the national flower show. The selection of a manager was left by the executive committee to the committee on local management, of which J. C. Vaughan is chairman, with the recommendation that the services of Mr. Rudd be obtained if possible. Mr. Vaughan has called a meeting of his committee for Saturday afternoon, July 25, when, with Manager Rudd, the committee will take up details of show arrangements.

Chairman W. F. Kasting, of the Committee of Fifty, will call a meeting of the committee at Niagara Falls during the convention of the S. A. F. The meeting will probably be held on Thursday, after the discussion of the national flower show, which is provided for in the convention program.

J. H. BURDETT, Sec'y.

THE CANADIANS' PROGRAM.

The eleventh annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association will be held at the Clifton hotel, Niagara Falls, Ont., on the same dates the S. A. F. is in session on the American side, at Niagara Falls, N. Y. The following is the Canadians' program:

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19 — OPENING SESSION 2:30 P. M.

The S. A. F. will pay the convention a fraternal visit during this session.

Address of welcome, by the mayor of Niagara Falls, Ont.

Address of welcome, by the superintendent of Queen Victoria Park.

Response by the President and welcome to the S. A. F., John Walsh, Montreal.

Response by the President of the S. A. F., F. H. Traendly, New York.

Reports of secretary, treasurer, standing committees and special committees.

Discussion of President's address. Question box.

SECOND SESSION.

The Canadian Horticultural Association will pay a fraternal visit to the convention of the S. A. F.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19, 7 P. M., CATARACT HOUSE, NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Illustrated lecture by J. Horace McFarland, "How Florists May Aid in the Crusade Against Ugliness."

THIRD SESSION—THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 10 A. M.

"Forcing Tomatoes," by Prof. W. S. Blair, Macdonald College, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Que.

"General Care of Private Greenhouses," by William Wilshire, head gardener to R. B. Angus, Esq., Montreal, Que.

"Nomenclature," by John Cavers, Oakville, Ont.

Choice of place for next meeting. Question box.

Thursday afternoon the delegates will be shown the beauties of Queen Victoria Park by Alex. Coburn, head gardener, and see the sights.

FOURTH SESSION—THURSDAY, AUGUST 20, 7 P. M.

Discussion between Retailer and Grower, led by G. Gerraghty, of Dunlop's, Toronto, replied to by W. J. Lawrence, Eglinton, Ont.

"Grapes Under Glass," by Thos. Pewtress, Pointe Claire, Que.

Unfinished business.

Election of officers.

Final committee reports.

Friday, August 21, the Buffalo Florists' Club has generously invited all C. H. A. members to participate in the entertainment given to the S. A. F., including trip to Buffalo, games, etc.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Pansies.

The last week in July and first week in August is a suitable time to make the main sowing of pansies. Of course, in the more southern states this can be advantageously delayed until the middle or end of August, but in the northern states we have always found a date as near August 1 as possible the best. Pansies every year prove one of the best selling flowering plants, millions being disposed of annually in the United States. About every householder who has a tiny plot of ground will want to plant a few pansies, and the country florist who has a good stock of plants has seldom much trouble in disposing of them.

In the case of pansies, as with all other important florists' flowers, it never pays to bother with cheap seed. Pay $2 to $3 more an ounce rather than buy any of the cheap mixtures offered. About every seedsman has some extra good strain to offer. These can be had either in mixtures or separate colors. As a rule, mixtures sell better than the individual colors, unless one shade is desired for bedding out effects. While it is difficult to select one special strain where so many are offered, we prefer the Giant Trimardeau to any other. A few extra fine varieties of this pansy are: Emperor William, dark blue; Show Queen, pure white; Queen of Blues, lavender; Golden Gem, clear yellow; King of Blacks, coal black, and Lord Beaconsfield, violet. Of other giant strains, Cassier's and Mme. Perret are both fine. Of the ordinary bedding pansies, which are purchasable at lower prices than the giants, a few additional sorts of merit are Psyche, velvet violet blue; Cardinal, bright red, and Emperor Frederick, purple edged with scarlet and yellow.

The tufted pansies, Viola cornuta, are splendid bedding subjects, especially for partially shaded beds. These flowers are much smaller than those of the other pansies, but are much more freely produced. Mauve Queen, Blue Perfection, White Perfection and Admiration are four good varieties. These are specially useful for covering the groundwork of bulb beds, making a fine showing when the bulbous display has waned.

In sowing pansies, unless large quantities are wanted, a good plan is to select a vacant coldframe. Pulverize the soil well, cover the seed lightly and soak well. Sow either broadcast or in drills a few inches apart. If sashes are used at all, let them be tilted top and bottom, and shaded until the seeds germinate, when they should be removed to prevent the plants becoming drawn and weakly. Rather than use sashes at all, we prefer to run lath shades over the seed beds during bright sunshine, not using these at all after the plants are well above ground. If sown in the open ground, we prefer to give the beds a soaking of water and then mulch the surface with short straw. Any waterings are given over this mulch, which is carefully removed as the seedlings germinate. As constant waterings will bake the surface, see that it is loosened as soon as the seeds germinate or many will damp off.

Gardenias.

This is the season of rapid growth with the gardenias. Those in benches will need occasional pinchings to keep them shapely. As the roots run more and more into the compost, water can be given more freely, but avoid any oversupply, which will quickly cause yellowing of the foliage. As frequent syringings are needed to keep mealy bug in check, this sometimes causes the surface soil to become slimy and it will be necessary to scratch the same over occasionally. Although, as a rule, no stakes are needed in bench culture, occasional plants may develop a sprawly habit, in which case one or two wire stakes may be used with advantage. At this season plants in pots do well in the open air and will make a good, sturdy growth there. Any showing yellowing of foliage will color up if treated to a little soot water or nitrate of soda.

Nephrolepis.

Plants of nephrolepis in benches are making great headway now. It is yet rather early to lift and pot them, unless you are planning to use the benches for carnations or other winter crops. Keep the surface scratched occasionally, and remove weeds. A light mulch of old, well-spent manure will help to keep the soil cool and moist and benefit the plants.

If you want well filled baskets for early winter sales, these should be made up at once. Do not use any other plants with the ferns. Mixtures of this kind never take so well as ferns by themselves.

Plants in pots and pans being grown to specimen size will now require large supplies of water. Use some liquid manure once a week to keep them vigorous.

None of these nephrolepis need a warm, close house; neither should they be heavily shaded, as this tends to make the fronds more brittle. N. Amerpohlii is liked very much and it will be in great demand the coming season. N. Todeaoides is a distinct and graceful newcomer. Whitmani and Elegantissima are both good, the former rarely reverting. Scottii seems to have lost popularity, but the old Bostoniensis is still in the front rank.

Asparagus Plumosus.

In the pressure of other work, such as emptying and refilling rose and carnation benches, asparagus plants are apt

STATE STUDIES FOR FLORISTS

FOREIGN EXPERIMENTAL WORK.

Results of Investigations at Urbana.

The study of European experiments in the forcing of etherized plants, as reported in the last issue of the Review, have been supplemented at Urbana by comparisons of the use of different anesthetics. Among other results these comparisons brought out the fact that tetrachloride of carbon can be substituted for ether or chloroform with the advantage that it is less expensive and is not inflammable. It is stated to give nearly as good results.

An Italian gardener has shown that a succession of flowers can be had on the same forced lilacs by grafting in bud-bearing branches from plants in the open as soon as the flowering of the plant itself is completed. The buds grafted in begin to develop in from ten to twelve days and open in about twenty days.

In experiments by Ledien simultaneous removal of leaves, as practiced to force autumn flowering, and etherization gave quite different results with different varieties. Plants etherized with the leaves on held their leaves and put out a second crop of flowers promptly. When the leaves were stripped off, the leaves were somewhat injured by the treatment, but "secondary buds under" were formed promptly and made flowers. But some varieties will not force in summer, whether the leaves are stripped off or not.

Plants may be defoliated and forced any time after the new buds are formed, which at Dresden is about the end of July.

It has been shown, further, that a close, moist, warm air may be substituted for etherization and that the plants force as quickly. Plants may be taken from the field any time after the buds are formed. Most varieties must be defoliated. Plants left in the drier air outdoors, but otherwise similarly treated, did not blossom.

The same investigator has further shown that lilacs which have once been etherized and forced can be successfully subjected to the same treatment the second time, provided they are heavily fertilized in the interim, but not transplanted.

Forcing After Cold Storage.

Cold storage as a means of forcing is being experimented with somewhat.

Villebenoist has made such experiments with lilacs. Plants put in an ice-house at a temperature of 1 to 2 degrees C. for eighteen days made flowers in another eighteen days. Ten out of eleven flower buds made good clusters. Check plants were eight days later in blossoming, the flowers were weak and small and only one bud out of ten ever opened at all. In fact, these, taken with other recent experiments in Germany, indicate that lilacs can be forced earlier by cold storage than by etherization.

Experiments With Valley.

It is found that cold storage is especially desirable for lilies of the valley in seasons when the fall has been wet and the pips have not ripened up well. In cold storage they get dried out and rested.

Various experiments in forcing lily of the valley pips are reported. Pips should be kept cold until they are planted. Start them at a low temperature and keep them shaded and very moist.

As soon as the first flowerlets begin to bend over, the pots should be transferred to a cooler place.

Considerable investigations have been made on the growing of pips, especially for forcing. Soil is found to have a very considerable effect on forcing quality. On light, rather poor, dry soil early flowering pips are produced which are easily forced. These are liable to make small flowerlets, however.

A heavy or humus and moist soil makes large pips, which do not always yield a satisfactory proportion of flowers. They force slowly, but the number and size of their flowerlets are generally very large.

Experiments have been made in forcing with electric light, especially for lilacs. In experiments by Harancourt an electric light of 18 candle-power run through the night produced flowers in fifteen days, whereas the check required twenty-four days. In this experiment no reflector was used. In a later experiment, with a reflector, still more marked results were obtained.

BOSTON.

The Market.

A little improvement is noticeable in the flower market this week, not due to any increased demand but rather to a slackening off in supplies. Outdoor flowers were a good deal damaged early in the week by torrential rains, asters suffering the most in this respect. Of these latter some good blooms are now coming in. Sweet peas have been helped by late rains and are a little better in quality. Gypsophila is quite abundant and sells fairly well. Quite a few outdoor gladioli are also now arriving. They come in useful for decorating store windows. Roses, outside of Kaiserin and Carnot, are of poor quality. For such Beauties as there are, demand is light. Carnations are small and gradually becoming less. It will not be long, however, before flowers from indoor grown stock will be coming in. Of lilies there is a sufficient supply. For valley there is little call, while trade in green stock is quiet.

Sweet Pea Show.

There were fears that the prolonged drought and heat wave would completely spoil this interesting annual show. It was therefore an agreeable surprise to find such a fine display at Horticultural hall July 18. Edwin Jenkins, of Lenox, was the largest exhibitor and captured most of the first prizes. For twelve vases, distinct varieties, his sorts were Henry Eckford, Hon. Mrs. E. Kenyon, Helen Pierce, Florence M. Spencer, Lady Grisel Hamilton, Boreatton, Lord Nelson, Bolton's Pink, White Spencer, Queen Alexandra, Flora Norton and a Spencer sport. In this class Joseph Thorpe was second and Thomas Howden third. For fifty sprays white, E. Jenkins led with White Spencer, Thomas Howden second, W. A. Riggs third. Fifty light pink, T. Howden first with Countess Spencer, E. Jenkins second, W. A. Riggs third. Fifty rose, T. Howden first with George Herbert, W. A. Riggs second, Col. F. Mason, E. L. Lewis gardener, third. Fifty blue or purple, E. Jenkins first with Duke of Westminster, T. Howden second, Mrs. Lester Leland, E. E. Wetterlow gardener, third. Fifty lavender, E. Jenkins first with Flora Norton, T. Howden second, Col. Fred Mason third. Fifty red or crimson, T. Howden first with Queen Alexandra, T. Howden second. Fifty orange or salmon, E. Jenkins first with Evelyn Byatt, T. Howden second. Fifty any other color, E. Jenkins first with Primrose Spencer, W. A. Riggs second, Col. F. Mason third.

Mrs. Lester Leland made an extensive display of named sweet peas, a smaller one coming from W. Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener, and E. L. Lewis. Blue Hill Nurseries once again captured both first and second prizes for thirty varieties of herbaceous plants; Bellevue Nurseries, A. E. Poetsch manager, third. Harvard Botanic Gardens had a good display of gloxinias and achimines. F. J. Rea had a collection of herbaceous plants; Mrs. E. M. Gill, a general display including the first dahlias of the season; W. Whitman, herbaceous plants; George Hollis, a collection of phloxes; Mrs. F. Ayer, George Page gardener, specimen Asparagus Sprengeri, and R. & J. Farquhar & Co., a large collection of herbaceous plants, also seedling amaryllis from the open and several new lilies from northern China, awarded honorable mention. Among the latter, one with ivory-white flowers of the size and form of L. auratum was fine. Another carried flowers the size of L. Brownii, but pale yellow in color.

Various Notes.

Remember the Gardeners' and Florists' Club picnic at Pine Banks park, Malden, July 29. Electric cars from the elevated railroad at Sullivan Square for Melrose pass the grounds at frequent intervals. The sports committee has secured a handsome lot of prizes and nothing but good weather is needed to make the affair a pronounced success. The sports will start at 10 a. m. sharp, with the two baseball games.

David Lumsden was in town last week. He is now assistant professor of horticulture at the New Hampshire Agricultural College.

Our prolonged drought was broken by a number of severe thunder storms July 19 and 20. The rains were of a torrential nature and badly battered outside flowers.

The next show at Horticultural hall will be August 8, when perennial phloxes and annuals will be specialties.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club will hold a field day at the New England Nurseries, Bedford, September 5. Arrangements to hold one at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, on or about August 12, are also in progress.

The Bellevue Nurseries, West Roxbury, is a promising new concern, making a specialty of herbaceous perennials. A. E. Poetsch, who is in charge, is a good, practical grower.

A number of carnation growers are now busy housing their plants. These, owing to the drought, average smaller than usual. W. N. CRAIG.

Charles Rose, who is 18 years old and was formerly an employee of Wax Bros., at 143 Tremont street, has been arrested on the charge of entering that firm's store at several different times and stealing small sums of money from the cash drawer. It is thought that he gained entrance to the store through the rear, with skeleton keys.

On the evening of July 17 a fire, supposed to be of incendiary origin, destroyed a part of the greenhouses at Adams and Wrentham streets, the property of Thomas Mead, of 615 Adams street. The blaze started in the rear of the building and became quite spectacular, attracting a big crowd. The firemen extinguished it in an hour. Nearly 1,000 panes of glass were shattered, the total damage being $500.

LASTING QUALITIES OF CYPRESS.

During the present excavations throughout the older portion of New Orleans, for the new sewer system, quite a number of unknown or forgotten burial grounds have been traversed and many coffins, constructed of cypress, in a perfectly sound condition, have been unearthed. Some of these, from the coins and buttons found, undoubtedly contained the remains of Spanish soldiers, but until July 8 no coffin had been found bearing a date or other means of identification. It so happens that nearly all coffins contained metal name plates and those found were so badly corroded that nothing could be deciphered. During excavations at St. Louis and Basin streets, a coffin was brought to light which contained the inscription "Hendric Miller, 1803," carved in the wood. This coffin, except for the discoloration of the wood, was as sound as the day it was made and the illustration herewith shows the end board of the coffin, a portion of which has been surfaced to show the grain. The illustration also shows the skull of Hendric Miller and the iron cross which undoubtedly surmounted the grave, the latter being so badly rusted that only a few letters and the date are decipherable.

The interest in this centers in the oft repeated story of the durability of cypress and the fact that the hand-forged nails of which the coffin was constructed were not rusted where they were driven into the wood. These nails are shown in the illustration and should set at rest the theory that has sometimes been advanced, that cypress contains an acid which will rust nails.

DES MOINES, IA.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Wilson, on Thirty-fifth and Woodland avenue, was the scene of a beautiful wedding July 20, when their daughter, Miss Clara Graham Wilson, became the bride of Earl Jay Weaver. The guests, who numbered thirty-five, were received by Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, parents of the bride, Miss Maude Weaver, a sister of the groom, and Miss Wilson and Mrs. Weaver. The parlors were beautifully decorated in the color scheme of green and white, flowers and ferns being used in profusion.

Preceding the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. James P. Burling, of the Greenwood Congregational church, the bride's brother, Alexander Wilson, sang "I Love You Truly," by Carrie Jacob Bond, and following the benediction, James Rogers' "Dear, When I Gaze" was sung by Mr. Wilson, accompanied on the piano by Miss Perle Fulmer. Refreshments were served in the dining-room, following hearty congratulations.

Miss Wilson recently came to Des Moines with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Wilson, and by her charming personality has won a large circle of friends, who regret her departure from the city. Mr. Weaver is a prominent young business man of Bloomington, Ill., and is manager of the Pantograph, the largest daily newspaper published in Bloomington. P. B. F.

DETROIT.

The Market.

There is considerably less funeral work being called for this July, as compared with last year. This can hardly be attributed to the financial condition of the country. Last year many of our prominent citizens passed away about this time of the year and some expensive work was called for.

When a good order does happen in, it is a pretty hard matter to scare up enough stock to fill it. A few roses and some good peas are about the only available flowers. The roses are small flowers, but the color is good, as also is the stem.

What few asters are on the market are only fair in quality.

Carnations are still holding on, although we could get along as well without them, excepting probably when it comes to making up designs.

Club Meeting.

Upon invitation of our kind-hearted secretary, the last regular meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held on the lawn at his greenhouses, out on Gratiot road. The president and other officers occupied chairs on the well lighted veranda, while some fifty members were seated about the lawn. A number of Japanese lanterns added to the pleasantness of the surroundings. This new innovation was such a success that it is hoped more will follow.

Before calling the boys to order, President Scribner called on Philip Breitmeyer for a few words. Mr. Breitmeyer, it will be understood, is in the race for mayor of this city. He had little to say, except that he expected the support of every member when the time for voting comes. This he was assured, even by the stanch democrats.

Several other members said a few words in favor of Mr. Breitmeyer, among them being Mr. Rackham, who would not say how he would vote, but did say that never can he remember seeing the work in the public parks of this city handled in such a business-like way as it has been under the supervision of Park Commissioner Breitmeyer.

The meeting was then called to order. Under miscellaneous business, it was moved that the secretary be instructed to change the club's by-laws to read that henceforth the secretary and treasurer be exempt from dues; also that what was now due from the present officers be remitted to them. The whole matter was placed on the table, to be settled at the meeting of July 5.

The members present all seemed to favor the above move. Both the secretary and treasurer, and especially the former, are compelled to devote considerable of their own time to the club's affairs and it was thought no more than right that they receive something in return.

The committee on badges submitted a design for a pin to be worn at outings, etc. This matter was left in the hands of the committee, who were instructed to order a stipulated number of pins of a design on which they decided. These pins are to be paid for by the individual members.

The matter of the annual outing was left in the hands of the entertainment committee. The name of Wm. B. Brown was added to this committee. This was a wise move, as Mr. Brown is what might be termed an expert at entertaining. The committee was allowed a goodly sum by the club, to be used for premiums, etc. July 27 is the date set for the outing.

Treasurer Taepke had been doing some tall hustling all day, thereby greatly reducing the sum of outstanding dues. His report showed that there is still a much larger amount of back dues than should be, and the delinquents are asked to please remit by next meeting.

Along about ten o'clock refreshments were served and a recess was called. The way the boys got away with those sandwiches was a caution.

J. F. Sullivan was mentioned as a candidate for secretary of the S. A. F. Mr. Sullivan has been the club secretary for over six years, and each and every member knows that a more capable man to handle the clerical end of our national society would be hard to find. Mr. Sullivan will have the most hearty support of his fellow club members in Detroit, who highly indorse him as a worthy candidate. Once before Mr. Sullivan thought of entering into the race for secretary, but, not wishing to run against a friend, he withdrew. This time his Detroit friends will not let him withdraw.

George Rackham was reinstated as a full-fledged member of the club, on his own wishes. At the time of going out of the business the club put Mr. Rackham on its list as an honorary member, but, as he puts it, he did not want to be only a bump on a log.

The election of officers takes place on the evening of the next meeting and a large turnout is hoped for.

Various Notes.

Alexander Common has purchased the stores at 412 and 414 Grand River avenue, this city. He will remove his florists' and fruit business to this new address as soon as he can dispose of the fixtures, etc., at the old place, 1407-9 Woodward avenue.

Harry Rackham has accepted a position with Mr. Valentine at Denver, Colo.

Harry Smith, formerly of Grosse Pointe, has purchased two and a quarter acres of land opposite the Evergreen cemetery entrance, out on Woodward avenue. Mr. Smith intends to erect several houses on this land at once, and do a general florists' business. The beautiful new Woodlawn cemetery is also within a few hundred feet of Mr. Smith's new place, as are the State Fair grounds. So far, Mr. Smith will have this field all to himself and, with proper management, his success is already assured.

The Kenneth Anderson Mfg. Co. has received a large order for pipe and fittings for Breitmeyer's Mount Clemens place. This order includes several hundred feet of 5-inch pipe, to be used as an overhead main in the new section, and also as a pipe for drawing water from the river just below their place.

Forest H. Hitchcock, of the Lohrman Seed Co., has been away on a few weeks' vacation.

Norman Sullivan is to act as captain of the bowling team that is going after the honors at the convention.

Philip Breitmeyer left early on the evening of the last meeting to catch the boat for Cleveland.

George Rackham has been engaged on Belle Isle the better part of the summer. He has charge of a large number of men doing outside work.

Wm. Dilger left for New York Wednesday, July 22, on a specially equipped car, to bring back a carload of live fish from the Bermudas for the aquarium at Belle Isle.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange baseball team has ventured on new ground. Sunday morning, July 19, they played one of the strong amateur teams of this city, winning by a score of 16 to 10. They are now after a game with our pennant winners. H. S.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

From reports of some of our leading florists, July business so far has been fairly good, but only as far as funeral work is concerned. Outside of this, we would say that it is dull. Stock of all kinds is of poor quality. This is specially true of roses and carnations. In roses, white and pink Cochet are coming in from Canfield's, of Springfield, and finding a good market, owing to the scarcity of other varieties. Quite a lot of Beauties are coming in, but none of the best quality. First grade carnations are scarce. Those that come in are small; white, and good Enchantress are in demand.

Asters are coming in better, and it is said that by next week they should be plentiful in all colors. Gladioli are in plenty; in fact, there are too many for the demand. All the light colors are selling well. The darker shades are used for window decorations. Tuberose stalks are beginning to come in, and those, too, will soon be in plenty. The bulk of them come from Kirkwood.

Club Picnic.

The club picnic took place July 15. This is one of the great events of the year among the florists in and around St. Louis. J. Pluvius tried to butt in and make things disagreeable, but finally behaved. The morning crowd was small, but every car after dinner came loaded down with florists, accompanied by their families. Normandy grove is a beautiful place and Messrs. Schoenle, Smith and Beyer did their work well.

The features of the day were the ball game and the bowling. The ball game drew a large crowd. Umpire Ostertag had a hard time of it. Though a retailer, he seemed to favor the wholesalers. Fred Ammann, the other umpire, gave way to A. J. Bentzen. Only five innings were played, the score at the end being 9 to 8 in favor of the wholesale team. Pitchers Huetemann and Schriefer did fine work. Each side got five hits and each pitcher struck out ten men. Misplays on both sides caused the big scores. Catchers Alves and Weber also did great work.

The bowling was in charge of Carl Beyer. The alleys and balls were in bad condition, causing poor scores to be made. Twenty-five ladies took part in the first event. Mrs. Theo. Miller was first, with 128; Mrs. Carl Beyer second, with 98; Mrs. E. W. Guy third, with 90. Miss McWenne won the booby prize, a bottle of catsup. She failed to knock down a pin in a full game.

Twenty men bowled. First prize was won by Charles Kuehn, his score being 195; Theo. Miller second, with 189; Carl Beyer third, with 185. E. W. Guy won the year's subscription to the Review for the grower making the highest score, 180. The booby prize went to Frank Vennemann. In the other games the prizes were as follows:

One hundred yard dash—Aug. Hartman first.
One hundred yard dash for boys—Eddie O'Rourke first.
Egg and spoon race—Miss H. Riessen first.
Hop, step and jump—Fred Alves first.
Fifty yard dash for girls—Miss Martha Winter first.
Fifty yard dash for boys—C. Bentzen first.
Two hundred and twenty yard run—Aug. Hartman first.
Boys' and girls' potato race—Ed Fitzgerald and Miss Winter first.
The tug of war was not pulled off and the box of cigars donated by H. Balsley will be smoked by the members at the next club meeting.
The prize for waltzing was won by Miss Minnie Beyers; her partner was Eddie Gerlach.

Harry Ostertag assisted the trustees in starting all the events. The rest of the evening the younger folks indulged in dancing, bowling and other amusements, which were in plenty all over the grounds. It was near midnight when all went home, saying that this year's outing was the best ever given by the club. Thus the fifteenth annual picnic passed into history.

Henry Emunds, E. W. Guy and Adolph Fehr, with their families, represented Belleville. Mrs. Guy took the cake in bowling.

We missed Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber and their daughter, who are traveling in the west; but Fred C., Jr., and Herman were on hand to represent the family.

Fred Ammann, as usual, came from Edwardsville to be with his many friends in the trade.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Weber and his brother, Frank, known as "the handsome old bachelor," came all the way from Gardenville and met many old friends.

Charles Schoenle, Carl Beyer and Will Smith were here, there and everywhere the whole day long. They deserve a great deal of credit for the good time we all had.

Eddie Gerlach was the happiest man on the grounds after winning the prize waltz with Miss Beyers.

Henry Berning, wife and sister, Miss Berning, had an enjoyable time in the bowling alleys.

Billy Winter, W. J. Pilcher, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Ude, Sr., and August Hartman represented Kirkwood.

The S. A. F. state vice-president, John Steidle, and wife enjoyed the day very much. Mr. Steidle was talking convention and S. A. F. membership to all interested.

Henry Ostertag, with his daughter and a large force of employees, occupied one large table and looked like a happy family at dinner.

C. C. Sanders, chairman of the executive committee of the St. Louis Horticultural Society, brought out his whole family and said they enjoyed the day very much.

Charlie Kuehn, Jr., found a pocketbook containing money on the grounds. The party losing it can have it by calling at Kuehn's wholesale store.

Francis Fillmore, aged 90, was on hand as usual, looking as spry as a two-year-old. This is one of the events that he looks forward to with great pleasure.

Charlie Kuehn was as happy as a boy with his first pair of boots when he came in for first prize in bowling. It was a box of cigars and he does not smoke, but his friends did so.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Miller and their daughter spent an enjoyable afternoon. Mrs. Miller took first prize among the lady bowlers, and Mr. Miller came in second among the men.

Edwin Denker came all the way from St. Charles to spend a day of enjoyment and was glad he came.

Charles Fulgraf and G. H. Pring represented Shaw's garden. We missed Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Irish, Mr. and Mrs. William Trelease and others from the garden.

Various Notes.

George Angermueller and wife left July 18 for a vacation trip to the northern lakes, to be gone two weeks.

George Schriefer, of Kuehn's, is off for ten days' vacation. He will put in his time practicing his new curve ball at one of the big league parks.

Mr. and Mrs. John Connon have returned from their eastern trip. They took in all the big eastern cities, also a trip through Canada. While in the latter place he met a John Connon, a florist, who is also a Scotchman. Mr. Connon reports that he is remodeling his old houses and will at once start building a new one, 25x150, for roses.

Albert Senger, who runs a store at 4271 Cote Brilliante avenue, reports that he has leased the greenhouses of Edward Hicks, on Garfield avenue, just back of his place. Mr. Hicks retired from business. His son, Ned, is now employed in the city hall.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers reports that the day of the picnic she had one of her busy days with funeral work, having the family order for the Niedering house funeral. For that reason she failed to attend.

Fred Pape reports that he has closed his branch store at Grand and Park avenues, as the business was not up to his expectations.

We had with us, last week, E. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co. Mr. Eschner reports that he has been appointed official boomer by the Cincinnati florists for the convention of 1909, and he is doing good work. Mr. Hasting, representing A. H. Hews & Co., of Cambridge, Mass., is in the city. Mr. Stern, of Philadelphia, was a caller last week. J. J. B.

PEORIA, ILL.

A. M. Augspurger, president of the firm of D. U. Augspurger & Sons, is contemplating an extended trip to the European markets.

Frank Jerabek is adding two new houses, 37x50 feet.

Henry Jacobs has resigned his position with J. C. Murray. He is now employed by D. U. Augspurger & Sons.

J. Nelson, successor to Nelson & Klopfer, disposed of 2,000 4-inch and 5-inch Boston ferns, and Whitmani and Amerpohlii in smaller sizes, to a local wholesale plant firm.

A. M. Augspurger will be a business caller in Chicago this week.

Mr. Steinmetz, representing the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, called on the local florists this week. H. C. R.

Richard Steckler.

NEW ORLEANS.

Club Meeting.

For the twenty-third time since its organization the New Orleans Horticultural Society held the election of its officers for the current year at the annual meeting in Kolb's hall, July 16.

Richard P. Steckler was elected president; Henry Shuermann, vice president; C. R. Panter, secretary; John Eblen, treasurer.

R. P. Steckler is the junior member of the J. Steckler Seed Co., Ltd. He was born in Iberia thirty-six years ago, and has been in the seed business since a boy, working under the direction of his uncle, the late Richard Frossher, the veteran seedsman of the south, and the founder of the business carried on by this company, established in 1865. Under the management of the two brothers Steckler, the firm has been largely improved and is counted now among the largest of its kind in the south. They issue a large catalogue in five different languages, and their plant and live stock department is also important. Richard Steckler is secretary-treasurer of the company. He is also a member of the American Seed Trade Association, of the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. He was married about ten years ago to Miss Marie Louise Broussard. Three boys were born of this union. The members of the New Orleans Horticultural Society could hardly have made a better choice for their president, and under his management the society will prosper.

Henry Shuermann, elected vice-president, has been in the employ of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. for several years and previously worked for other florists in the city. He is well qualified for the position.

There is nothing new to say about the two old reliables, C. R. Panter, secretary, and John Eblen, treasurer.

A letter was read from Mr. Wilson, of Poulan, Ga., on "The Advantages of Growing Flowers in the South for Consumption in the North."

Ed Baker, who had left the society for some time, made a new application for active membership and was elected.

R. Eichling was too busy with his bride to attend the meeting, but he sent a letter of thanks for the present he received from the members on the occasion of his wedding.

Henry Cook exhibited some well grown asters.

Following the meeting, a dinner was highly enjoyed.

Various Notes.

R. Eichling, at U. J. Virgin's, has a fine bed of Silver Thimble chrysanthemums. They come handy around the first part of November, to make fine, delicate sprays of flowers, and then are always scarce and in demand.

At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Home Manufacturers' Exhibition, which is to be held in New Orleans September 1 to 13, it was decided to permit florists and flower design manufacturers to take part in the exhibition, and they will be accordingly notified. A small fee will be paid for space. M. M. L.

GREENWICH, CONN.—Alexander Mead & Son have bought the greenhouses of John Cooke, at the corner of Lafayette place and Lake avenue, and the buildings will be torn down, to make room for dwelling houses. Mead & Son will use the material in extending and improving their range of houses.

The Weekly Florists' Review

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

If you haven't your roses planted, don't lose a minute in getting at it.

Cement is cheap and it pays to lay in a few barrels before renewed building activity sends the price up again.

The lumber interests have undertaken a "build now" campaign in the important business centers of the country.

The correspondent E. A. R., who told how he grows callas in solid beds in last week's Review, says he plants four rows in a 4-foot bench, instead of "four inches across," as stated last week.

EXHIBITORS AT NIAGARA.

Since my last report on the trade exhibition, the following have sent in contracts for the amount of space set opposite:

|---|---|
| Garford Motor Car Co. | 150 |
| Robert Craig Co. | 250 |
| Lord & Burnham Co. | 252 |
| J. Horace McFarland | 32 |
| D. B. Long | 42 |
| Florists' Review | 100 |
| J. A. Peterson | 75 |
| Wilson & Hoyt | 48 |
| L. Ball | 75 |
| Julius Roehrs | 250 |
| The Advance Co. | 48 |
| A. L. Randall Co. | 60 |
| I. L. Pillsbury | 19 |
| The Larkin Co. | 27 |
| Benjamin Hammond | 100 |
| C. S. Yeagle | 350 |

This with the space already reported makes a total of 7,563 square feet sold to date. A goodly amount of this space is still available, but especially those who wish large blocks should hurry or they may get left on good locations.

Chas. H. Keitsch, Supt.

STATE OF BUSINESS.

Probably the best index to the condition of general trade is the volume of bank clearings, which have been running below those of the year before ever since last October. As New York is the financial center of the country, it is natural that the heaviest falling off should be in that city, but the falling off there is not wholly due to a decrease in trade activity in the city but to the general decline throughout the country. How nearly general trade activity now approaches normal is shown by the fact that last week's bank clearings, compared with the same week of 1907, showed a decrease of 18.5 per cent in New York but only 5.3 per cent for all the country outside the metropolis. At Chicago the decrease was only 3.5 per cent, at Boston 8.6 per cent and at Kansas City 5.1 increase.

BIG CONVENTION ASSURED.

There is splendid prospect for the success of the S. A. F. convention this year and it will be all the more noteworthy because held at a place where there is no local florists' club—Niagara Falls. Of course the Buffalo Florists' Club is doing good work in the matter of arranging details, and on Friday, August 21, will entertain both the S. A. F. and the Canadian Horticultural Association at Buffalo, but with the exception of meeting at Asheville, which was an out-of-the-way place, it will be the first time the society has gathered in numbers at a spot where there are no large number of local florists to offer daily entertainment. At Niagara nature does the entertaining, aided by the superb hotel accommodations and the facilities for sightseeing which have been provided for the hundreds of thousands of visitors who come there each year. The business men's organization has been specially anxious for some years to get the S. A. F. to visit Niagara Falls and is making arrangements to insure each florist seeing all the sights.

The prospects are for probably the largest gathering yet held by the trade and this is reflected in the early applications for space in the trade's exhibition—the exhibitors expect to do a splendid business, and there is every reason why they should. Incidentally, too, their fees will be the principal source of income to meet the expenses of the meeting. While the receipts from this source are a goodly sum, the charge against individual exhibitors is small, the rates per square foot of space occupied being fixed by the society, as follows:

| Minimum charge | $5.00 |
| Fifty feet or less, per foot | .26 |
| Excess over 50 feet to 100 feet | .19 |
| Excess over 100 feet | .18 |

Charles H. Keitsch, 810 Main street, Buffalo, who was manager of the trade's exhibition at the Buffalo convention, is in charge again this year and says that the space already sold is much greater than usual at so early a date and indicates the largest trade's exhibition yet held.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Business, of course, is not what it was in June, but nevertheless it continues to show an increase over the corresponding period of last year. This is especially gratifying in that the summer of 1907 was less quiet than any in the previous history of this market, and it looks as though the increase in summer business is more than offsetting any decrease in trade due to the falling off which other lines are experiencing.

The supply of Beauties is larger than a week ago and they are selling well. But the best rose on the market is Killarney, and it is the one principally sought. It so far outclasses Maid and other pink varieties that they are slow sale so long as Killarney can be had. Kaiserin has the call on Bride. The supply is not large at present and increased crops, which are promised, will be welcome. There are good supplies

..Fancy Asters..

You have known our house as headquarters for Fancy Asters, and we can assure you that we shall be (in fact, are) equally well supplied this season. We already have long stemmed, strictly fancy Asters in several colors—can take care of any order. Try us.

KAISERINS

Our famous Summer crop of fancy Kaiserin is now on. The best white roses in the market.

BEAUTIES

A good cut of Summer Beauties—the satisfactory kind that it pays you to handle.

LILIES

Plenty of Easter Lilies for all—also a large crop of fine Auratum.

GLADIOLI

Fancy Gladioli in all colors, but our Augusta (white) are specially fine.

VALLEY

You need Valley every day in the year—and we can supply the best.

GREEN GOODS

We have made a specialty of Green Goods for years. Best Ferns, $1.00 per 1000.

ALL OTHER STOCK IN SEASON

We can at any moment supply everything which is to be had in Chicago. It is our aim to make our place at all times your most satisfactory source of supply. Write, telegraph or telephone.

During July and August we close at 5 p. m.

of Richmond, but no special call for red.

The aster is taking the place of the carnation and growers of the latter flower under glass are making haste to replant their houses. There are, however, now some good carnations from the field to compete with the asters. The latter already are showing considerable increase in the length of stem and before the week is out there will be large supplies of fine flowers. The good stock thus far received has sold excellently. The carnations still received from indoors continue better than average summer flowers, and a great many shipping orders are received for them.

The new crop of Easter lilies is coming on, but has not yet been heavy enough to affect the sale for auratum, which is moving well. Indeed, the sale for all summer flowers is excellent and the houses which make a specialty of outdoor stock are reporting an especially good week. Sweet peas are not as numerous as they were, and therefore are averaging a little better prices. Gladioli are much more plentiful, but continue to sell well. Peonies are still to be had, but the current week will probably finish them off.

A large part of the business of the retailers is funeral work and this is reflected in the market by the calls for white and light flowers and for sphagnum moss, galax and ferns. There has been a lull in the demand for Sprengeri, but plumosus bunches sell well. Strings of green are not in special request at this season.

Last of the Peonies.

July 20 E. C. Amling had in his cool room the last of the season's peony crop of Kennicott & Sons, and it was reported that Klehm's Nursery was through. Kennicott Bros. Co. still had in storage some 700 or 800 dozen, mostly Late Rose.

This has been a peculiar season for peonies, and, for reasons which are in dispute, the stock has not kept in storage as well as in other years. However, some varieties have held up excellently, and as the season advanced prices have been firm. Early in the season the flowers did not return as much as in other years, but later they have done better, and the average makes an exceptionally satisfactory season for the firms who know how to handle peonies for cold storage.

Club Picnic.

The annual picnic of the Florists' Club, at Manilla park, Morton Grove, July 19, was a thoroughly successful event, although the attendance was not as great as had been hoped for. Probably 250 persons were present.

The sporting events were under the direction of John Zech, and the contests resulted as follows:

Quoits—D. Erickson first, E. F. Winterson second.
Forty yard dash for girls under 10 years—Annie L. Lockman first, Mary Meilander second.
Forty yard dash for boys under 10 years—Philip Malger first, Oren Enders second.
Forty yard dash for girls under 16 years—Carrie Zech first, A. Quirm second.
Fifty yard dash for boys under 16 years—A. Weissgerber first, Fred Schnapp second.
Fifty yard dash for young ladies—Anna Dupee first, Margaret Dupee second.
Fifty yard dash for married ladies—Mrs. B. Belcher first, Mrs. Charles Balluff second.
One hundred yard dash—Ollie Zech first, A. Weissgerber second.
Fifty yard dash for fat men—W. F. Schofield first, George Asmus second.
Hop, step and jump—John Zech first, Charles Balluff second.
Forty yard sack race—F. Beu first, Mr. Ebeling second.
One hundred yard dash for greenhouse employees—A. Weissgerber first, G. Willinsky second.
Running broad jump—George Kuss first, A. Reinberger second.
Three-legged race—Oneil and Veyhl first, Ebeling and Bickrode second.
There was a special event race for Bassett & Washburn employees, of whom twenty-eight were present, the firm having supplied the tickets.
A ball game between teams captained by Ollie Zech and Otto Goerisch was called on account of darkness, with the team of the former well in the lead.

The management of the picnic was probably the best of any in the club's history, and every one spent a pleasant afternoon, while at the same time there was a profit for the club's treasury.

The picnic grounds are only a hundred yards from Plant A of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., and during the afternoon most of the growers took the opportunity of going through that establishment. Not many had seen the new packing-shed, office and refrigerating plant. Nothing about the place seems to so greatly impress the visitors as this recent addition to the equipment. What struck the growers most forcibly was the extremely light shade on the carnation houses; the young stock looked fine with just a sprinkle of shade on the side of the house that gets the direct sun, and one house had no shade at all. In one of the new houses built this season the Everlasting tile bench, sold by the Camp Conduit Co., Cleveland, had just been set up the day before. August Poehlmann said that after the men found how to set the supports level the bench went together quickly and he was well pleased with it. John Poehlmann says that an order has been placed for 600 barrels of cement, which during the winter will be manufactured into movable concrete benches for use in that part of the range which will have to be supplied with new benches next year.

Various Notes.

Weiland & Risch have completed their season's addition of six houses and have them all planted to roses.

N. J. Wietor and John Sinner returned July 18 from their fortnight's trip into the Michigan woods. They were forty miles from a railroad and had a splendid time, although the fishing was not up to some other years that they have been north.

Peter Reinberg has started to put up three new houses for carnations at his new plant "on the farm."

With three weeks of July gone, the A. L. Randall Co. says business has been steadily better than a year ago, not only in supplies, but in cut flowers.

C. W. McKellar says that Cattleya Harrisoniæ sells quite well and brings $3 per dozen because the large varieties are scarce. Ernest Farley has returned from a visit at Indianapolis, and Marie Ollmert, of Mr. McKellar's office, is now vacationing.

a day at a time, fishing and at the ball park.

Word has reached this market that Gunnar Teilmann, the well-known grower of chrysanthemums who ships here from Marion, Ind., has been offered the civil service job of head gardener at the soldiers' home in Tennessee, and that he will sell or lease his place in Marion.

Webster Randall spent a few days last week on A. L. Randall's fruit farm in Michigan and incidentally tried to cut a finger off. These city people are not wise to the dangers of country life.

Bassett & Washburn are giving a little blow-out every afternoon at the city store—the auratums are not opening fast enough in the field.

Kennicott Bros. Co. makes a specialty of outdoor flowers and reports a record July business.

Walter Retzer, formerly of this city, is up from St. Louis to visit a brother in Rogers Park.

Louis Wittbold has invented a punch for making drainage holes in concrete benches while the concrete is still soft, doing away with the corks formerly used.

H. F. Port, of Maywood, has returned from Las Vegas, N. M., where he has been for some time for his health.

Fred Nelson has returned from a vacation of three weeks, spent at his old home at Galesburg.

The Wittbold retail staff went to Edgebrook one day recently for a game of ball with the greenhouse force there. They say the score was 11 to 3 in favor of the storemen, but the way they look at each other when telling it leads to at least a suspicion it was the other way about.

Nick Pontrich, a Louisville, Ky., florist, has been visiting his son, Mike Pontrich, who is with the Wittbolds.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The feature of the cut flower market, as I write, is the unusual scarcity of flowers, both choice and ordinary. There is not an especially heavy demand, but the fellow with the order has to do some lively hustling if he wants to fill it in good shape. This scarcity is due to this being between seasons with the indoor flowers, and the devastation wrought in the outdoor stock by the extraordinary drought, a drought so long continued that sweet peas locally grown have succumbed entirely, and even such hardy stock as feverfew and achillea is affected.

The supply of asters, probably the most popular summer flower, appears to be short this season. It seems as though most growers had not planted as many as in years gone by. At any rate, they have not increased in the same proportion as the demand. The stock is scarce, very scarce on some days, and while not extraordinarily good, anything at all presentable is in lively demand. Valley is also eagerly sought. Now that the choicer flowers are mostly out of the way, valley and Cattleya Gaskelliana have the field pretty much to themselves.

Carnations are scarcer, a good judge tells me, than he has ever seen them in the end of July. The extraordinary heat of May and June, followed by the present none too cool month, has made it impossible to keep carnations in good condition. Gladioli are becoming more plentiful.

Kaiserin is in good supply. New crop Beauties, locally grown, of good color and substance, can be had with excellent stems. The reduction in the supply of outdoor flowers has caused better average prices than for some time past, though of course this stock sells cheaply.

The Express Charge on Ice.

The Review two weeks ago, on its contents page, printed an interview with Edward Reid regarding the unfairness of the express companies in charging full rates for cut flowers packed with ice on the ground that cut flowers are a luxury, when so-called "necessary commodities," such as celery and celery plants, mushroom spawn, bulbs, etc., may be packed in ice and have a discount of twenty-five per cent in weight deducted for ice. Mr. Reid wrote to the Interstate Commerce Commission asking that cut flowers be placed on this classified list, which receives the discount. The Interstate Commerce Commission has replied acknowledging Mr. Reid's letter, and stating that the matter would be taken up with the Adams Express Co.

Samuel S. Pennock, when asked what he thought regarding the admission of cut flowers to this classified list, said he believed that they were entitled to admission, and that Mr. Reid's effort to obtain the discount had his hearty support.

Arthur A. Niessen said he believed that customers were entitled to a discount covering the weight of ice, because his company had frequently received complaints from their customers that a box that was billed at, for instance, sixty-five pounds, on being weighed on its arrival was found to weigh only forty or fifty pounds, the decrease being due to the melting of the ice. Mr. Niessen thought the placing of cut flowers on the classified list was only just.

A Chat With Wm. Swayne.

William Swayne is generally recognized as the leading florist of Kennett, and probably of Chester county, by right of his long and successful business career. Mr. Swayne worked, when a lad, on a farm, and later took up the growing of flowers and plants under glass. Like nearly all farmers who have gone into our business, he succeeded from the first, but, unlike many of the farmers, his success continues. Mr. Swayne owes his success not only to his ability as a grower, but also to his painstaking care and to his excellent business qualities.

A few days ago Phil induced Mr. Swayne to talk about business questions of interest. Mr. Swayne said that he thought that Chester county florists took fully as much in now, in dollars and cents, from their greenhouses as they did fifteen or twenty years ago, but that this was due largely to their success with side crops, such as mushrooms and tomatoes. When asked why the Chester county carnation growers were not holding up their end as of yore, Mr. Swayne said that he thought it was partly due to their unwillingness to experiment with the fancy varieties. As an instance of this, he said that he believed more fancy stock goes to England than is used in Chester county.

When asked concerning the future of mushroom growing, Mr. Swayne said that he believed that in time this industry would fall into the hands of specialists, but that for the present the mushrooms are a profitable side issue for carnationists. When asked about the profit in tomatoes, Mr. Swayne laughed and said that his old friend, the late William Scott, used to poke no end of fun at him for growing tomatoes with his flowers. "But, you see," Mr. Swayne added, conclusively, "it paid me."

In discussing the question of the indoor culture of carnations, so ably championed by Edmund A. Harvey before the Philadelphia Florists' Club last February, Mr. Swayne said that he believed that this was the proper method of growing carnations, but that to grow them in this way one must have houses adapted for the purpose. "My own houses," he added, "would not do for summer use."

Plant Wrinkles.

There seems to be a growing demand for specimen crotons, the stock of this popular plant having doubled at the establishment of the Robt. Craig Co. since last season. Just now the firm is sending out shapely little plants, to be grown into specimens of any number of recognized varieties, and a good many seedlings not yet known in commerce. Mr. Craig thought that well colored small plants of crotons were also gaining in popular favor for combinations in baskets; used in this way, a rich, deep color is essential.

The variety of gardenias forced for the London market—its name is in dispute—is becoming more and more popular on this side of the Atlantic. Mr. Craig is just now distributing good sized bushy plants for forcing. Discussing the question of the future of gardenias, Mr. Craig thought there was no doubt that high prices would continue to prevail during the winter months for these fashionable flowers. He believes it is not merely a fad, but that the gardenia has acquired a hold on the flower lovers. He instanced the extreme popularity of the violet-gardenia corsage bouquet, in which a single gardenia is used with a bunch of violets, a combination which, both in color and in fragrance, leaves little to be desired.

The latest wrinkle in ferns of the nephrolepis family is to grow them in pots instead of planting them out. Of course, sufficient stock is planted out for runners, but the bulk of the stock of all the varieties is grown in pots from 2¼-inch up. Mr. Craig thought that by this method a more shapely plant could be secured and that it had the added advantage of enabling the grower to dispose of his stock in any size desired. The extreme prolificness of the Boston family renders it unnecessary to plant out a large number merely for runners. N. Scottii, N. Amerpohlii, N. Todeaoides and N. Whitmani are grown in this way, in addition to Bostoniensis.

Ficus pandurata holds a high place in Mr. Craig's regard. He admitted that he could have sold more, by which his interviewer stupidly understood him to mean that he had not enough, but Mr. Craig is too honest a man to allow this mistake to pass, and he explained that, as in everything else, more Ficus pandurata could have been sold this season had the orders been forthcoming. But he was better satisfied with the demand for Ficus pandurata than for almost anything else on the list. Still, when you came to question Mr. Craig more closely, the impression created by his houses was that there was very little stock in salable

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is well done here, the plants in all sizes presenting an appearance of vigor and thrift most pleasing to see. There may have been new methods of culture producing these results, but Mrs. Craig's patience was pretty well exhausted and it seemed unwise to tax her good nature further, as it was just thirty minutes past the family luncheon hour when Phil bade farewell to his host.

binations consist of blending ruscus and magnolia foliage in a single wreath, a few short cycas leaves and pine burrs being added by way of finish. Another pretty combination is made with holly leaves and berries, with pine burrs, bringing a delicious scent of the woods, added. # Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Watson S. Woodruff, Orange, Conn.; First Vice-pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

S. F. Leonard, of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has been in the Wisconsin pea district for several days.

The bean crops are now at a stage when the weather is the factor in determining what the harvest shall be.

Visited Chicago.—Walter Retzer, vice-president St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Harry A. Bunyard, representing A. T. Boddington, New York.

Richard Steckler, seedsman, has been elected president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society. His portrait appears on another page of this issue.

The weather in the central west is reported favorable to the onion seed crop. The seed balls are well filled out and harvest only about three weeks off.

At Louisville the growers are in the midst of the onion set harvest. Reports have it that the Louisville crop will exceed last year's in quantity and is equal in quality.

The Lohrman Seed Co., Detroit, has been incorporated. The stockholders are Charles T. Lohrman, Philip Breitmeyer, Harry Breitmeyer and E. Bleil. Capital stock, all paid, $10,000.

The increase in the demand for onion sets is steady, and the increase in the production does not keep pace with it. Consequently there has been, and will continue to be, a steady advance in the market price of this commodity.

The crop of cucumber seed in Michigan is not as good as it should be, according to the week's reports. Radish seed crops, on the other hand, are reported in fine condition, with the prospect of more than an average yield.

The pea crop, from all accounts, will not be too large. This applies especially to the canners' varieties. The canners have been complaining about the uneven ripening of their crops this year; it has lessened their packs and they are likely to buy more seed for the coming year for this reason.

There is the usual summer lull in all branches of the seed trade at present. The workers are having their vacations and little of interest can be gathered. The bulb handlers are making preparations for the fall season, the pea and bean growers are busy in the fields. The Coast growers are busy at the harvest, but those who are interested in knowing what percentage of delivery will be made on the contract basis are not likely to get definite information for some time yet.

THE corn is making great progress these days and recovering much lost ground.

CORN in Nebraska is reported as doing splendidly, with promise of late sorts giving much better results than last year.

THE onion set harvest at Chicago has begun. It starts earlier this year than for the preceding three seasons. The growers say this early ripening denotes good quality. The season on the whole has been favorable for this crop. Last year the crop at Chicago was below the average in number of bushels harvested. This year an average crop is expected. The acreage for 1908 is not reported greater than in 1907, but each acre will, it is expected, produce more bushels.

THE late reports from the Michigan pea district make it look as though the yield may fall short of previous estimates.

FROM practically all districts there is the report that the canners are falling short of the expected packs of the crops the seed trade is interested in.

ON the boat from the Azores which reached New York July 17, R. M. Ward & Co. had seventeen cases of Azores lily bulbs and Henry & Lee fifty-five cases.

JAMES R. CLARK, son of J. M. Clark, secretary of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has gone to Arroyo Grande, Cal., to pursue his education in the seed business on the seed growing ranch of the Routzahn Seed Co.

THE government crop report puts the condition of onions at 90.2 per cent July 1, a little better than at the same date last year.

THE market for cantaloupes has been overstocked in practically all the large cities thus far since the Georgia and California crops came on. The output of California "cants" has been very heavy and has served to break the market without making a profit for the people interested. As an example of how far its influence has been felt, from fifteen to seventeen cars a day reached New York City day after day. It costs, for freight and refrigeration alone, about $1.20 to lay down a standard crate of California cantaloupes in New York. This does not include the price of the crate, or packing, picking and growing. The average sales in the height of the season were made at $1 to $2, according to quality. The top figure for the best Imperial valley cantaloupes on that market was $2 and a great deal of stock sold down to $1.

THERE are said still to be a considerable number of last year's crop of Japanese longiflorum bulbs in cold storage in London.

THE produce markets have been glutted with watermelons, cantaloupes, beans, etc., but peas were not in oversupply and tomatoes have thus far brought fair prices.

THERE are reports that dry weather has cut the crops of lily bulbs, the world over, below earlier calculations, large sizes being particularly affected, but the trade feels confident there will be enough bulbs so that everyone can get some.

THE shipping of cucumbers east from Marysville, Cal., has become an important industry. In one day recently over 15,000 pounds of these were shipped from Marysville, and every day one or two cars have gone out. The cucumbers are all grown in the swamp lands of Yuba county.

THE FRENCH GARDEN.

Charles D. McKay, of the firm of Watkins & Simpson, London, has been seeking to educate the English gardeners to the intensive method employed in French gardening and has succeeded in awakening throughout England a wave of enthusiasm for this method of culture which promises in the near future to result in the establishing of a great industry, the importations of French vegetables grown by this method now resulting in the payment of tens of thousands of pounds sterling, which will no longer be sent out of England after the French method becomes thoroughly established in that country.

The history of the French market garden in England goes back only three years. The first one was established in 1905, at Evesham, through the efforts of Mr. McKay, whose work resulted in a body of Evesham gardeners first being taken to France to make an investigation of the method. Since then the success of this garden has caused many similar ones to be established and the demand for instruction in the method has become so great that Mr. McKay has now written a practical manual of French gardening, which has been published by the Daily Mail. He gives complete cultural details, by means of which any gardener of experience can employ the methods practiced by the French cultivator.

The French grow their lettuce under small "chassis," or frames, and also use a large number of "cloches," or bell-glasses, it being stated that there are so employed in the vicinity of Paris 360,000 lights and 2,160,000 bell-glasses, from which early vegetables to the value of 13,500,000 francs are sold each year. Stable manure is used to supply the necessary heat and the skill of the gardener is shown in the vast amount of output from a limited space.

EUROPEAN SEEDS.

It is still early in the season to give an accurate forecast of the seed harvest throughout Europe, but taking it generally I find seed growers anticipate short crops. A late, cold spring was followed by dry weather in June; July has come upon us with a great wave of heat, and plants that ordinarily should have continued in growth for another week or two are finishing off. This applies markedly to culinary peas and sweet peas. One grower, generally well to the front with good blooms at the sweet pea show in London, facetiously remarked a day or two ago that if the hot weather continues he hopes to show new seed, July 24, instead of flowers.

I have been in conversation with English and German growers this week and find that short crop prospects are general. Wholesale houses are in no way disposed to book orders, even when brought under their notice, except with a reservation on prices. Neither can they be drawn on as to novelties for the coming season, until they see prospects of harvested seeds.

Garton's, Ltd., Warrington, England, well-known agricultural seed growers and hybridizers, who have achieved success with improved oats, grasses, etc., include in their new introductions a distinct new breed of white oat, the yielding capacity of which has been proved in competitive tests with every known variety of oat and it has in all cases broken the record.

It is named The Yielder, an appropriate title according to the results obtained. A distinct new breed of wheat named Reliance is also being offered for the first time. Judging from its appearance last week, it will prove a heavy cropper.

Coming back again to flower novelties, Myosotis dissitiflora Elfrida, raised by M. Herb, of Naples, a cross between M. dissitiflora grandiflora and M. oblongata perfecta, is becoming quite popular with many German florists. It has large, deep blue flowers borne on long, stiff stems and outdoors comes into flower three weeks ahead of dissitiflora. It can also be forced advantageously during the winter months. BEE.

ago. Its business rapidly increased and it was doing over $100,000 business annually, when its building was destroyed by fire just at the beginning of the last seed season. The company then began to look for a good location, with a view to enlarging its business and securing a more desirable shipping center. Rockford, Ill., and other towns are said to have offered bonuses, but the unique location of the city of Madison as a railroad center and its proximity to the university experiment station attracted Mr. Olds and he decided to locate there. A company with $50,000 stock was organized and nearly one-half of the stock was sold in Madison. The majority of the stock is held by Mr. Olds and men associated with him in Clinton. Some of the Madison stockholders are: Col. A. H. Hollister, who has known Mr. Olds since boyhood; former Mayor W. D. Curtiss, E. F. Riley and C. N. Brown. The firm in Clinton employed fifty people and it is believed a larger number will be employed at Madison as soon as the business is started.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seed through the port of New York for the week ending July 11 were as follows:

| Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. | Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Annatto | 3 | $ 32 | Clover | 493 | $12,864 |

In the same period the imports of bulbs, trees and plants were valued at $3,324.

LOUISVILLE ONION SETS.

The harvesting of onion sets in the Louisville district is well along, having commenced as early as July 6. Recent rains helped the late planting. H. R. Whiteside, who last year carried through a successful deal, is reported to be equally active this season. The concern has increased its storage facilities at Fourteenth and Maple streets, where the main office is located, and will operate the storage house near Buechel, also the big warehouse at New Albany, Ind. Mr. Whiteside says that from reports furnished by his buyers, who have been loading potatoes and onions at the various railroad loading stations scattered over the district and are in touch with the situation, he estimates the increase in the onion set acreage to be twenty per cent over last season, but owing to dry weather, which has cut the crop somewhat, the total yield will hardly be over ten per cent greater than in 1907. He approximately fixes 200,000 bushels as a full estimate for the entire Louisville onion set crop, of which seventy-five per cent is yellow stock, twenty-two per cent white and three per cent red. It is noted that there is some decrease in whites. The sets will run about the same in size as last season. A grower on the Jeffersontown road, who had harvested his crop by July 10, is reported to have gathered 450 bushels of sets from forty pounds of seed planted.

OTHER LINES NO COMPARISON.

The Rural New-Yorker is not yet satisfied that a seedsman should not assume a liability of some thousands of dollars on a sale amounting to a mere bagatelle, and tells the story of a man who wants to make a specialty of growing Prizetaker onion for transplanting. "The seedsman sent him the wrong seed and hurt his trade. This seedsman simply offers to send him more seed without a guarantee of any sort! It must be clear to any man that such an offer amounts to little or nothing. How is the farmer to know that the new seed is any better than the old? The seedsman will not even guarantee it true to name! Where everything depends on having the genuine variety and where the variety cannot be told when the plants are shipped, how can any seedsman expect a farmer to buy seeds and take all the risk? The blunder of a clerk in sending the wrong seed might mean a loss of hundreds of dollars to the grower. We do not know of any other business in which the seller would not be held at once liable for such loss."

From a seedsman's point of view such reasoning is manifestly unfair, but the point that hurts is that such statements should be given publicity by one classed as a friend, one who has personal interest in horticultural matters and who has a reputation for fairness which makes his opinion usually of value. The editor of the Rural New-Yorker should take into consideration the history of the pound of Prizetaker onion seed the seedsman sells for $2 and on which he is asked to assume responsibility, to the tune of hundreds of dollars, for the purchaser's success. No one can assume so broad a responsibility; the methods of the commercial production of seeds and their distribution and after treatment forbid; a great increase in prices would not make an unqualified guaranty practicable. Any seedsman will stand back of his seeds so long as they are out of the ground, but that is as far as it is safe for any seedsman to go.

Louisville, Ky.—A terrific wind July 17 inflicted a heavy loss on the Anchorage Rose Co., several houses being badly broken up.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—Ernest Cramer and Bernard Cramer, in a complaint filed in the district court, allege that their brother, Christopher Cramer, is assuming too much authority in the conduct of their partnership business, known as the Cramer Floral Co. They ask for an accounting.

Youngstown, O.—The trustee in bankruptcy has filed application for leave to sell all the realty of the Templin Co., at Calla. The hearing will be held July 28. Application also has been made for leave to sell the lease of the Youngstown store at private sale for $300. Application also has been made for allowance of prior claims in full before dividends to general creditors, as follows: Receiver, $1,190; attorney's fees, $775.49.

LILIUM HARRISII

WE OFFER A SELECTED STOCK OF THE ORIGINAL TRUE HARRISII FOR EARLY FORCING.

These bulbs have been grown from the original pure Harrisii, and will be found to be splendid stock for early forcing, for which purpose Harrisii is so valuable. We have had the stock inspected, and are assured that it is almost absolutely pure and almost entirely free from disease. This is not stock picked up indiscriminately from different sources, but is grown from one stock and will be found very superior to the ordinary Harrisii usually offered, both in regard to freedom from disease and purity, and not the late type now so often furnished.

Lilium Harrisii has been deteriorating slowly for years, and in order to get back to the true type of the original Harrisii, we have had our stock grown from the original pure stock and it will be found very superior to the Lilium Harrisii usually offered. While the stock is A-No. 1, our prices are as low as, or lower than, the prices asked for indifferent stock.

We have only a limited quantity of this stock to offer, so it will be advisable to place orders without delay in order to insure securing this stock.

tables and the prospects for abundant crops of anything in this section retrograde daily. Nothing can save the situation but abundant rains. Sunday was as warm as any day of the summer, even the seashore registering 100 degrees.

Little stock is reaching the cut flower market. The hint to growers to hold poor stuff, instead of losing express charges, seems to have had a practical effect. Everything good that came to town on Saturday and Monday was snapped up at advanced prices, especially in carnations. Beauties, too, were scarce and high; $25 per hundred and up was the quotation. But there were few to be had at any price. All other varieties remain at last week's quotations.

Sweet peas are about done. Asters are increasing daily and gladioli have dropped to 50 cents per hundred. One prominent grower of Long Island is now shipping direct to the retail stores, instead of distributing his product through the wholesalers, as has been his custom during recent years. The gladioli show the effect of the long, dry spell in shorter stalks and smaller flowers. Orchids are popular and a few retail windows add them to their water lily decorations. There is not much that is new or attractive now in window display. Apart from the hotels and the funerals, one might as well put up the shutters until September. Everybody is away or going. The lady bookkeepers are all making their yearly conquests in the mountains. Twenty-eighth street is as quiet as a

Various Notes.

Already the following New Yorkers have shown practical interest in the S. A. F. trade exhibition and to date space has been secured by J. A. Payne, Bobbink & Atkins, Arthur T. Boddington, J. Lewis Childs, W. A. Manda, F. O. Pierce Co., F. R. Pierson Co., Reed & Keller, Schloss Bros., Traendly & Schenck, Weathered Co., and Wertheimer Bros., and still there are more to follow. The prospects now are for the biggest crowd New York has ever sent to the society's convention.

Central Park's impoverished soil demands an outlay, according to experts, of $2,000,000 to cover the exhausted sections with top soil six inches deep. This season the value of proper soil has been demonstrated in the splendid planting of 18,000 rhododendrons through the generosity of Mrs. Russell Sage. The results are a practical illustration that will have far-reaching effects, and the success of the planting has drawn multitudes of interested citizens.

On Sunday, July 19, George Cotsonas, of 50 West Twenty-eighth street, and Miss Margaret Luckert, of New York, were married at Vienna hall, Fifty-ninth street. They will spend their honeymoon in Connecticut. Mr. Cotsonas was born thirty-three years ago, near classic Athens, and has been twelve years in this country, six years of that time in the wholesale evergreen business. He has built up a fine trade. The hall was nicely decorated for the ceremony and several hundred guests and friends were present at the wedding supper.

Charles H. Totty and wife have decided to spend their vacation in England and on the continent and will sail on the Carmania Saturday, July 25. They will not return before the middle of September.

Last week, W. Gommersall, of W. Nyack, sailed on the steamer Cedric for England and a summer amid old associations, his first visit to the old country in twenty years.

Phil Kessler is enjoying his vacation in New England.

B. J. Slinn, Jr., arrived home Friday, July 17, after a delightful two months' visit to the principal cities of England, France, Germany, Austria and Switzerland. His collection of views is most interesting and his stories of travel will last long after the violet season opens.

Mrs. Manda, of West Orange, passed away last week after a long and painful illness, borne with great patience and fortitude. Her children have the sincere sympathy of the trade in their bereavement. She may well be remembered as the mother of florists, her sons having achieved varied and unique success in the horticultural world.

The second annual outing of the Greek-American Florists' Association was a great success. Over 500 tickets were sold and 350 happy excursionists attended. Great enthusiasm characterized the different struggles for supremacy, the discus throwing, weight throwing and races especially engaging the largest number of competitors. The ball game between New York and Greece ended in the triumph of America. Messrs. Foley and Egenbrod were the skilled exponents of the American game. Mrs. N. Christatos was the fleetest of the married ladies.

When Writing Advertisers

George D. Nicholas was master of ceremonies and his eloquence and that of the Greek pastor aroused uproarious cheering. The keynote of the orators was loyalty to each other and to their adopted country, and the value of clean lives and faithful service and unselfish association with the society's interests. The progress of the Greek-American combination has been rapid and creditable. The outing was well conducted and most harmonious. Messrs. Schultheis and Marquardt came over from Long Island with their wives to join in the festivities. Many of the wholesale cut flower men were represented and some of the seedsmen and ribbon men were in evidence.

Lord & Burnham have just completed the range of six houses at the Agricultural College at Storrs, Conn. Two of their large houses at Jamaica I visited Saturday, July 18, at the fine nurseries of A. A. Miller, where fourteen houses, covering over two acres, are filled with a fine assortment of about everything worth while in the cut flower and plant line. Five houses are devoted to mums, with all the leading varieties. Fourteen acres are devoted to ornamental trees, evergreens, shrubs, roses and bedding stock of every kind, some grand blocks of the new variegated privet, retinospora and other large importations. Mr. Miller is looking for another farm to conquer. He has thirty-eight men constantly employed and is fast developing a wonderful business. He handles 10,000 ivy, 20,000 geraniums and 25,000 coleus in a season. Mr. Miller is chairman again of the committee of the New York and New Jersey Plant Growers' Association, that contemplates a great clambake at an early date, and in his new auto, with the other members of the committee, was selecting the spot for the gathering, to which everybody worth while will be invited. He speaks highly of the success of the society and its work and says it is here to stay.

Clarence Saltford and wife are spending a fortnight at Jersey resorts.

VEGETABLES FOR WINTER.

When is the best time to start tomato, cauliflower and lettuce plants for winter growing? H. & C.

In the fall of the year or in the spring less time is required to mature any crop than in midwinter, when the days are so short and the sun so far south. The time of planting the seed should be governed by the time the crop is wanted. Tomato and cauliflower seed may be planted any time now, both requiring about four months to come to bearing or marketable size. Lettuce is better not planted until after September 1, as it requires only two months. Head lettuce requires a trifle longer, and all crops mentioned require a month longer in midwinter than now. H. G.

DRY ROT ON TOMATOES.

I send a small box containing tomatoes affected with a disease that is new to me. This threatens to ruin my crop. Will you kindly advise as to cause and cure? C. S.

The tomatoes are badly affected with dry rot, one of the worst of tomato growers' troubles. This is not a contagious disease, but is caused by unfavorable conditions. Improper watering and ventilation are almost sure to bring it on, but many experienced growers have their troubles with it. Some have found it worse with Comet than with any other variety, but it usually affects only the first fruits and then disappears, probably as a result of careful attention to it. In spite of this fault, growers still consider Comet in the lead as a forcing tomato.

As a remedy, all affected fruits should be removed and careful attention be given to ventilation, temperature and watering. Test the soil and see if it is not a little too dry; if so, soak it up early in the morning, without wetting the foliage, and keep plenty of air in the houses. The nights being cool, the ventilators are usually closed to keep the houses warmer, and, there being no artificial heat in the houses, the foliage becomes wet before the houses are open in the morning. This damp, close condition is liable to start or spread any kind of disease. It is better to leave a little ventilation on, even if the temperature be a trifle cooler. The circulation thus obtained will keep the air drier, but too much of a difference in day and night temperature will result in other troubles.

VIOLETS AND MUSHROOMS.

I have a greenhouse 11x30, heated by a flue, containing two benches. Can I grow radishes on one bench and mushrooms under the same and on the bench over the flue grow violets in pots? Would 8-inch pots be large enough for Princess violet, and how shall I prepare the soil for each? I have access to stable dressing of any kind and rich pasture loam. A. L.

Violets do not take kindly to any bottom heat, such as would come from your flue. Better grow the radishes on this side and the violets on the other bench. To grow Princess of Wales violets successfully, your winter night temperature should run as near 40 degrees as possible, not exceeding 42 degrees. While radishes will grow in this temperature, they would prefer a house a few degrees warmer.

Mushrooms succeed best in a minimum temperature of 55 degrees to 60 degrees. You could hardly maintain this under your bench and would not, therefore, get much of a winter crop. Try the pure culture spawn. This does well under cooler conditions than imported spawn and produces a crop much earlier. You should have a bed of horse manure not less than nine inches deep, when well pounded down, and spawn when the heat has declined to 85 degrees to 90 degrees. Cover with two inches of loam when the mycelium has started to run nicely, usually within ten days, and keep the bed dark and air away from it as much as possible. Read an article on mushrooms in last issue of the REVIEW.

Eight-inch pots will grow good Princess violets, but in a bench with five to six inches of soil they will do better. Use two-thirds good loam and one-third well rotted cow or horse manure for compost. Don't house your plants of these until the middle of October. C. W.

LAKE FOREST, ILL.

The second annual exhibition of the Lake Forest Horticultural Society, at the Art Institute July 15, was a grand success. It was successful from the viewpoint of the visitor and from the more practical view of the gardener and horticulturist. Every available space in the building was filled and Durand Art Institute never presented a more attractive appearance. The exhibition of last year was a school, and that there were apt pupils at it was shown in the better classification and arrangement of this year's show.

Except for the display of orchids by Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., the exhibits were all from the gardeners on the fine private estates that are so numerous at Lake Forest. The judges were: On flowers—William C. Egan, Highland Park, Ill.; E. A. Kanst, Chicago, Ill.; W. N. Rudd, Chicago, Ill. On vegetables

2 lbs. of Mushrooms per square foot
This is what you should easily get from good spawn. If you are not doing this well it will pay you to buy a few cases of Jackson's Selected Spawn, which is warranted fresh and vigorous, and is used now exclusively by many of the very largest growers. I am so sure that this spawn will please you that I will ship it with the distinct understanding that you are to return it at once if it should fail to meet with your approval. Unlike ordinary spawn, such as you have been using, Jackson's Selected Spawn is properly piled and stored in even, fixed temperature conditions in my warehouses and frequent importations assure a fresh supply at all times.
It has been my experience on my farm, the largest in this country, covering a period of 12 years of close observation, that the greater part of the spawn sold in America is unused because of improper handling. Jackson's Selected Spawn is not only right to begin with, but is properly cared for from the time it leaves the maker until it reaches you. One trial will convince you of this. Price per case of 140 bricks, 200 lbs., $20.00.
Florists should send for special information of how to utilize waste space under benches in mushroom culture without injury to other crops.

to one-half its usual length in order to be back in time to receive and distribute his company's bulbs. Talking about these bulbs, Mr. Freud said that the crop of Lilium Harrisii in the larger sizes is very short this year. The Bermuda growers are only able to send out one-half of the quantity promised in 7x9, while their orders for 9x11 have been cut down in some cases fully ninety per cent. Explaining this, Mr. Freud said that the bulbs had not developed in the ground, and while they were perfectly healthy, all the growers have a vast preponderance of 5x7 and most of them would gladly increase their orders for this size. Mr. Freud said it gave him much pleasure to state that his company had so arranged matters that their orders for the large as well as for the small sizes would be filled exactly as booked. When asked how this was possible, when the growers were so generally cutting down on the larger sizes, Mr. Freud smiled pleasantly and said that the Henry F. Michell Co. knows how to manage a little thing like that.

Various Notes.

Edward Reid will leave New York on a Clyde line steamer July 24 for Jacksonville, Fla. Mr. Reid will be absent a couple of weeks, visiting his friends in the south.

M. Rice & Co. have just completed two of the largest wheat sheaf orders ever placed. They are now using their own patent wheat picking process, which enables them to produce a perfectly uniform sheaf.

E. J. Steele, Middletown, Del., was in this city a few days ago. Mr. Steele is the fortunate possessor of a late planted house of carnations, that has been doing splendidly during the present hot weather.

Edmund A. Harvey, Brandywine Summit, Pa., who was in town on Monday, said that his indoor carnations looked better than ever before at this season. They have absolutely no stem-rot.

William J. Muth, manager of the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., has been enjoying a few days' vacation, taken a day at a time. Mr. Muth will be too closely tied this season to remain long away from his post.

The bowling scores given last week were made by those who had secured an average of 150 or over in fifteen or more games, thus qualifying to compete in the final tournament of fifteen games to be rolled in five series of three each during this month. The first series was rolled on the home alleys, the second on the Olympia alleys. The third, also on outside alleys, will be rolled this week. The six best scores will make up the team of five men and one substitute to represent this city at the convention at Niagara Falls.

William J. Baker is receiving choice asters and Kaiserins.

The Robert Craig Co., the Joseph Heacock Co. and Walter P. Stokes are among those who have recently added orchids to their collection of plants.

A pictorial postal card from H. Bayersdorfer states that he is in Marienbad, and sends kind greetings to his friends.

The locally grown Beauties now compare favorably with those from down east, in color, form and keeping qualities.

The return match at baseball, Burton vs. Niessen, was played July 18, at Wyndmoor. This time the Niessen team was host, and the result also was reversed, the Niessen team winning by a score of 23 to 5. John Burton was one of a good-sized crowd of spectators who enjoyed the game.

The best asters are the variety known as Ostrich Plume, grown at a distance from here. PHIL.

PACIFIC COAST.

OUTDOOR ROSES IN CALIFORNIA.

Where good roses are desired from outside stock in the fall and early winter, they should be pruned about this time, as they are as dormant about August 1 as they will ever be during the summer.

Water should be withheld from them for a month, at least. This gives them a further opportunity to become thoroughly dormant. Then, if water is given from the middle of August to the first of September in plentiful supply, they quickly commence to grow and a succession of good flowers and heavy stems is assured, which, if the weather is favorable, will last well into the winter.

In pruning the plants, care should be taken to cut out all small, weak wood and leave only the straight, heavy shoots. This is particularly important with the hybrids, but should not be carried to extremes with the tea sorts. Tea roses do not require heavy pruning unless they have become too large.

Of the hybrid roses, Ulrich Brunner, Mrs. Laing, Mme. C. Testout, Magna Charta and Gen. Jacqueminot are by far the most valuable for late flowers. La France, Gloire Lyonnaise, K. A. Victoria and Liberty are also good, and will give an abundance of salable blooms late in the season.

In tea roses, Papa Gontier, Duchess, Safrano, Rainbow, Bridesmaid and Bride are by far the best sorts to produce flowers in quantity when other material is scarce.

There are many hundreds of varieties, but those here listed are the most remunerative in this latitude. They comprise practically all the colors and can be depended on to produce good stems and fair sized blooms, unless the weather is such that they are completely interfered with. But as we often have our nicest weather in October and November, a rose bed often proves to be a money-maker when the usual fall flowers have passed out of existence. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is hardly worth mentioning and, in comparison with that of last year at the same time, shows a decrease of from twenty-five to thirty-five per cent. This is concurred in by several of our representative retailers and apparently is to be our guide for this year. There is such a dearth of entertainments and swell functions in town that colored stock is hard to dispose of, and white flowers or anything that is suitable for funeral purposes is about all that is moving. Nevertheless, fancy roses are being offered in such minute quantities that they are eagerly bought up by the retailers, and growers having anything answering that description have no difficulty in disposing of them.

The weather continues cool in the vicinity of San Francisco, which is in direct contradiction to that in the interior of the state. An overcoat can be worn mornings and evenings with considerable comfort in this neighborhood. As I mentioned before, this has been a favorable year for the handling of all kinds of cut flowers on this account, and if we only had the business to correspond with the climatic conditions the florists' trade would proceed under pleasing auspices.

Late flowered Japanese lilies have been brought into town in large quantities during the last few days and are moving fairly well. Amaryllis has made its appearance and is being used largely for decorative effects. Dahlias are now in their prime and gladioli are scarcer. Sweet peas are still good sellers, but the prices have dropped until there is little money in them for the growers. Other classes of outside stock do not admit of quotations and bring about what the retailer feels like offering.

Over in Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley the usual dullness is everywhere apparent, and there is but little to break the monotony except occasional funeral orders.

Various Notes.

John McLaren, superintendent of public parks, is replanting largely in the several squares on the spots where the thousands of earthquake refugees were formerly housed.

S. K. Love, of the Piedmont Seed Co., of Oakland, is on a two weeks' vacation trip to Guerneville, Cal.

T. Mosco has opened a floral establishment on the corner of Polk and California streets.

The regular monthly meeting of the California State Floral Society was held on Friday of last week, at the residence of H. P. Tricou, on Grove street. Reports of various committees from the recent floral exhibition were read, which showed it to be one of the most successful ever held here.

Chester P. Hutchinson has opened a store on Telegraph avenue, Berkeley. He has been associated for many years with H. M. Sanborn, of Oakland and Berkeley.

Thomas Hooper has taken charge of D. Raymond, the San Jose potter, is in town. He reports a good demand for flower pots in the interior portions of the state.

C. W. Beery, of Beery & Norris, Los Angeles, passed through town en route to Belgium. He will import largely of bay trees this season.

John Vallance, of the C. C. Morse Co., has returned from his vacation, spent in the northern part of the state.

Arthur Zirkman, representing M. Rice & Co., of Philadelphia, is in town.

The firm of Hutchings & James, of Elmhurst, Cal., has dissolved partnership. Both will continue in the growing of general nursery stock, as heretofore.

SPOKANE, WASH.

The horticultural trades here are prosperous, if one may judge from the fact that at a meeting of the board of trustees of the Inland Nursery and Floral Co., held July 10, a quarterly dividend of seven and one-half per cent was declared. The company is building a plant on Washington street and Nora avenue, where it owns three-quarters of a block of ground. The dividend is $3,750, and is stated to represent the net earnings on the business of the company for the last three months. In addition to the city property, the company owns thirty acres of land under the irrigation ditch at Hayden lake, which it is said has more than doubled in value during the last year as a result of the improvements made. The dividend does not include the increase in property value.

OUTDOOR MUMS IN CALIFORNIA.

The length of the autumn season and the usual mildness of the winter in the central and southern portions of the Pacific coast are very favorable for the culture of the chrysanthemum as a garden flower. If a little judgment is used in the selection of the varieties, a succession of good colors can be had up to Christmas time.

Many of the showiest inside sorts are not suitable for garden growing, and quite a few varieties that I have found to be very desirable when grown in open beds are easily superseded by other kinds of the same color when placed under glass. They are all of such easy culture that it is hardly worth while to dwell on that phase.

Of the best early pink sorts I have selected Mrs. E. G. Hill, Mme. Bergman, Adele, Mrs. Coombes, Glory of the Pacific and John K. Shaw. These give an assortment of the best shades and comprise several styles of growth and shapes of bloom. Of later pinks, Maud Dean, Louis Boehmer, Marie Liger, Wm. Duckham and Lavender Queen are good. Of the three latter varieties we cut splendid flowers March 1 of this year, from beds entirely exposed in the open field.

With whites splendid success can be had with October Frost, Clementine Touset, Beatrice May, Willowbrook and Estelle for the earliest flowers, and for later sorts, that flower in about the order named, Jeanne Nonin, Ben Wells, Queen and Alice Byron.

The best of our very late bloomers are Timothy Eaton, White Bonnaffon, White Maud Dean and Mrs. Chadwick.

In yellows, Robt. Halliday, Cheltoni, Col. Appleton and Monrovia are easily the best early kinds, and these are followed by W. H. Lincoln, October Sunshine, Mrs. Baer, Golden Wedding, Bonnaffon and Yellow Eaton.

None of the deeper colors are good early bloomers, but from October 1 entirely through the year Lord Hopetoun, Intensity and Black Hawk can be relied on to give a splendid succession of the several snades, from the bright red to the deepest maroon. G.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

THERE can be no complaint on the quantity or quality of the peach crop, but there are a great many who would like to see better prices.

ON city streets one hears, amid the honks of the automobiles, the chug-chug of the compressed air cleaning machine that goes from house to house renovating carpets, curtains, etc.; and it will not be long before pedestrians will learn to keep a watchful eye out to escape a dose of fumigant from the tree sprayers. Already, in several eastern cities that are specially bug-ridden, enterprising men have equipped themselves to spray house-owners' trees and shrubs at so much per, and this is sure to develop into a special line of business as the importance of spraying becomes more generally recognized.

HUNTSVILLE NURSERIES UNITE.

The Alabama Nurseries Co., Huntsville, Ala., has been absorbed by the Chase Nursery Co., of the same place, and the offices of the two companies will be merged. The announcement of the sale states that the acreage of the company will be 1,100, making it one of the largest nurseries in the United States. Herbert Chase, treasurer and general manager of the Alabama Co., will retire from business. The Chase Co. is the younger corporation and is composed of three brothers—Henry B. Chase, president; Robert C. Chase, treasurer, and Charles Chase, secretary.

SHRUB JOTTINGS.

Spiræa Bumalda is probably the most all-round useful one of the various summer blooming spiræas. Of Japanese origin, it is quite dwarf, rarely exceeding thirty inches in height, but is quite vigorous growing. The deep pink flowers, which open early in July, are produced until September, making this a specially valuable shrub for massing effects. The bright green leaves are serrated, while the flowers are produced in large, flat-topped clusters. The crimson variety, S. Bumalda Anthony Waterer, has for some years been an extremely popular shrub. The foliage is somewhat variegated with crimson, white and gold, while the crimson flowers are carried in dense corymbs.

Diervilla candida, the white weigelia, is another white flowering shrub worthy the notice of florists. In the north the wood will kill back to some extent when we have more than ordinary rigorous winters. This year it is flowering magnificently, coming into season June 15. The flowers are produced for a number of weeks; in fact, this is almost an all-summer blooming variety. The handsome light green foliage, floriferous blooming qualities and the fact that it makes a graceful shrub in and out of bloom would suggest its desirability as a lawn specimen. If planted in masses, do not be afraid to thin in order to let the plants show their individuality.

Diervilla hybrida is a collective name for many varieties, but we still think Eva Rathke the best. It meets with a heavier nursery call than any other sort, its brillian crimson flowers being of a very distinct shade. The variety Lavallei has reddish purple flowers, but the habit of the plant is sprawly. M. Lemoine is a more desirable sort. The pale pink flowers turn to rose and later to dark red. Steltzneri is a free blooming sort of good habit, carrying dark rose colored flowers, while Desboisi has blooms of a somewhat similar color.

Hydrangea arborescens is a valuable native shrub, now in bloom. It is commonly called the wild hydrangea and attains a maximum height of eight feet. It is found growing naturally from New Jersey and Iowa south to Florida. It withstands our northern winters with no more injury than H. paniculata sustains. The form H. arborescens sterilis, Hills of Snow, instead of having its flowers in flat-topped clusters, has all the flowers ray-like and sterile, resembling a snowball. The varieties severally named arborescens grandiflora nivea and arborescens grandiflora nivea forma nova are similar to Hills of Snow and were in bloom near Boston, June 27. All these hydrangeas can readily be propagated from soft wood cuttings rooted in a cold-frame or ordinary propagating bench, which has the needed shade and moisture.

PROSPERITY IN FLORIDA.

G. L. Taber, of Glen Saint Mary, Fla., is president of the well-known Glen Saint Mary Nurseries Co. His company was incorporated a year ago, taking over the business of which Mr. Taber had for twenty-five years been sole owner. The company has just declared an eight per cent dividend, and Mr. Taber, together with the other stockholders, is highly elated that the company is able to make this liberal dividend. Mr. Taber says that notwithstanding the financial stress that prevailed the country over, the sales of his company were over thirty per cent more than during any preceding year since the nurseries were established, and that the outlook for the future was never more promising.

THE JUNEBERRY.

The Juneberry is native in America east of the Missouri river, and the National Council of Horticulture says that in regions where larger and more highly developed fruits do not succeed well it is destined to be of great value. It has a small core like the apple, but the seeds are minute. The fruit is borne in open racemes, and ripens in June. It is very sweet. The berries are about the size of the wild black cherry and of a dark red, almost black color.

The trees attain a height of thirty feet or more and bear abundantly. In bloom they have great ornamental value. They are excellent as wind breakers, and to protect smaller fruits from birds. The berry is eaten raw or cooked. It makes fine pies and is excellent stewed. There are several improved varieties, the Hall, Osage, Reeves, Alpina and Success being most valuable for the central west. The plant is a fairly rapid grower and is not liable to serious insect or fungus attacks.

NEGAUNEE, MICH.—Good progress has been made in the building of the new greenhouses for the Cleveland Cliffs Co. A considerable part of the framework has been erected and some of the glazing has been done.

ADRIAN, MICH.—The flower department of the C. C. Van Doren store, under the new name of the Maple City Floral Co., is now situated at 27 East Maumee street, having opened its doors to the public Thursday evening, July 2.

MINNEAPOLIS.

State of Business.

Last week was holiday week. The Shriners' convention in St. Paul overflowed in equal numbers to this city, and festivities held the day. A few good decorations were secured and the convention occasioned some social events calling for cut flower decorations. Roses have been almost impossible to get, good, bad or indifferent. Carnations are scarce and deteriorating in quality. Asters are making their appearance and promise to be good. Gladioli and sweet peas stand for the outdoor showing. Speciosum lilies are in the market and are a great help in the scarcity of flowers.

Various Notes.

Miss Whitted secured a number of Zuhrah decorations, in which she used baskets of lilies, gladioli and roses. She also had the decoration of the Zuhrah room at the Ryan hotel, St. Paul, and a number of decorations at the Lafayette club.

James Souden put in a fine plant decoration at the Masonic temple throughout the week. He also had a good wedding decoration the middle of the week.

George S. Murtfeldt has closed his flower store for the summer.

W. W. Seekins, Duluth, was a visitor last week. M. E. M.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

State of Trade.

With few exceptions, reports on general conditions among the local florists are favorable. During last week nearly everyone was busy. A number of parties at both the country and yacht clubs helped out.

Stock is plentiful. The gladioli, asters and lilies are of good quality, and there is an abundance of them. The steady demand keeps stock moving, and there appears to be no trouble caused by the excessive heat.

Various Notes.

Miss Helen Patten is back from a trip to Atlantic City and New York. While in New York, Miss Patten called on the leading florists and dealers, bringing with her some valuable information and new designs.

Noticeable among the decorations of the Secor, a new hotel which will be opened August 1, are the table decorations in the café, furnished by George Heinl. They are the well-known air plants.

George Bayer is furnishing a good many of the Toledo florists with asters.

Mrs. Suder has an abundance of Lilium auratum, Harrisii and roseum, which are of excellent quality. H. L. S.

Dover, N. H.—Jesse Arlin returned recently from York Harbor and York Beach, where he had been doing a successful business during the last month for C. L. Howe, of this city.

Providence, R. I.—Alexander Johnson, a son of George Johnson, at 521 Elmwood avenue, has been appointed as city forester. Mr. Johnson is well equipped for the duties of this position, since he is not only a practical and well informed florist, but has already had about a year's experience in caring for the city's shade trees and shrubbery, under the direction of the commissioner of public works.

State of Trade.

Trade has been unusually good for the last week or so. There have been a great many funerals and several of them have used up quantities of stock. It has been the most trying week of the summer to get stock enough to go around. There still are some good carnations to be seen, but they are only a drop in the bucket when orders pile in like old times. Roses are scarce and small. The new crop will soon be in, which will be a great relief. Asters are just commencing to make their appearance, but in no quantity as yet. What few there are prove a great help in a pinch. Sweet peas are about done for. Those in the market are poor. The dry, hot weather we have been having lately is telling on outdoor stock of all kinds.

Various Notes.

The club outing at Buckeye lake, July 15, was a grand success. There were two of the large park cars packed to the rail. There were the usual races of all kinds, boating and dancing, and everyone present had a fine time. Albert Hills is the champion on sack races, as he always carries off first prize. He is also one of the prize-winners in the three-legged race.

J. D. Seibert and O. Munk, with their families, are spending a week or so at Buckeye lake.

G. H. Woodrow has returned from Magnetic Springs, eight pounds heavier than when he left Columbus.

C. A. Roth is cutting some good roses, which find ready sale.

Frank Quecke looks ten years younger since his return from his old home in Germany. J. M.

OWATONNA, MINN.

The Clinton Falls Nursery Co. will build two more rose houses this fall, making eleven large houses devoted to roses, with four in carnations and two in chrysanthemums, besides smaller houses for miscellaneous stuff.

This firm added the greenhouse business to its large nursery four years ago and the success in growing choice stock has compelled them to add additional glass each year. The stock at the present writing is well advanced and promises to eclipse former records. F. A. Chapman is foreman of the greenhouse department.

CLINTON, MO.—A. Woerner says he had so good a spring trade that he sold out of geraniums, although he had a big lot, and will have to buy stock plants.

In Araucaria Excelsa, Robusta Compacta and Glauca We Lead the Country. Look, See Us Grow!

The year 1907 has been a record breaker for the well-known Araucaria specialist, Godfrey Aschmann, of Philadelphia; 7000 were imported and sold. The year 1908 is our thirteenth anniversary in a successful career in the importation, growing and shipping of that well-known and so much admired evergreen decorative plant, the Araucaria. 8000 are imported this spring and can be seen and inspected growing in our greenhouses in all sizes and prices, potted off into 5, 5½ and 6-in. pots, and are sufficiently recovered from their voyage to be shipped safely into any state and territory of the United States, Canada and elsewhere. Fill your empty houses now. Now is the time to order. Plants worth 75c now will be worth $1.50 to $1.75 by September or October. They grow into money for you while you sleep.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 8 to 10 inches high, 40c; 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 10 to 13 inches high, 50c; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 14, 15 to 20 inches high, $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5¼ to 5½-in. pots, 22 to 25 inches high, 50c to 60c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 35c to 40c.

Kentia Forsteriana, 6 to 7-in. pots, 36 inches high, $2.00; specimen, 7-in., 40 to 50 inches high, $2.50 to $3.00; 6-in., 30 inches high, $1.50; 6-in., 25 inches high, $1.00; 6-in., 20 to 25 inches high, 75c; 5 to 5½-in., 50c.

Bay trees, 6 feet high from top of tub, crown 30 inches in diameter, standard, $12.00 per pair.

Boston and Scottii ferns, 4-in., 20c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c. Whitmani, 4-in., 25c; 5½-in. to 6-in. pots, 35c, 40c and 50c.

Cycas Revoluta, or Sago Palm, 6-in. to 7-in. pots, 5 to 20 leaves to a plant, 10c per leaf.

Cannas, leading sorts, 4-in., $5.00 per 100.

Aster Victoria, 2½-in., $2.00 per 100.

Clematis Jackmani, 6-in. pots, 3 feet high, in bloom, 35c each.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, raised from leaf cuttings, 3-in. pots, ready for a shift into 4 or 5-in. pots, 25c each.

CANNAS.

TO THE GROWERS OF CANNAS.

Brethren:

There has been a movement on foot, for several years, among the growers of that "Queen" of summer bedding plants, the canna, among those who are members of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I am only in the business on a large place for the pleasure that there is in it, and do not sell, and for that reason I have not favored a canna organization. I now think the time has come that a National Canna Society should be organized, and I hope that all the growers will be at the convention at the Falls, so there can be an exchange of opinions.

Yours truly,
H. D. Seele, Canna Specialist,
Lawndale, Elkhart, Ind.

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.
Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.
Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.
As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.
Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

ROCK ISLAND ILL.

The members of the Tri-City Florists' Club met at the Turner Hall July 16 and went to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Staack, Twenty-seventh street and Sixth avenue, Moline, who were married but a few weeks ago. The members completely surprised Mr. and Mrs. Staack, presenting them with a beautiful pedestal and jardiniere. Theodore Ewoldt made the presentation speech. H. M. Bills spoke and Henry Gaethje, Sr., of Rock Island, entertained with humorous readings. Refreshments were served. Mr. Staack is the son of Julius Staack, and is the junior member of the florist firm of Julius Staack & Son, of Moline.

BUTTE, MONT.—At the Columbia Gardens, where Victor Siegel is head gardener, plans are being made to enlarge the conservatory and several wings will be built this fall. The plants in the gardens are in splendid condition, in spite of the unfavorable weather that was encountered during the spring.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS.

to be neglected. If the young strings become entangled it is quite a task to unroll them without breaking or damaging some of them. It never pays to put off stringing this asparagus. It is one duty which is better attended to as soon as one crop is cut, or right after young plants are put in the beds.

Newly planted beds should not be watered too freely until roots are well run through them. With old, cut-back beds there is little danger of overwatering. A good mulch of cow manure should also be applied after the surface soil has been loosened. As cutworms are liable to work havoc in the asparagus beds, lay some poisoned bran for them at intervals. This work, done now, will materially reduce their ravages when winter arrives.

Primulas.

During such intensely hot weather as has been experienced in most sections of the country for some weeks, primulas will grow better in coldframes than anywhere else and sashes on them are not needed except to throw off heavy rains. Run lath shades over them during sunshine. Thin cotton cloth, or cheesecloth, can also be rolled over them, but these do not admit air like the wooden shadings. Do not allow the little plants to become potbound. Spread them out before they crowd each other and, if you use the hose in watering, see that it is running at low pressure. Primulas, especially the Chinese section, speedily resent too much water, and it will pay to use the watering pot for them unless your batch is a large one.

Show Pelargoniums.

After taking such cuttings of show pelargoniums as you may need for another season, lay the old plants on their sides and give no more water for a time. In order that they do not suffer too severely from the sudden cessation of water at the roots, they should have been gradually kept drier for a week or two prior to the final ripening off. Give them an occasional damping over with the hose while on their sides. When they have lost their foliage and the wood has assumed a nut brown color, they should be stood up, watered a little, pruned back, and, as they commence to break, shaken out and repotted.

Alternantheras.

While it may seem somewhat early to suggest propagating bedding plants, we always like to get in a few flats or pans of the different alternantheras about August 1. These cuttings root like willows at this season, heat, moisture and shade being essentials. A frame will root them fully as well as a greenhouse and, when rooted, keep them growing outdoors until cold nights require their removal indoors. From these early propagated alternantheras you will secure stock plants which will give you all the cuttings you want in late winter and they are to be preferred to old plants, which are much more liable to damp in winter.

Heliotrope.

The present is also a good time to root a batch of cuttings of that popular flower, the heliotrope. They will make nice pot plants to carry over and, if wanted, can also be grown on for winter blooming. Like the alternantheras, these can be kept outdoors until the latter part of September. They will require rather frequent pinching to keep them bushy and should have all flowers removed.

Various Reminders.

Do not sow calceolaria seed during intensely hot weather, or most of the seedlings will damp off.

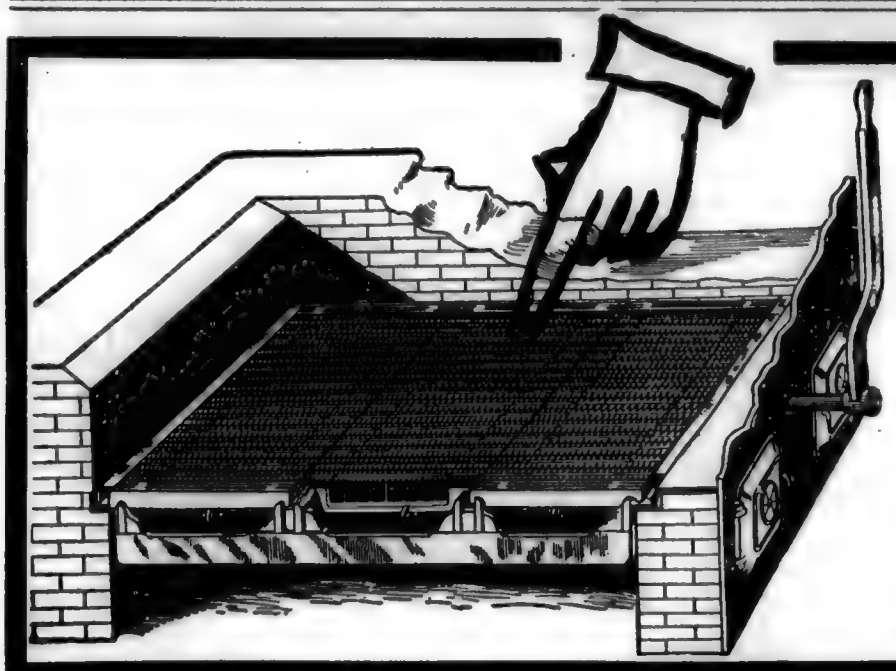
Fancy-leaved caladiums will now be found useful for decorative purposes, when flowering plants are rather scarce.

If you have not grown Allamanda Williamsii as a midsummer pot plant, try a few another year. It is beautiful at present and is of such easy culture that no one should be without it.

Remove all carnations affected with stem-rot as soon as observed. This trouble is unusually prevalent in many sections at present.

Choose cool, moist nights, if possible, for fumigating. Avoid heavy doses, to prevent burning of the foliage. Hose the plants overhead before the sun can strike them in the morning.

Keep inserting poinsettia cuttings and be sure to pot off all rooted stock before they can become hard.



Use the spray nozzle freely on gardenias, eucharis, stephanotis, palms and other foliage plants, to keep mealy bug, scale and other pests in check.

Keep floors well damped and sprayings overhead will be beneficial to all plants in benches during the heated spell.

Keep genistas trimmed into shape and pinch strong leading shoots on azaleas.

Cut down delphiniums as they pass out of flower to insure a good second crop of spikes.

As outdoor rambler roses pass out of bloom, cut out the old flowering shoots to give the new canes every chance.

Greenhouse Heating.

ESTIMATING THE RADIATION.

In figuring radiation for a greenhouse, in this Michigan climate, about what surface area of hot water pipe should be allowed per square foot of glass, for say 65 degrees, with zero weather outdoors? C. S. D.

In your climate, to maintain a temperature of 65 degrees during zero weather, it will be safe to figure one square foot of radiation for four square feet of exposure, including roof, sides, ends, etc., in the house, with water at 180 degrees. L. C. C.

LIKE TWO SEPARATE HOUSES.

I am constructing a greenhouse in Ohio, 16x62 feet, and intend placing the boiler on the north side of the building near the center, the boiler-house to be on the outside of the greenhouse. I have a Hitchings No. 108 hot water boiler, tapped for 2-inch pipe as follows: Four tap holes in the top, two in the bottom and one on each side. One part of the greenhouse is three feet lower than the other part. I would like to know how to pipe this building for the best results. I have an expansion tank holding fifty gallons. How much lower than the lowest floor would I have to place my boiler? M. L. C.

I believe it will be best to pipe the two rooms of your greenhouse independently; that is, run a separate flow and return from the boiler direct to each room. A 2-inch flow direct from boiler to each room, preferably carried under the ridge, and dropping at the most distant point to return by twelve 2-inch returns, should provide radiation sufficient for all ordinary stock. This will require that the expansion tank be at least ten feet above the ridge of the house and connected directly with the main flow near where it enters the boiler. L. C. C.

USING BOILER TUBES.

We have a small house that we have been heating with 3-inch boiler tubes with good results. We intend building some larger houses and would like to know if you consider it practical to heat them with the 3-inch tubes? If so, kindly let me know where the mains and returns should be located and how many runs of 3-inch tubing it will take for a house 21½x60? The walls will be six feet high, connected to another house. We must keep a temperature, in Ontario, for a general assortment of plants. How many tubes for a house 21½x50, with walls six feet high, for lettuce, and one connected to it, of the same size, for growing a general assortment of plants? We also have a house 21½x60 that has five rows of 2-inch pipe under one bench, four under the other and fed by two 2-inch pipes run one under each gutter. We wish to use this house for carnations and would still use the 2-inch pipes. How many runs will it need to keep a temperature for carnations? We have it 15 degrees below zero and would like it figured on that basis. W. S. P.

The house 21½x60 feet should have nine lines of 3-inch tubes installed to safely hold the house at 60 degrees. One 3-inch flow or supply pipe will be sufficient for such a house. It will probably be best to use the main flow under the benches and use a low pressure plant with the thin tubes, unless you use long sleeves and calk them so as to withstand a good pressure. The houses 21½x50 would best have the same amount of radiation. The house piped with 2-inch pipe should have the piping increased so there will be fourteen lines in all, counting both flows and returns. L. C. C.

THE EXPANSION TANK.

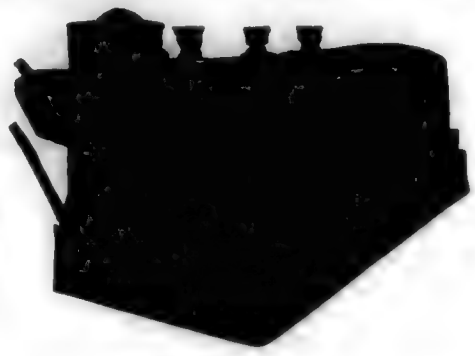
I notice in nearly every instance, when referring to the expansion tank, you advise that it should be connected to the main return near the boiler by means of a ¾-inch pipe. I would therefore ask: Where no relief valve — or exit, for air generated in the boiler—is used in any part of the heating system, would you advise the connection of the tank to the main return near the boiler? At present my tank is connected by a ¾-inch pipe to the main flow pipe near the boiler, that being the very highest point in the system. The bottom of the tank is eight feet six inches above the flow pipe, and is as high as it can be located.



In calculating the radiation of pipe do you figure the inside or outside diameter? As I now propose to increase the system to a little over 500 feet of 2-inch piping, this will give me, taking the U. S. Heating Co. as authority, 376 feet of radiating surface, or .753 per foot for the outside diameter of the 500 feet of 2-inch pipe. Am I correct? J. L. B.

By placing the expansion tank on the main flow at the highest point one defeats the main object of a closed system and practically makes it an open tank system. The heating water expands rapidly and pushes itself out rapidly and hence flows through the system rapidly, if it is closed. It always follows the path of least resistance and, with the expansion tank on the high point, one draws off the water at the highest temperature, just as it leaves the boiler, with a consequent loss of fuel. If the hottest water must be pushed through the system and the increased space required by expansion provided by the coolest water in the system, which is in the main return, close to the boiler, it is evident that one is getting a more rapid circulation and greater return from the fuel consumed.

It is not practicable to run a high pressure water plant without air cocks on the high points.

Each foot of 2-inch pipe gives .621 feet of radiation; 500 feet of 2-inch pipe is equal to 310.5 feet of radiating surface. Malleable as well as cast-iron pipe is all figured on internal diameter, brass tubing and boiler tubes alone being figured on outside diameter. L. C. C.

HOT WATER PREFERRED.

I now have 5,000 feet of glass and I intend to add 2,000 feet more this summer. I can get a seventy-five horse-power return tubular boiler cheap. Would it be economical to get it, and would you prefer steam to water? Would it be too large? I now have three small boilers to heat my three houses and use hot water. G. O. K.

I hardly think you would be justified in installing a seventy-five horse-power boiler for a plant of this size. I should also prefer to operate it on a hot water basis. Some large plants can be heated from a central station by steam more economically than by hot water, but small plants that do not justify the expense of a night fireman are best as a rule on a hot water basis. L. C. C.

COAL PRICES LOW.

This is the time for greenhouse owners to fill up the coal sheds, for the Black Diamond gives the following review of the coal market conditions:

"The market conditions throughout the country are such as to warrant the statement that while the record of tonnage is reasonably satisfactory the returns in money are much less than they were for the corresponding period a year ago. The general average of prices for the year will be very much lower than last year and, unless indications fail, many coal companies are going to show their margin on the wrong side of the ledger. Particular point is made of that fact just now by the peculiarities of the situation."

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Adam Laub & Sons, of Wappingers Falls, N. Y., report good sales in carnation plants. One order, from Oklahoma, cleaned up White Enchantress. They believe in advertising and expect to enlarge the plant to keep pace with increasing business. Victory is the best scarlet here, but does not make a heavy growth outside. Beacon will be tried, on general good report. Violet Marie Louise does well, grown in pots in the early stage. Disease is unknown at this thrifty place.

Wood Bros., of Fishkill, N. Y., say they never had a better season, either for shipping plants or cut flowers. Growing a large assortment of stock, both in bedding and outdoor, they command an extensive general trade, which keeps the three brothers hustling with the several departments. Carnations have been thrown out and replanting is in order. Kaiserin is their best summer rose.

FOSTORIA, OHIO.

The business of the Fostoria Floral Co. has increased to such an extent that the proprietor, E. R. Sackett, has been obliged to apply to the board of public service for such an improvement in the water supply as will make it adequate for his use. Though Mr. Sackett's start in the trade was quite unpretentious, he has increased his facilities and his scale of operations until he is now sending shipments all over Ohio and some of the neighboring states.

Some years ago he built a new plant at the corner of Jackson and Main streets, continuing to operate the old one on the Maple street end of his father's Main street property. This season he is moving the old plant to the new location and adding new buildings, the extension being of such importance that by fall he will have double the capacity he had nine months ago. Including these new houses, his range will contain 75,000 feet of glass.

WINCHESTER, KY.

In reviewing his business for the last year, Shearer The Florist sees no reason for feeling melancholy. He summarizes results as follows:

"In posting my books July 1, I find I have done one-third more business than I did last year. Owing to the backward spring, bedding stock moved slowly at first and looked as if it were going to be left, but when it did begin the demand was the best since I commenced business four years ago. Owing to the long drought we have had, which was broken by a good rain July 14, outside stock, such as sweet peas, gladioli, dahlias, etc., suffered considerably. While everybody has been kicking about hard times, collections have been good."

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Up to a week ago, reports were good, but now there is not much doing. Indoor stock has shortened up considerably. Roses are just about equal to demand, while carnations are nearly all in, or out, for most growers are busy getting their benches in shape for next season. The hot weather of late was detrimental to sweet peas, but these will improve after the recent rainfall and more cool atmosphere. The quantity and quality of asters improve daily.

Various Notes.

Friday, July 17, at 7 p. m., the country north of Milwaukee was visited by a heavy rain storm, with some wind and hail. The latter surprised three of the growers in that vicinity by breaking just a few panes of glass, and no doubt reminded them of the existing hail insurance company. The Holton & Hunkel Co. and Manke Bros. suffered only a small loss. Nic Zweifel had quite a few shoots broken off his carnations by wind and hail.

Mrs. Baumgarten, of the Baumgarten Floral Co., had an operation performed last week, and it will be some time before she will leave the hospital.

The Mueller & Schroeder Co., having all the old stock and soil out, will begin to plant carnations in a short time, expecting to finish by August 1. Their young stock looks well.

Nic Zweifel spent Thursday and Friday visiting some of the large growers near Chicago.

Visitors: Theo. Kienahs, La Crosse, Wis.; Adam Zender, Park Ridge, Ill.; Wm. A. Schaefer, of the Platteville Floral Co., Platteville, Wis. E. O.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Stock is scarce and trade quiet. Sweet peas are the only thing that is at all plentiful and they are none too good. Asters come in slowly and all have short stems. Roses are small and poor.

Various Notes.

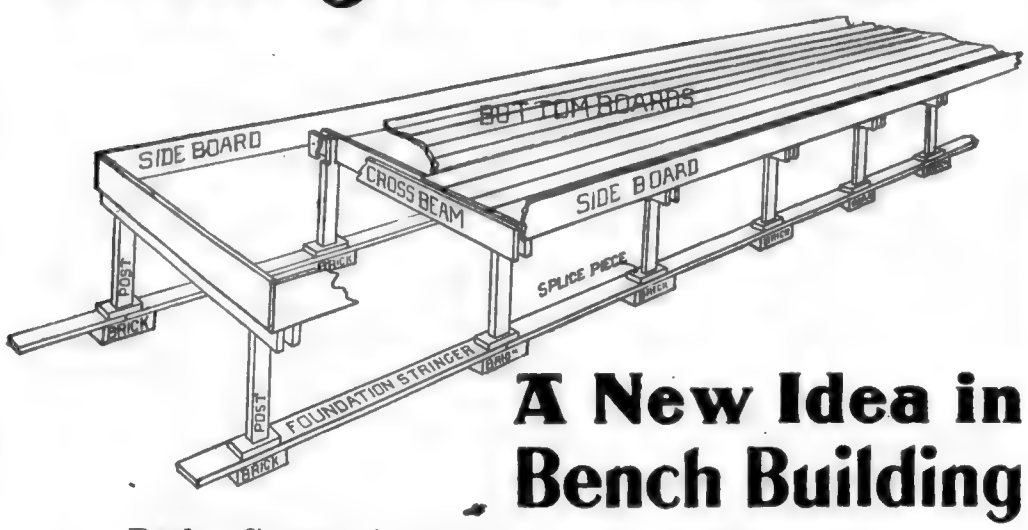
Al. Reichert, the Genesee street florist, was married last week.

About half the florists in town are taking their vacations this week. We hope they will all return in time to take in the florists' picnic, to be held July 29. Do not forget the date, men and women. The final arrangements have been made and we hope to have the largest crowd in the records of the club.



The ball game is causing the greatest amount of talk and, from the number of applicants for positions, it will be a red-hot game. The tug of war will also be a special feature. R. A. S.

SAGINAW, MICH.

John J. Bittner and Herman Deikmann, landscape architects of this city, have trimmed about 3,500 shade and ornamental trees and have planted also a large number of trees and shrubbery, which add greatly to the appearance of the city.

They also intend to get after the tussock moth immediately. The park system also has its hands full with the spraying and has experimented with some of the new insecticides now on the market.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

July weather has been hot enough to satisfy the most exacting and the flower shops look deserted. There is not much doing outside of funeral work, and not much of that. While many of the help are away, they are not missed.

Among the wholesalers, things seem more satisfactory and there is not much complaint. There is not much coming in, but what comes is good and finds ready sale. They report sales as about the same as last year.

Asters and gladioli are a little scarcer than last year and will be acceptable when they come, but no doubt there will be more than plenty before long.

Various Notes.

Many persons are making inquiry about the S. A. F. convention and, from appearances, this city will send a large delegation. For information as to rates, etc., write or see T. P. Langhans, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.

James Moore, superintendent of the North Side park, is having his troubles these days, trying to protect his trees from the various pests which have been killing them during the last few years, and also to square himself with the United States authorities on a counterfeiting charge which has been made against him on account of a beautiful bed in the West park, which represents a silver dollar. It is exceptionally well done, but it seems there is a law which imposes a fine of $100 on any person copying the design of any currency of the United States. We hope Mr. Moore will escape easily, but they have him guessing.

De Forest Ludwig has spent several weeks in camp with the Boys' Brigade at Ashtabula harbor.

If any of our readers should meet George Marshall, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., around Atlantic City, they will confer a favor on his friends if they will head him home, as it is rumored he is such a hit on the board walk that he cannot get away.

The trustees in charge of the affairs of the Templin Co., Youngstown, O., closed the store Saturday and will close out everything, including the lease, at a public sale in the near future.

WASHINGTON.

Some Window Decorations.

There is improvement in business over last week.

The stores have all got their summer windows in. G. C. Shaffer has a large observation tower, made of cork bark, with a large water wheel, which furnishes power for the elevators, etc., and there is an additional building in the rear, as an annex, made of cedar bark, with red curtains. These buildings are wired for incandescent lights, and the miniature lights and the red curtains make a stunning effect at night in his large I street window.

Z. D. Blackistone has a cascade of rocks, with water rushing over them, and a rustic bridge, with ferns planted all through the rocks.

Small & Sons have a pond filled with all sorts of water plants and water lilies. The back of the window is kept filled with pin oak branches in umbrella stands, which give it a cool appearance.

The Washington Florists Co. has a rustic window, filled with moss, logs and cork bark, and planted with mixed ferns.

F. H. Kramer has his window tastefully arranged with Whitmani ferns and water lilies.

Gude Bros. have an old stone grist mill. The water coming down the hillside runs the wheel, which in turn runs a wind gauge and the little millers, who are constantly walking about inside of the mill. The large pond or lake is filled with growing water hyacinths, poppies and other plants, with a fine display of lilies and a fine lot of fish and terrapins. The latter are all named with gold letters on their backs. The great big fellow is Taft and the other little one is Bryan; then come Hearst, and so on.

Various Notes.

J. Henry Small has just returned from a sojourn in Maine.

S. W. Deeble, who has supplied the Washington florists with hardy ferns for years, claims he has gathered enough ferns in his time to cover or carpet Pennsylvania avenue from the capitol to the White House and then some. Mr. Deeble has for the last three or four years been cultivating his place on the Chain Bridge road, Virginia, and growing some fine asters and dahlias. He has a large piece of ground filled with gypsophila, which is coming along nicely.

Frank Sly is summering at Bushwood, Md. O. O.

SPRINGFIELD, O.—It is reported that Louis Campbell, who was conducting a successful business on East Johnson avenue, has disappeared and has not been heard from for about a month. Mr. Campbell is a son of James Campbell, who has been an employee of the Good & Reese Co. for over twenty-five years. The young man had received generous assistance from his father in starting in business and was apparently quite prosperous.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE GATES AJAR.

The gates ajar is one of the funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. Mr. Fox is not partial to this rather popular design. The photograph illustrates one of his ideas in dealing with the gates ajar. Pink and white roses and small flowers were used above, white carnations below. PHIL.

CARDS ON SPRAYS.

Will you please tell us what is the right place to attach the sender's card on a spray of funeral flowers? How should the card be attached, and what should be written on it? J. E. A.

It hardly could be said that there is a right place to attach a card to a spray; it can go almost anywhere, except at the tip of the spray, and not offend good taste. One often sees the card nestling down among the flowers just a little back of the middle of the spray, and a little to one side. If there is any better place it is at the point where the ribbon is attached, or the bunch of green if no ribbon is used.

The card should not be larger than an ordinary calling card and the best stores always inclose it in an envelope that fits it, the envelope being attached to the design by baby ribbon. One often is required to use cards carrying all sorts of expressions of sympathy, but it is better taste to have nothing but the name of the sender on the card; the flowers themselves are the expression of sympathy. R. E. T.

STORE AND WINDOW INTERIORS

Harmony in Walls and Fittings.

After looking over the interiors of different stores and greenhouse salesrooms, the defect found to be common to too many is lack of harmony in the fittings and wall coverings. They have a disjointed, patchy look.

Perhaps the store was not all finished and furnished at once, and, as a case or a piece of furniture had been added, it was not selected with reference to the prevailing color and style of the original fixtures, if indeed there ever were a prevailing color and style. Or, if the walls were newly papered, the cases were not moved, and at some time or other these were lined with another color or material. To stand off and view the whole inspires some expressive slang. A new patch here and there had better be omitted, until a uniform covering can be put on the entire wall surface of the room, and the woodwork refinished in harmony.

The View from Window to Rear.

Let the same wall covering and woodwork be used in the window and its accessory space. Frequently a different color and finish are added to the window casings and sill, and one feels as though he had stepped into a box attachment. The interior of the windows and store walls should be either the same or so carefully blended that there will be no break as the eye follows from the glass front of the window to the most distant point in the rear of the store.

Seek to make long leading lines, not only in floral decorations, but in every place upon or against which they are to be mounted. Whether the observer is a critic professionally or not, the long line is to the eye as the horizon to the landscape. A wide and shallow store room can be practically transformed by careful planning in this respect. Forget a corner or two and start the witchery of a few long, easy lines from the front entrance to the rear, and see the depth develop.

It is easy enough to preach, "Make your store a beauty spot," but for the average person it is not the question of a moderate outlay so much as the selection of color and material which shall transform his store. With all the variety of material for interior finish, from marble to burlap, many people find it a difficult task to combine beauty and durability to a common purpose. A few general hints in this line may be of use during this, the refitting season.

Rough-finished Interiors.

Many interiors of stores attached to greenhouses are merely rough-plastered or ceiled. Either of these, finished well, will make a desirable wall decoration. Rough plaster takes a wash which is not only cheap and sanitary, but beautiful. A ceiled wall is best stained. Smooth plastered walls can be painted or papered, painting being much preferable, as it can be dusted or washed. Paper is not so durable, on account of the effect of the moisture from the greenhouse air.

The Gates Ajar.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE GATES AJAR.

The gates ajar is one of the funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. Mr. Fox is not partial to this rather popular design. The photograph illustrates one of his ideas in dealing with the gates ajar. Pink and white roses and small flowers were used above, white carnations below. PHIL.

CARDS ON SPRAYS.

Will you please tell us what is the right place to attach the sender's card on a spray of funeral flowers? How should the card be attached, and what should be written on it? J. E. A.

It hardly could be said that there is a right place to attach a card to a spray; it can go almost anywhere, except at the tip of the spray, and not offend good taste. One often sees the card nestling down among the flowers just a little back of the middle of the spray, and a little to one side. If there is any better place it is at the point where the ribbon is attached, or the bunch of green if no ribbon is used.

The card should not be larger than an ordinary calling card and the best stores always inclose it in an envelope that fits it, the envelope being attached to the design by baby ribbon. One often is required to use cards carrying all sorts of expressions of sympathy, but it is better taste to have nothing but the name of the sender on the card; the flowers themselves are the expression of sympathy. R. E. T.

STORE AND WINDOW INTERIORS

Harmony in Walls and Fittings.

After looking over the interiors of different stores and greenhouse salesrooms, the defect found to be common to too many is lack of harmony in the fittings and wall coverings. They have a disjointed, patchy look.

Perhaps the store was not all finished and furnished at once, and, as a case or a piece of furniture had been added, it was not selected with reference to the prevailing color and style of the original fixtures, if indeed there ever were a prevailing color and style. Or, if the walls were newly papered, the cases were not moved, and at some time or other these were lined with another color or material. To stand off and view the whole inspires some expressive slang. A new patch here and there had better be omitted, until a uniform covering can be put on the entire wall surface of the room, and the woodwork refinished in harmony.

The View from Window to Rear.

Let the same wall covering and woodwork be used in the window and its accessory space. Frequently a different color and finish are added to the window casings and sill, and one feels as though he had stepped into a box attachment. The interior of the windows and store walls should be either the same or so carefully blended that there will be no break as the eye follows from the glass front of the window to the most distant point in the rear of the store.

Seek to make long leading lines, not only in floral decorations, but in every place upon or against which they are to be mounted. Whether the observer is a critic professionally or not, the long line is to the eye as the horizon to the landscape. A wide and shallow store room can be practically transformed by careful planning in this respect. Forget a corner or two and start the witchery of a few long, easy lines from the front entrance to the rear, and see the depth develop.

It is easy enough to preach, "Make your store a beauty spot," but for the average person it is not the question of a moderate outlay so much as the selection of color and material which shall transform his store. With all the variety of material for interior finish, from marble to burlap, many people find it a difficult task to combine beauty and durability to a common purpose. A few general hints in this line may be of use during this, the refitting season.

Rough-finished Interiors.

Many interiors of stores attached to greenhouses are merely rough-plastered or ceiled. Either of these, finished well, will make a desirable wall decoration. Rough plaster takes a wash which is not only cheap and sanitary, but beautiful. A ceiled wall is best stained. Smooth plastered walls can be painted or papered, painting being much preferable, as it can be dusted or washed. Paper is not so durable, on account of the effect of the moisture from the greenhouse air.

The Gates Ajar.

A good combination is stained or painted wainscoting with rough plaster, washed, or wainscoting with the upper wall burlaped. This latter material does not retain its original freshness of color a great while, but it can be painted as often as desired.

If wall paper is used, by no means consider any style which has a decided figure. Plain ingrain is usually most suitable. The floral decorator wants to make his own lines and figures. A dim suggestion of a design might do as a starter of his decorative lines, but he is bound to be limited at best, for the reason that new decorative lines which he may devise may run counter to the direction and style of the wall paper figures. The answer to the problem will be a meaningless confusion.

The Question of Color.

Now, as to the all-important question of color: A neutral shade should be chosen. It will be observed that the term "shade" is used, while no mention is made of "tint," for the reason that the darker colors are usually the best choice, if one color is used. If two colors are to be used, the lighter should be set on above the darker.

But why neutral shades? There are two "becauses" for this; namely, to avoid strikingly inharmonious color combinations, and to supply a softened background which develops the beauty of color in the flowers and foliage, rather than thrusts itself within view. The observer should forget the wall coloring and background for the time being and be lost to all save the attraction of the flowers displayed.

Regarding the use of dark wall coloring for the one-toned plan, there are strong arguments on both sides of the question. The majority of flowers displayed are light colored and show to better advantage against a dark background. Dark colors show the wear and tear and knocks less. On the other hand, it may be urged with some force that a dark wall lessens the daylight which is reflected about the room. Leave the light to the windows and the electricity or gas, as the case may be.

Skill in Illumination.

Wall or ceiling lights are the best for the store room, with white opaque shades, so that there shall be an abundance of soft light, but no burners visible. Every well lighted place should also have an entrance light. Reflector shades are not desirable. Especially in window lighting should the lamps themselves and, better still, all the light fixtures, be concealed and only the diffused light be reflected.

Returning to the discussion of the coloring for walls and woodwork, we find a fascinating array of dull reds, buffs, olive greens, old gold and browns. Blues are trying for any but skilled colorists. White and gold have been too much used of late, as also have green and gold. Green, if not too much inclined toward the blue, is a fine background for flowers, but not at all satisfactory for foliage, as palms, wild smilax, laurel or Christmas green, etc. It is a poor conductor, so to speak. A delicate tint of Nile green, in combination with mission or a darker green, might partially remedy this lack of color contrast.

A wainscoting of mission oak finish, with a soft yellow wall tint, is a finish much in vogue at present, and well worth its popularity. Ivory with olive green or dull red brown and buff are charming and restful combinations. Mahogany, mission or walnut stains are all rich and beautiful, if carefully laid on soft, smooth wood.

The Mirror Craze.

Quite a proportion of florists have the mirror craze, and one finds stores attempting the effect with cheap mirrors in small panels, very suggestive, indeed, of barber shops and restaurants. Our dainty wares are worthy of better settings than are shaving mugs and steaks. Have several good-sized mirrors finished like the woodwork, but removable, for the back of the window. Between times use one of them, half hidden among the foliage and flower displays, in the store. Used as a surprise piece, a mirror is a delightful adjunct. It is well to remember that direct sun-rays are injurious to a mirror.

Once in a while draperies of silk and fringe are met with nowadays in a store. At best these are cluttery, dirty and soon faded.

Have, if possible, the fittings and furniture of the store movable, so that from time to time you may change the entire make-up of the store. Make screens, pedestal and jardiniere stands and all such to conform to the general style and finish of the woodwork.

It is not beyond the most modest and plain to have a pretty store. Even if means are at hand to furnish the store completely to start with, it is better to begin with the bare essentials and pick up other furniture piece by piece, always bearing in mind the character of its companion fittings. Not the number of opportunities, but the improvement of these one by one, opens the wider doors. Those who have a small trade and few orders have a better chance to make each piece a gem than others who must expect a steady rush of trade daily.

Every flower that grows is graceful in its own place. Our task is to find that place, and our leisure may be well employed in studying the art and science of our profession. Gertrude Blair.

A BUNCH NOT BUNCHED.

Possibly the most notable wedding of the season was that at the national capital June 10, of Joseph Leiter, of Chicago, and Miss Williams, of Washington. President and Mrs. Roosevelt were there and all the social set at the capital. It was therefore only natural that the floral features of the affair should be elaborate. These were in the hands of J. H. Small & Sons.

The bride's bouquet is shown in the illustration opposite, which is worth study by every retailer. One seldom sees so fine a bunch. It is elaborate, without being loud; large, without being heavy. The shape is excellent and the looseness of the arrangement gives an air of lightness and grace too often missing from large bunches. Indeed, the trade name "bunch" is exactly descriptive of many a bride's flat-topped, round bouquet of valley. In the arrangement carried by Miss Williams the orchids were placed just high enough above the valley to get the full value of the blooms. This bouquet was the work of A. Klopper, one of Small's regular Washington staff.

Antirrhinums.

Antirrhinum plants required for benching in September should have been rooted and potted off before this time. Keep them in a cold-frame, protecting them with sashes from drenching rains, which are liable to start blight on the foliage. There is still ample time to sow seed or root cuttings for batches to follow chrysanthemums. While these plants can be lifted from the open ground and benched with a fair amount of success, we prefer to have them in single pots. If you have some strong plants growing outdoors and will head them back well, they will soon give you a fine crop of cuttings. These old plants themselves are often lifted and, if the roots are kept intact and shade given for a couple of weeks, they will produce splendid spikes. It is better to stick to one or two clear colors, rather than grow a mixture. If you carry your flowers to market the separate shades will sell, but you will have hard work in disposing of mixed bunches.

Mignonette.

The first week in August is sufficiently early to make a sowing of mignonette. As your benches may not yet be ready, use 2-inch pots, placing three or four seeds in each. A compost of loam, leafmold and sand is suitable. Keep the little pots shaded until the seedlings appear. Be sure to give them abundant light and air and do not, in your rush of work, turn the hose on them. Let watering be done with the watering pot while the seedlings are small. Have your benches or beds ready before the roots of the seedlings get matted around the sides of the pots. Solid beds are much to be preferred to benches for mignonette, and any with heating pipes below them are entirely unsuitable. For compost a mixture such as you would use for chrysanthemums will answer well. We find that a rather heavy loam gives better results than a light, sandy one. All the seedsmen offer special forcing strains of mignonette. Be sure to get the best. It will pay you in the end. Once you have obtained a really first-class strain, save one or two of the finest plants for seed.

Schizanthus Wisetonensis.

The useful annual, Schizanthus Wisetonensis, is becoming more appreciated each year by up-to-date retailers. It is of such easy culture and flowers in so short a time that it is a wonder more country florists do not grow it for home trade. Even if the plants are not sold, the flowers work in beautifully in funeral designs and, arranged in a vase, last longer than carnations. Even as an outdoor annual the schizanthus has been sadly neglected. During August and September the flowers will be found serviceable when really good material is decidedly scarce. The best variety is Wisetonensis, on account of its dwarf habit, but for outdoor use grandiflorus oculatus and pinnatus albus are also

From Thanksgiving to Christmas nicely bloomed schizanthus are something of a novelty. To secure such plants, sow seeds now in 3-inch pots. Thin the seedlings as soon as they germinate, leaving four or five in a pot. Keep in a coldframe right up to the light. Give plenty of air and throw off the sashes at night. The aim should be to grow the plants as stocky as possible. They will never tolerate forcing at any stage of their growth. The little shoots will soon run up to flowers and must be kept constantly pinched. Pot them on as required and keep as cool as possible, short of actual freezing, at all stages of growth. Do not place in the greenhouse before October. There are now some large flowered strains of S. Wisetonensis offered, with blooms double the size of the ordinary type.

Scented Geraniums.

There is a good call for bunches of the shoots of the various scented geraniums, especially during winter. Perhaps you have been growing along a number of plants left over from spring sales, to give you shoots for the coming season. If not, it is time to root a good batch of cuttings. As the shoots are now very succulent, they are liable to rot unless carefully watered. Trim the foliage off closely. Give one good soaking of water. Then keep dry for a day or two. Do not shade heavily. For zonal geraniums no shade at all is needed, but the scented varieties require a little. If you have a house facing north they will root in it fairly well, but in a coldframe with constant air on top and bottom they will do even better. The lemon-scented verbena now has an abundance of soft shoots and, if you wish to increase your stock, now is a good time to do so. It is always well to lift a few old plants of this favorite, for they give such a crop of nice cuttings when started up, after being kept cool and dry for a time.

Asters.

Aster plants from the latest sowings should now be in their flowering quarters. In spite of climatic conditions, the season has been a fairly good one for these, and for the next two months a fine grade of flowers will be produced. The appearance of the notorious aster beetle will require a sharp lookout to be kept for these pests. They are specially partial to the white flowered varieties, although they will eat any other color. If the flowers are not open, the plants can be saved to some extent by spraying with Paris green at the rate of one pound to 200 gallons of water. This cannot be given when blooms are open without discoloring them. A bait of shorts and Paris green, sweetened with molasses, will poison many, while handpicking can be resorted to if the beetles are not numerous. Where blue lice appear on the roots, it is better to pull up the plants; also any affected by the several diseases affecting asters. Keep the ground constantly cultivated and the ravages of pests will be to a considerable degree lessened.

Bouquet Carried by Joseph Leiter's Bride.

Perennial Phlox.

How useful perennial phlox are during the hot summer months to the country florist who is far from a large city and who is constantly being called upon to furnish flowers for funerals and other purposes at short notice! Rarely seen in retailers' windows and hardly ever being bunched for market, the hardy phloxes, nevertheless, are indispensable to anyone doing a summer trade in cut flowers. Their extreme hardiness, ease of culture, great color variations, rapidity of increase and extended flowering season are all strong points in their favor. For producing large trusses young plants are necessary. These are easily raised by inserting young shoots, in the same way as with mums, in a propagating bench, and later planting in nursery rows. These will flower in August and September, after the old clumps are pretty well faded, and any of your customers seeing a good batch in bloom will surely want to purchase some, especially if you grow a good selection.

The following list contains only first-class sorts and will give a succession of bloom from June until freezing weather: White, Miss Lingard, pink eye, very early; Pyramide, Le Cygne, Fiancee; Albatre, very late; pink, General Chanzy, Lumineux, R. P. Struthers; blue or mauve, Le Mahdi, Esperance; scarlet, Coquelicot, Boule de Feu, General Chanzy; Richard Wallace, white, rose center; Champs Elysees, purple crimson; Eclaireur, carmine, salmon center; Bridesmaid, white, rose center.

Chrysanthemums.

The last of the chrysanthemums should be benched without delay. Even these late rooted plants will give useful flowers. The work of staking and tying will now take up considerable time. It cannot be neglected, for if the shoots begin to fall around it will make the work doubly difficult. Keep the surface soil slightly scratched over and remove weeds and decaying foliage. Do not be afraid to spray your plants overhead during hot weather. Also keep the floors well damped down after a day of intense heat. We like to syringe so that the foliage will remain damp after nightfall, but not after the middle of August, as it induces leaf fungus. Black fly will be the chief pest to fight for some time. Spraying with a nicotine extract or kerosene emulsion is to be preferred during warm weather. As the temperature becomes lower, fumigation is safer. Keep a sharp lookout for those hairy worms on the foliage. It is rather early for the main crop of these, but some are already on hand and they speedily disfigure the foliage.

Violets.

Recent rains have proved beneficial to violets and runners are now being freely produced. These should be removed from time to time. Where doubles are not grown in the beds, benches or frames in which they are to flower, they should be planted in without delay. The longer they are left out the more danger is there of the dreaded spot ruining them. Early planting of these always gives us the best results, but with the singles, October is early enough to do any housing. The compost for these latter should be gotten ready now, if this has not been already done.

STEM-ROT.

The Regular Yearly Visitor.

In two or three weeks from now we will hear again about stem-rot of the newly-planted indoor carnations. There are but few of us who are not bothered more or less with this annoying trouble, and even the utmost care in watering, ventilating, removing all infected plants as well as the soil surrounding them, and using lime freely, will quite often be of but little use. It almost seems that the plants will keep on dying off for a certain length of time, in spite of all one does. There may be some who claim to have a cure, but I am sure the majority of us know but little about it. We may try a certain remedy one year and feel satisfied that it helped to stop the spread of the disease, only to find out the following year that it does not.

There is no doubt but what science will in the near future reveal something which will ultimately overcome stem-rot. The thing to do for the present is to take advantage of what we know through science regarding the conditions favorable for fungous diseases and thereby prevent as much as possible the appearance of the trouble.

Largely Due to Soil.

While there is no doubt that atmospheric conditions have a great deal to do with spreading any fungus or disease germ injurious to plant life, it is also certain that the soil which is used in the benches is quite often the cause of stem-rot. A heavily manured, mucky soil forms a hotbed for the disease. In fact, almost ninety per cent of the troubles with carnations are due to conditions of the soil, and in many instances this is brought about by overfeeding; and especially one of the troubles, the sleepiness of the flowers, is more than anything else due to this fact.

Soil which has been piled up for months and heavily manured is not the proper material to plant carnations in. The assertion that manure makes humus, which produces available chemical elements in the soil necessary for a heavy yield, is true, but the carnations lifted from the field take weeks before they are reëstablished sufficiently to require any other nourishment than that which is contained in a sweet, fibrous loam; while, on the other hand, heavily manured soil in a temperature of about 90 degrees, kept wet by daily watering, is bound to get soaky and sour in a short time, and at the same time make conditions ideal for stem-rot. Not alone with lifted field grown plants is this possible, but also with stock planted from pots. It is just as wrong to have them in soil of this kind.

Some Practical Suggestions.

To beginners, or those who have been troubled with stem-rot, it might be of value to follow the method described below in caring for the stock. With us it has proved most satisfactory. Whenever possible, use soil consisting of a rather sandy, fibrous loam. Sod soil dug and piled up two or three months before benching cannot be beat. There is no doubt but what soil of this kind costs more to get into shape when filling the benches, but it pays to use it. The lumpy parts of the soil can be used for the bottom layer, and the fine on top to plant into.

Use care in planting the carnations. Do not bury the hard-wooded stems up to the foliage in the soil. The man who lets any bad foliage remain on the plants when bringing them in from the field is no gardener. One thorough soaking after planting, which should be done with the water turned on half force, and by going around the plants instead of trying to knock them over, will do for four to six days, but the stock should be kept from wilting by having a thick coat of mud wash on the glass to protect the plants from the sun, and by syringing lightly three to four times daily. By syringing lightly is not meant a watering. It is only to be a fine spray, enough to moisten the foliage, and while for the first six to eight days after planting a syringing late in the evening will help considerably to assist the plants in getting established, it is not advisable to have bushy plants wet over night after they have made sufficient new roots, for this, in case of the appearance of stem-rot, would not help matters.

Ventilation and Shading.

Most growers advocate the partial closing of the ventilators and doors of a fresh planted house. Where, however, one can get along without doing this, it is as well, for while a close atmosphere will, or might, prevent the plants from wilting, it also has a tendency, if in the least overdone, to create an unnatural growth on the plants, while the proper way is to keep the tops of the plants practically at a standstill until the new roots produce a fresh growth.

One week after planting, a little of the shading on the glass can be removed and every third or fourth day a little more. Three weeks after planting should find the plants exposed to the fullest sunlight, every ventilator and door wide open. A few panes of glass removed along the gutters during August and the first part of September is often of great benefit. A circulation of fresh air is wanted in every corner of the house. No weeds or yellow leaves should ever be allowed to be seen in the benches. A light stirring up of the soil, one inch or so deep, will keep the soil porous and sweet. If the soil used in the benches should be of a heavy or clayey nature, a very light mulching of well rotted cow or horse manure worked into the surface will prevent the cracking and baking of the soil.

Care in Use of Fertilizers.

No manure or commercial fertilizer of any kind need be given to the plants until the middle of September, and then only in light doses, and only to benches where the plants are in a healthy growing condition and therefore require feeding. A sickly carnation plant is never benefited by fertilizer of any kind, and one cannot replace a fibrous loam by using any old soil and adding manure to it.

I am sure that if good soil is used, if the houses had a thorough cleaning, if there is careful watering and proper ventilation, and if the plants are kept clean and the surface of the soil loosened up during the hot summer months, it will help more than anything else to prevent stem-rot, or in case of its appearance, to check it.

The best carnations we ever grew were grown last year. The soil for benching was dug from a pasture; the long grass had to be cut with a scythe. The sod of the soil was laid upside down over the bottom of the benches. No manure or fertilizer, with the exception of a light mulching two weeks after planting, was used until September 20, when some bone meal was applied, followed with a dose of sheep manure October 14. From 460 Enchantress treated this way, fifty flowers were cut which took first prize in the Chicago show. While this shows that good flowers can be had by this method of culture, it is also interesting to note that we lost less than two per cent of these plants by stem-rot, on the balance planted in the house where this soil was used, while in the adjoining houses, where soil had been used which was taken from a pile prepared the fall previous, which was heavily manured, the loss by stem-rot was fully fifteen per cent. F. B.

CARNATIONS IN ROSE HOUSE.

I should like to plant one bed of carnations in my rose house, where the temperature will be kept at 60 degrees. I have Pink Imperial, Enchantress, Queen, Red Lawson, Lloyd, Afterglow, Nelson Fisher and Fair Maid. Which would you suggest as the best to plant in this temperature? L. B. W.

To begin with, I will say that 60 degrees is too high a temperature in which to expect good results from carnations. Especially is this true when they are grown in the same house with roses, as rose house conditions are not suitable for growing carnations. The carnations could stand the high temperature fairly well if it could be accompanied by an abundance of ventilation. This cannot be given in a rose house, however. Even in such case, only the stiffest stemmed varieties could be grown with any degree of satisfaction.

The Lawson varieties are best adapted to this purpose and, among the varieties you mention, the Red Lawson is the only one I would care to risk in the rose house. I cannot say anything about Lloyd, as this is our first season with that variety.

While we are on this subject, a word on the placing of varieties will not be amiss. The usual method seems to be to begin with the first bed and the first variety, and to fill up as the planting progresses. This is a mistake and frequently causes considerable loss and inconvenience later. The placing of each variety should have considerable study and should be carefully planned. In fact, the planting-in should be a part of a carefully laid out and definite plan, covering the entire season. You should know right now which house or bench you will vacate, to be used for the growing of young stock; also which beds you will likely run late next summer for blooms, etc. Of course, your plans will always stand subject to alteration, as may be found expedient and necessary, but, barring failure or accident, your plans should be complete.

Thus, you would not plant a midwinter variety on the same bed with a variety which holds up finely through the early summer. Nor would you plant a tall growing variety on the same bed with a short grower, like Mrs. Lawson. You will also plant varieties of the same color in the same bed, as far as possible—this last to facilitate cutting and bunching the blooms. We are especially brought up against this proposition with the seedling varieties, of which there will be from a half dozen to a couple of hundred plants of each variety. To cut each color separate means going over the beds several times, and to cut them all at one time and sort out each color takes just about as long, and causes injury to the blooms from the extra handling.

Another thing to which considerable thought should be given is the color of each variety and the effect of the sunlight on it. For instance, it is safe to plant all white varieties where they will get the full sun in all its strength, as it insures greater purity in color. It would not be wise, however, to plant Mrs. Lawson where it would get the full sun, unless shading can be done conveniently without injuring other sorts. Better plant this on a north bench, where the light is subdued, as it will save the color and at the same time have a tendency to draw up the stems. All the light pink varieties should be placed similarly, to save the color. Practically none of them can bear the full glare of the sun during March and April without losing that pleasing glow in the color, if the blooms are allowed to develop on the plants. Enchantress and the Rose-pink sport are especially sensitive on this point.

The temperature will give you less concern. With the elimination of the Lawson tribe, which is gradually taking place on many places, we have left but few varieties which will not thrive in an average temperature of 50 to 52 degrees. Where Lawson is still grown it should, of course, be given the warm end, or a separate house.

In planting the modern carnation house but little thought need be given to the height of a variety, providing a whole bed is planted of one variety. Such varieties as Enchantress, Victory and White Perfection should have not less than three feet of space between the bed and the roof, while Lawson will do with a foot less, if need be. We are great believers in high and airy houses, as being far superior to the low roofed and narrow structures of old. They turn out a better product, and results are what count. A. F. J. B.

OTTO WITTBOLD'S BENCH.

The Wittbold family, at Chicago, is prolific in new ideas, particularly in the line of greenhouse construction. Most of the members of the family have taken their turn at the origination of something new in the equipment of retail or growing establishments. One brother built a boiler, one invented a plant stand for decorating, another a watering device and a concrete bench, and now the youngest brother, Otto Wittbold, who has charge of the plant at Edgebrook, has taken a turn and devised a concrete bench. He says that if anyone can find fault with his brother's bench, because of its one-piece construction, he will find all the points covered by coming to Edgebrook, for the second brother built his benches in sections. There is nothing like keeping things in the family.

The way Otto Wittbold builds his benches is shown in the accompanying illustrations, which are from pen and ink drawings showing the several pieces. No. 1 is the side angle piece. The height of the upper leg is eight inches and its thickness is one and a half inches. The width of the lower leg is four and a half inches and its thickness is one inch. The length of the piece may be anything from four to six feet. It is reinforced with expanded metal, which is an article known to the concrete trades and is nothing more than sheet steel which has been slashed by machinery and drawn out until it resembles the shape of chicken wire.

No. 2 in the illustration is the cross-piece, also reinforced with this expanded metal. The width is eight inches and the thickness one inch. The length is whatever width it is desired to make the bench. At the Wittbold establishment it is five feet eight inches.

No. 3 and No. 4 show the post. The side next the walk is perpendicular. The other three sides incline, so that the top of the post is four inches square and the bottom eight inches. The post is two feet high.

No. 5 shows how the parts go together. Mr. Wittbold says that with the soil and plants the weight serves to hold the side pieces so firmly that an ordinary man has not strength enough to pull one of the pieces out. Of course, if one did come out, that section of the bench would fall, as there are no other carriers.

Otto Wittbold claims economy in the construction of this bench. The quantity of cement consumed is not great, because all the parts except the posts are light. The expanded metal is cheap. The parts are made in a metal mold which Mr. Wittbold bought of the Noth-Sharp-Sailor Co., in the Monadnock block, Chicago, for making concrete blocks for other purposes. He also bought of this firm a concrete mixer which makes great economy in time. It was after using the outfit in other work that he discovered that the mold could be adjusted to make the several shapes required in bench construction.

ROSES

LEAF RUST ON KILLARNEY.

Enclosed please find Killarney rose leaves. Is this leaf spot or black spot? All other roses in the same house are doing fine. I spray them with copper solution to get rid of this. Is this right? If not, kindly advise a better remedy. My house is a three-quarter-span, with top and side ventilation, facing south. I keep both open day and night. Is that all right? A. S.

This trouble is not black spot, but one of the forms of leaf rust, and not especially dangerous. Copper solution is the best remedy known. This should be applied with a nozzle having a fine spray and every part of the leaves and stems should receive the spray. Once a week is often enough. RIBES.

REMEDY FOR MILDEW.

I would like to know of some inexpensive solution that I could procure at any drug store and which, when united with water and sprayed on the plants, would keep down mildew on roses under glass in summer. I do not want to use sulphur, as it spoils the color of the buds. L. N.

After a good deal of research and inquiries I cannot find a better remedy for mildew than the fumes of sulphur. Nor have I been able to find any agent that can be applied in the form of a spray that would be effective. This question has been so frequently discussed that if there had been any effective remedy of this nature it would not long remain unknown. RIBES.

OLD PLANTS AS AN ADV.

F. H. Kramer, Washington, D. C., made good use of the old bench plants from his greenhouses by giving them away at his retail store. The following notice handed out to the Washington papers brought a big crowd:

"Ten thousand rose bushes will be given away next Friday morning by F. H. Kramer, at his main store, 916 E street northwest. Included in the lot will be Golden Gate, Richmond, Bridesmaid, Bride and Ivory. Ten thousand of these bushes will be brought over from Mr. Kramer's hothouses in Anacostia, and at 7:30 o'clock Friday morning the distribution will begin.

"The rose bushes will be given to callers just for the asking—that is the only price Mr. Kramer has set on his roses. Children who come must have a note from their parents, because Mr. Kramer does not feel that he can otherwise accommodate the younger element."

SHREDDED CATTLE MANURE.

I would like the opinion of some of the large growers near Chicago as to the manurial value of shredded cattle manure. It is not much known here in the east, but we have trouble in handling natural fertilizers in the summer and are interested in the odorless product, which we understand is largely used by some of the growers in Chicago. A. D.

The pioneer user, and still probably the largest consumer, of shredded cattle manure for greenhouse use was Bassett & Washburn, Hinsdale, Ill. In October of last year the manufacturers of this product asked Bassett & Washburn for an expression of their opinion of the product and received the following reply:

"We took one car as a trial, then we gave you an order for two cars more and now we have just bought of you 300 tons. We gave your manure a good trial test as follows: We put 900 pounds on a bench 300 feet long and five and one-half feet wide, as a mulch on Beauties, and on the next bench, of exactly the same size, planted also with Beauties, we put 2,000 pounds of rough cattle manure.

After three days the rough manure had become all washed out, nothing being left but straw and dirt, while your shredded manure lasted ten to twelve days and is still doing work. In making manure water it is fully three to four times as strong as the rough manure. The advantages of its even quality and the easy and unobjectionable way of handling the manure, not a pound being wasted, makes it cheaper, in our opinion, than the rough manure which we can get for simply the cost of freight and loading."

Upon receipt of the above inquiry the REVIEW asked Mr. Washburn if he had anything to add, from further experience. His reply follows:

"We find it holds up to our letter given the Pulverized Manure Co. The main value lies in the use of this manure as a mulch. We are now using it in mixing up our soil and later on can tell better how it acts and also give some details regarding its cost in mixing with soil, compared to rough cattle manure."

OUTDOOR MUMS IN TENNESSEE.

I have a fine selection of chrysanthemum plants, growing in the garden under a frame. The frame will be boxed up on the north and west sides with matched flooring, and the south and east sides will be closed up with heavy duck curtains. The top will have an awning over it, attached so as to roll up and down and made of the same heavy ducking. I do not intend to box it up or do anything to it until cool nights appear. I have lately put about four inches of well rotted leaf-mold over the beds as a mulching, to keep the plants cool and damp during the hot weather of July and August. Do you think this would likely cause the plants to take mildew or rust? C. F. P.

Such a box as C. F. P. proposes should grow fairly good flowers, as I imagine there is little heavy frost in Tennessee until the mums are through flowering.

Eighteen-months-old Dorothy Perkins Rose.

A mulch of four inches at one time is considerable and the plants will need careful watering for a time. Half the depth would be much better, I think, though leaf-mold does not lie so closely as rotten manure.

The chief trouble will be that heavy storms will make the beds very wet and the mulch will prevent them from drying out as they should. I think if C. F. P. could fix the awning of duck now and run it over the plants during rains, that it would be of great advantage. Rust always appears in this section on plants grown outside, when we get wet weather in August. C. H. T.

REMEDY FOR WHITE FLY.

Please let me know what is a good remedy for white fly on mums, obconicas and other plants. I have used different kinds of tobacco products, with only partial success. J. F. F.

Tobacco does not seem strong enough to kill the white fly in the summer time, as the houses must be ventilated freely every day and the fly that is stupefied at night recovers again in the daytime.

Use the hydrocyanic acid gas so often recommended in the REVIEW for that particular insect and, with proper care, no serious results should follow to the plants. C. H. T.

BLACK FLY ON MUMS.

My mums are all full of a little black bug and I have tried several different remedies. I got rid of them by using To-bak-ine, but I had to use it so strong that it burned the plants. I should like to know if there is something that will kill the bugs without burning the plants. I am sending a leaf that has some on it, but the stems are just black with them.

I am just a beginner and have never seen these on mums before. W. T. G.

The bug is the black fly, which is the most common pest that affects the mum and, as a rule, is the easiest to dispose of. If W. T. G. will use tobacco dust of the brand supplied by good dealers, he will find it the cheapest and best thing to use. I have used nothing else for years and have never had a leaf injured by its use. A little experimenting will show how much is needed for the house, remembering that two or three consecutive smokings are far better than one heavy one. C. H. T.

TEMPERATURE FOR MUMS.

The temperature in my greenhouses, with the doors and the side and top vents open, and with the glass whitewashed, runs from 96 to 106 degrees every day. Is not that too hot to plant mums? I have mine in coldframes, in 3-inch pots. They are from four to six inches high. A. W.

While the temperature is certainly warm, it is not too hot to plant mums, providing the plants receive the proper moisture in the atmosphere and at the root. Spray them over several times during the day and get off the whitewash as soon as the weather cools off a little. With attention and by spending the time on the plants, I see no reason why A. W. should not produce good flowers. C. H. T.

DOROTHY PERKINS ROSE.

A. Mitting, of Santa Cruz, Cal., says he can endorse the judgment, published in the REVIEW July 9, awarding to Dorothy Perkins rose preëminence in its class. Mr. Mitting asserts that it is the finest climber for California and backs up his opinion by reference to the photograph reproduced herewith, which shows a plant of Dorothy Perkins from a cutting made only eighteen months previously. The scene is the office door of Mr. Mitting, at Santa Cruz.

The conditions in the vicinity of Santa Cruz, Cal., have been found well adapted to the growing of the gladiolus and a number of persons there are now engaged more or less extensively in the production of bulbs for the trade. A. Mitting sends the photograph reproduced herewith, of a patch he is growing for seed this season.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Charles Siegwart will build an addition to his greenhouses, located near the Old Frederick road.

NUTLEY, N. J.—William L. Jones is building an additional greenhouse, which he intends to use for growing smilax.

BOWLING GREEN, O.—Eric Rode has filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States district court, placing his liabilities at $6,101.92 and his assets at $5,558.80. The liabilities consist principally of promissory notes.

ASPARAGUS SPRENGERI.

I would like to know from some reader of the Review which is the proper method of growing Asparagus Sprengeri; for instance, old plants which have been benched one year and are too thick. How should they be handled? Would it be all right to take them out and put in fresh soil and give them more room? Also what temperature should they be grown in, and will they do well in a solid bed? In harvesting the crop, should they be cut or pulled? I met a man recently who always pulls each spray out from the roots and does not cut them. Is this good for the plants? M. R. K.

---

While transplanting old stock of Sprengeri gives good results, still we prefer to replant with nice young pot plants and grow right along in a temperature of 60 to 70 degrees. The more heat you give the faster they grow. A solid bed suits them admirably as far as growing is concerned, but you get much nicer sprays out of a hanging box or basket. It seems to make no difference to the plants whether you cut or pull the sprays. Albert F. Amling.

UNLOVELY PECKY CYPRESS.

Much has been said and published about pecky cypress, but so far nobody has told the florist plainly the truth about the appearance of it, and many people have refused shipments because they thought the lumber was rotten and unfit for use.

Pecky cypress is the poorest and worst looking lot of lumber you ever saw and at the first sight of it anybody not being acquainted with cypress would pronounce it unfit for anything but to build a fire with. The boards are full of holes and sometimes there are so many of these holes that the board is weakened until it breaks in handling, from its own weight. Such boards, of course, cannot be used and should be thrown out, but you must expect to get a few pieces of this kind when you buy a carload. The cavities in the lumber are filled with a dust-like substance that accumulated while the tree was growing, but these cavities, or holes, do not get any larger or increase in size after the tree is cut down. What caused the cavities, known as the "peck," scientists and lumbermen have been unable to find out, and it is not known whether they came about through the working of insects or through lack of nourishment when the tree was young. Whatever the cause, the fact remains that pecky cypress is full of the cavities and is a tough-looking lot of stuff to be called lumber.

You must expect to get lumber that looks to be absolutely rotten, but, as long as it is strong enough to hold up the soil in the benches, the more rotten it looks the longer it will last, says one of the authorities. The best boards are the ones that have a large number of cavities, for the "peck" is the thickest in the heart of the tree, and these boards are nearly always free of sap. The durability of pecky cypress cannot be questioned, for it has been used in trenches in New Orleans, La., for fifty years without decaying and will outlast any other lumber known. Pecky cypress is just as durable, if the right kind of pecky cypress, as the grade from which the greenhouse sashbars and construction material is made; it is superior to all other grades of cypress in durability, as all other grades have sap in them and sap will surely rot.

There is just one thing against pecky cypress and that is its strength. If you set your bench posts not over four feet apart (three feet six inches would be better) the lumber will be strong enough. Don't put any stock in any other grade of cypress for benches outside of pecky, as it will not prove to be the lumber you wanted. Pecky is the best thing for the purpose, but don't expect to get nice sound boards or you will be much disappointed. When you ask for prices, tell the firm you buy from to send a small sample of the lumber.

Any cypress lumber that can be sold for the price of pecky cypress, or for half again as much, is an inferior grade of cypress, as far as durability goes, and will not last.

LILIES FOR FALL BLOOMING.

Will some kind reader of the Review inform us as to the forcing of cold storage lilies, so as to have them in bloom the latter part of September and October? We have a small retail place and wish to have some white lilies for funeral work. What is the proper kind and a few points on treatment of same?

For flowering at the time you speak of, the several varieties of Lilium speciosum will be better for you than L. longiflorum or Harrisii. These lilies may be grown either in pots or the open ground. To insure a succession of flowers it will be as well to grow a few each way. The bulbs usually arrive here about the end of November. For outdoor culture select, if possible, a position where the plants can be afforded a little shade. Do not use any fresh manure when planting, and be sure no water stands in winter on the land. Plant eight to ten inches deep and give a mulch of leaves or strawy manure. During summer, a mulch of decayed manure is also of great benefit. Should the ground be frozen before your bulbs arrive, use a bar to remove the frozen surface. A better plan would be to spread some protective material over the place where the bulbs are to go, to exclude frost. We have planted out various lilies in December for some years and results have always been satisfactory. Spring planting I cannot recommend. These outdoor speciosum will, in New Hampshire, start blooming about the end of August and last until October. They are perfectly hardy and will last a number of years.

By potting or boxing a number of bulbs, keeping over winter in a coldframe covered with coarse manure, and growing along in a cool greenhouse after April, you can get a splendid lot of these lilies. They will come in during August and September and will give you finer and cleaner flowers than the outdoor stock. One great advantage of having them in pots or boxes is that you can move them to a cool place and retard them at will. Boxes six inches deep, a yard long and a foot wide will hold eighteen to twenty bulbs. If in pots, use three in a 7-inch and five in an 8-inch, rather than grow them in small pots. Feed liberally when the pots are filled with roots. Do not allow aphis to secure any foothold, and stake the shoots securely before the buds begin to weigh them down. In humid weather the flowers are liable to spot badly outdoors. If cut just as the first flowers open, they will expand in water and be cleaner in color than if exposed to outdoor conditions.

The most useful variety is L. speciosum album. If colored sorts are desired L. speciosum Melpomene, crimson spotted and margined white; roseum, white spotted rose, and rubrum, white heavily spotted crimson, are all desirable.

Should you, however, prefer to grow cold storage longiflorums, pot these at the end of May or in the first part of June. Use 5-inch pots for each bulb seven to nine inches in size. After potting, water well and stand on a bed of coal ashes in a coldframe. Cover the pots with a mulch of moss or strawy manure. Do not put on any sashes, but cover with board shutters. Tilt these at top and bottom to admit some air. Examine the plants occasionally. Do not water much until the pots are well filled with roots. Remove the mulch as growths appear and place on a bench in a light, sunny house, or under coldframe sash. Treat as you would lilies for Easter, forcing or retarding them as wanted.

RUST ON GLADIOLI.

Will you please tell me what to do with rust on gladioli? They seem to do nicely while growing, but just before they form the bloom they are attacked with rust, which keeps them from blooming. Some die immediately; others remain all summer in that condition, neither growing nor dying. Will Bordeaux mixture help them, and how strong should the mixture be made?

Last year I lost all the crop. I did not plant in the same ground this year. Is it necessary to tie them to a wire for support? I plant two and a half inches deep and some of them fall over.

H. M.

The rust which has attacked the stock of gladioli to which you refer is seldom found in our fields. Bulbs planted in heavy soil, which during a wet season is apt to hold too much moisture, and also bulbs planted in low, wet soil, will show inclination to rust, especially during a very hot season. I attribute, however, the most of this rusting to weakness in the vitality of the bulb, for inbred and chance seedlings are more affected than other stock, even in the best of soil.

I secured from Europe several years ago a quantity of bulbs of a very beautiful and expensive variety, which I gave the best of soil and conditions possible, but in three years I had hardly any of this variety left, owing to its being attacked by rust, which appeared just after the buds were well developed and ready to bloom—the same experience as H. M. has had. It was a singular coincidence, too, that the originator of this variety reported crop failure the same year, demonstrating to me that the vitality, and not the soil or weather conditions, was responsible.

Where we find a variety affected in this manner, unless we are positive it is due to climatic or soil conditions, we discard it entirely, no matter what its value may be. While Bordeaux mixture may to a certain extent help to check rust appearing on the gladiolus, yet I believe, although I have had no practical experience in the matter, that the relief would be only temporary.

To grow gladiolus bulbs successfully, sandy loam is quite essential, although they may be grown in heavier soil with varied success. The bulbs should be planted from three to four inches deep, according to the size of the bulb, and if so planted no supports will be necessary, except with some varieties which produce a very slim spike and extremely large flowers. ARTHUR COWEE.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The Trade's Exhibition.

Orders for space are still coming in; those since last report are the following:

| Exhibitor. | Sq. Feet. |
|---|---|
| Peters & Reed | 32 |
| Camp Conduit Co. | 180 |
| J. G. Neidinger | 175 |
| G. M. Garland Co. | 100 |
| Washington Iron Works | 50 |
| Ellwanger & Barry | 50 |
| American Florist Co. | 32 |

I have notified the Merchants' Dispatch people to have their different agents call on shippers whose names I will supply them, to see if these can be induced to get all their freight together in one car, or several cars, at the different cities, so that if possible all, or nearly all, freight will get to Niagara Falls on one day.

At Niagara Falls I have arranged with H. W. Anderson, a responsible teaming firm, to take care of all freight coming to the convention. This firm agrees to carry all freight from the railroads to the trade exhibition hall for 15 cents per cwt. All shippers will shortly be supplied from this office with uniformly printed tags giving shipping directions, etc. This, I think, will minimize the danger of delays or possible miscarriage.

Freight should in every case be prepaid, as this will avoid confusion and possible delay.

We have further arranged to cover all tables and benches used by exhibitors with either dark green cambric or, if preferred, white cotton goods. This will be done without extra charges.

CHAS H. KEITSCH, Supt.

HOTELS AT NIAGARA FALLS.

I have had a number of inquiries regarding hotels and their rates at Niagara Falls, so offer the following list of the better houses in that city:

Cataract and International (headquarters), American plan, $3.00 to $5.00.
Prospect House, American plan, $3.00 to $5.00.
Imperial Hotel, American plan, $2.50 to $3.50.
Temperance House, $2.00 and up.
Tower Hotel, American plan, $2.50 upwards.
Clifton Hotel, American plan, $2.50 upwards.
Kaltenbach, American plan, $3.00.
New Clifton House (Canadian side), $4.00 to $6.00.

J. ROWLAND CLOUDSLEY.

CINCINNATI TO NIAGARA FALLS

Inasmuch as through peculiar circumstances the Cincinnati delegation to the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls is able to take advantage of an excursion that is being run to that city, leaving here at the proper time and with a time limit of twelve days, we desire to have it known to all florists of this district that the Cincinnati florists extend to them a hearty welcome to join us and at the same time save money.

The Cincinnati delegation will leave Saturday, August 15, via C., H. & D., at 1:30 p. m. to Detroit, remaining there till Monday evening, when they will join the Detroit delegation, going by boat to Buffalo, thence by rail to the Falls. The round trip rate will be but $7. A stateroom on the boat will cost $2.50, and holds three persons. Inasmuch as staterooms on the boat will soon be at a premium, it is necessary that all those desiring to take advantage of this low rate communicate at once with E. G. Gillett, 114 East Third street, who has the matter in charge. Those not wishing to lay over in Detroit till Monday evening can leave Sunday evening just as well if due notice is given.

Cincinnati expects to have a large delegation, as everyone knows we are after the convention for 1909.

SHASTA DAISIES.

Please inform us what month is best for the planting of Shasta daisies. Is it better to put out plants or seed?

R. V.

By sowing seeds of Shasta daisy, Chrysanthemum Leucanthemum hybridum, now in a coldframe and transplanting to the open ground when sufficiently large to handle, you can secure quite good flowering plants for next summer. We have found that there is considerable variation in the seedlings. While the majority have large and finely formed flowers, there are a few inferior ones which will require discarding. By selecting a few of the best seedlings and propagating these by root division, you can secure just as fine types as the several named varieties on the market.

If you do not wish to trouble about raising the plants from seeds, they can be purchased from any dealer in hardy perennials, at a moderate price. If you get a good strain of Shasta daisy, it will prove useful for cutting in June and early July, also making a splendid subject for the herbaceous border. C. W.

ROOT LICE ON ASTERS.

While my asters look well, occasionally there is one showing injury, and I find small blue lice feeding on the roots. Will tobacco dust worked in around the roots do any good? I can apply it much more quickly than tobacco water. I have about 20,000 plants. L. J. B.

The life history of the blue louse found on aster roots does not appear to be known to entomologists, and remedial measures which will clear out the pest are not known. Plants attacked have a wilted, stunted appearance and, on being pulled up, the roots are found covered with masses of bluish colored lice in all stages of development. Change of ground is a necessity when once the pest appears. Newly broken up sod land will be less subject to attack than old ground.

With as many as 20,000 plants to look over, it will be a considerable task to apply tobacco water, but we have found this the best remedy so far. Tobacco dust scattered around each affected plant and worked into the soil helps to some extent, if the ground is dry, but to kill the pests entirely, use carbon bisulphide. Make a hole six inches deep with a pointed stick. Drop a little of the carbon in the hole and immediately cover the top. The fumes will speedily suffocate the lice, but, of course, unhatched eggs may make a second dose necessary.

OMAHA.

The Market.

Business is about the quietest we ever had. Stock is poor. Some young roses are coming in and asters are getting better right along.

Florists' Picnic.

The florists of Omaha and Council Bluffs held their picnic at Lake Manawa, Ia., July 23. The fine weather brought out the biggest gathering of florists and their families we ever had. A well selected program made the picnic interesting.

In the men's race the first prize was won by Roy Wilcox and the second by H. Meyer, both of Council Bluffs. The prizes consisted of a box of cigars for each. In the ladies' race the first prize, a box of candy, was won by Miss Gretchen Swoboda. In the boys' race the first prize was won by Henry G. Hess, the second by Fred Holman.

After the races the ladies and children were treated to the various entertainments on the grounds. At 6 o'clock over ninety were seated at the pavilion, where they all enjoyed a lunch and refreshments. At 7 o'clock all went across the beautiful Lake Manawa, where some went bathing and others danced. Some of the men bowled until a late hour and all seemed to have a good time, such as they never had before at any picnic.

Various Notes.

Mr. Wood, of Providence, R. I., passed through Omaha on his way to California.

G. Swoboda and family will leave for Colorado next week.

E. Hooge left July 15 for Europe, to visit his parents, whom he has not seen for about twenty-two years.

ALFALFA.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Last week brought its beneficial showers. The effect on parks and gardens and florists' outdoor stock and vegetables has been magical, and with a continuance of the present seasonable weather great harvests in every department of horticulture seem to be assured. Relief came in the nick of time. Another week of drought would have wrought incalculable damage.

The business in the cut flower wholesale section is not dead, but sleeping. Enterprising and optimistic members of the distributing department are renovating and beautifying their stores, evidently confident that the tide has turned and the future is bright. The boom, they say, should not wait for election returns. The great harvests of the west are beyond the danger point and, as one far-seeing prognosticator expressed it, nothing can stop the coming wave of prosperity.

As to the present, there are plenty of asters, water lilies and gladioli, and all of them have already reached summer prices. The creation of any general demand for anything is out of the question. The few orchids and Beauties that come in perfect find quick sale. All else are forced sales, except carnations, good stock of which is not to be had in quantity. Asters are rapidly improving in quality. The good effect of the thorough rains is also seen on the gladioli and sweet peas. Plenty of all kinds of lilies are to be had.

Various Notes.

In advance of the New York and New Jersey clam bake comes the celebration of the Cut Flower Exchange Saturday, August 1, at Witzel's Point, where, at 1 p. m., there will be a shore dinner, followed by games and dancing. There will be a large attendance. Messrs. Golsner, Hahn and Dorval are the committee. The grounds may be reached by trolley from the Thirty-fourth street New York ferry. This is the second annual outing of the growers who do business in the Coogan building.

George Saltford's wholesale store was entered by burglars late Friday night, July 24. The enterprising burglar forced open an 8-inch panel at the side of the store and slid through the aperture. He secured all the cash and $15 worth of postage stamps, and all the private papers belonging to Mr. Saltford, including checks, insurance papers, wills and other documents of value only to himself and for the recovery of which he will gladly pay a reasonable reward to the gentleman who appropriated them. Strange thing, this stealing from a wholesale florist in the summer. So short-sighted.

Clarence Saltford and wife returned July 24 from their outing in the wilds of New Jersey's mountains.

Jos. Vocke, with W. H. Siebrecht, and family returned July 25 from a two weeks' holiday at Cold Spring Harbor.

Joseph Levy and family are back from a month at Luzerne, N. Y., and John Seligman and wife left July 25 for Lexington, in Sullivan county.

Mrs. John Nash and son, Aubrey, are spending three months at their old home in London, England. Meantime Mr. Nash follows the good old English week end custom, at Sea Cliff, L. I.

Lewis Miller, with L. M. Noe, is back from a two weeks' sojourn at the old homestead in Morris county, New Jersey.

Horace Froment's big force are happy. James Coyle and wife will be at Duncan Villa, South Cairo, until August 10. George Orth has spent a month at Kingston. James Maloney, bookkeeper, is at Delaware Water Gap. Phil. Ditzenberger goes August 8 to Asbury Park and on the same date Mr. Froment departs for green pastures and still waters in the Catskills.

Mrs. and Miss Berger, of H. H. Berger & Co., returned from their two months' European trip Thursday, July 23.

Arthur Hunt, of Langjahr's, has been two weeks at Ridgefield, Conn.

Miss Grace Miller, daughter of W. H. Miller, with A. L. Young & Co., is at Belmar, N. J.

Mr. Devoy, the violet grower of Poughkeepsie, was a recent visitor.

President F. H. Traendly will be at Niagara Falls this week, and with ex-President Kasting and others will put the finishing touches on arrangements for the comfort and enjoyment of the conventionists. John Young, secretary of the transportation committee, would appreciate immediate assurance from all who intend to go in the New York special train at 10 a. m., Monday, August 17. Write him without delay.

The loss of L. Wertheimer & Co., the Japanese importers, of 39 Barclay street, by water because of the fire above their store, was heavy. This firm is best known to florists by its dissemination of the Alpha and Angelus bells. These bells were the invention of B. Rosens, now on West Twenty-ninth street.

McHutchison & Co. are shipping large quantities of seedling ferns. C. B. Knickman, of this house, has postponed his European trip until August 15.

Four years ago the Yuess Gardens were established at Newburg by R. H. Cathcart, Sr. Ten acres will be devoted to nursery stock and already 25,000 square feet of glass are utilized in growing roses, carnations and a general line of palms, ferns and plants for the retail trade. The greenhouses were built by Mitchell, of Poughkeepsie, and are thoroughly up-to-date. Bride, Maid and Richmond are the varieties of roses grown, and all the new carnations, as well as a complete line of herbaceous stock. Donald Cameron, a veteran grower, is in charge of the greenhouse department. R. H. Cathcart, Jr., is president of the company. The firm has two stores in the city, the largest on Water street, where the whole three-story building is to be utilized. In the wholesale department, of which Walter Mott is manager, bulbs, plants and seeds will be handled extensively and a large catalogue trade established. Travelers will be employed and no expense spared to build and increase the business. A general line of nursery stock will be imported this fall. Mr. Mott has moved his family to Newburg. A. M. Henshaw has handled the company's surplus in New York. Mr. Cathcart, Sr., is one of the leading and wealthy citizens of Newburg and a resident of the city for a quarter of a century.

Harry Bunyard, with A. T. Boddington, is on a western trip.

Julius Roehrs and the Lord & Burnham Co. are among those who have engaged space for exhibits at the S. A. F. convention.

L. W. C. Tuthill and wife are holidaying in New England.

Alex. J. Guttman, who has been severely ill for a week, from ptomaine poisoning, is convalescing.

Weigel & Ujfalussy report a good trade at their new store, 136 West Twenty-eighth street. They succeeded Emil Steffens, a supply house established over forty years ago, and have issued a new catalogue.

Congratulations are due E. McKay Whiting, of the Florists' Board of Trade, who lately appropriated one of Chicago's fair daughters, and Michael Ford, of Ford Bros., who, with Mrs. Ford, a charming bride from the city of churches, has just returned from a honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls and Canada.

The New York and New Jersey Association of Plant Growers has settled upon September 15 as the date of its second outing this season. It will be a clam bake at Whitestone, L. I.

The Johnson brothers, of the Johnson Heating Co., are enjoying a brief holiday in the Adirondacks.

Bowling.

The interest in the bowling club increases as the convention approaches. Many visitors attend the strenuous contests weekly. Among the official visitors last Friday were the secretary of the New York Florists' Club and the president of the S. A. F. The team to represent New York at Buffalo has not yet been completed. Three early games of July 24 were:

OBITUARY.

Albert Galloway.

Albert Galloway, one of the best known carnation growers in the vicinity of San Francisco, died at his home in Fruitvale, Cal., July 12. He was a native of England and had resided in California for the last ten years. His wife died about two years ago and he was laid beside her in Holy Cross cemetery, July 16. Mr. Galloway was 40 years of age and had no family. He leaves property interests in Fruitvale valued at $15,000.

John A. McCann.

John A. McCann, of Nashville, Tenn., who has been connected with the Lischey Nursery and Greenhouse for the last sixteen years, died July 22 at the home of his son, F. S. McCann, 708 John street, Birmingham, Ala. Mr. McCann was taken suddenly ill while on a short visit to his son, and was not able to overcome the attack. He died in a short time after he was taken sick. Mr. McCann was originally from Williamson county, where he had many friends, who will regret very much his sudden death. He is survived by two sons, F. S. McCann, of Birmingham, and James McCann, who is with the United States army now in Cuba. The funeral services and interment took place in Birmingham July 24.

---

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.—The Herman Bros. Co. has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $25,000. Fred L. Herman, Oscar H. Herman, Louise Herman, Bertha Gardiner and Pauline Herman are members of the company.

LOWELLVILLE, O.—The Darrow Gardening Co. has received a large boiler, which will be added to the heating apparatus at the greenhouses west of town. When installed it will be one of the most complete of its kind in the Mahoning valley.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

Charles H. Keitsch says that thus far travel to Niagara Falls has been rather light this season and the members of the S. A. F. need have little fear of overcrowding.

Field-grown carnation plants promise to be excellent property again this season, especially in the east, where the weather has been dry. Western growers who have a surplus will be called on to ship quantities to less favored districts.

When you have a kick to make, put it in civil language. Many a complaint fails of getting what is wanted simply because the language used angers the recipient of the letter and prevents an adjustment which would otherwise be willingly and promptly made.

SWEET PEAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Will you kindly advise me as to the best season to plant sweet peas and the best white varieties for indoors, to bloom about Christmas? C. J. P.

Sow on or about September 1. With a night temperature of 45 to 48 degrees, they will be in good crop for Christmas. The favorite white forcing variety is Mont Blanc, but two of Mr. Zvolanek's varieties, Watchung and Florence Denzer, are good. The latter resembles Mont Blanc closely, but Watchung is somewhat dwarfer in habit and will bloom ten days to a fortnight earlier.
C. W.

THE MARKET FOR CYPRESS.

The cypress trade is quiet, but prices are on an average $1 a thousand better than the low mark, perhaps more, and no effort is being made to unload stock on the large distributing markets. In fact, Chicago and New York are receiving little cypress and prices are responding to the shortage of stock. Factory demand is increasing and another factor which enters into the situation is the shortage of many items and the generally broken condition of mill stocks. The orders placed with the mills continue to call for immediate shipment.—American Lumberman.

PRICE OF GLASS.

The Chicago office of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Co. makes the following statement as to the advance in the price of glass referred to in the Review of July 16:

During the last ten days the window glass manufacturers have made two changes in their selling discounts that cover about 20 per cent of an increase in greenhouse glass. Conditions this year are rather peculiar, from the fact that in former years the hand-blown manufacturers were able to carry from 10,000 to 15,000 boxes in stock after closing down, but financial conditions changed all this so that the present stocks in the hands of the several manufacturers are lower by far than they ever have been before. Greenhouse glass is still cheap as compared with prices of last year, and with any kind of a revival in business (and we are looking forward to it), we believe there is still a chance to save some money for those who contemplate building this fall.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

W. N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill., registers Carnation Greenwood, parentage seedlings on both sides; color shell pink; size of flower averages three and one-half inches; an unusually finely formed flower, high built bloom; long, heavy, stiff stems; not so free as some smaller varieties, but it is believed the extra quality will make up for it; continuous bloomer; moderate grower, in habit a little inclined to be straggly.

Mr. Rudd also registers Carnation Mrs. J. C. Vaughan, parentage seedling cross on both sides; Daybreak, Scott and Enchantress blood in it; color white; size of flower averages three and one-half inches; growth vigorous and branching freely; early, free and continuous bloomer; stem long, stiff and wiry; equal to the best standard variety as regards non-bursting; a bold, well-formed flower, with good substance; keeping and shipping qualities as good as the best.
Albert M. Herr, Sec'y.

PROPAGATING FICUS ELASTICA.

In looking over a recent issue of the Review, I notice an article on the propagation of Ficus elastica from cuttings.

I wish to state that a much easier way for me is to grow them from the leaves. I do not know whether it is generally known that they can be successfully grown in this way, and I have never noticed any reference to it as a method of increasing this plant. In my case it was purely an accident that caused me to try it. I have some forty odd plants that I have grown from three small leaves. I have them from half an inch to eight inches in height, and all good, thrifty plants.

My method is to take matured leaves from the bottom of the plant—under leaves—and lay them flat in the bench, covering them half an inch deep, in the sunlight, and keeping them moist. In three or four weeks the little plants will appear all around the outer edge of the leaf, from which they can be cut off and potted after they are half an inch to an inch high.

I am simply giving this for what it may be worth to those who may not know of this method.
A. D. Zimmerman.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business continues about on the usual summer level. There are a few houses which report greater activities than last year, but a balance is struck by the houses which say things are not quite up. The difference appears to lie in the shipping trade done. Those houses which cater especially to the shipping demand, and which made provisions for summer supplies of good stock, are being repaid for their trouble; shipping is good, rather better than ever before in the summer, but city trade is largely funeral work of the cheaper class.

The feature of the market this week is the sudden and almost total disappearance of carnations; it appears the growers are, almost to the last one, replanting their houses. The result has been that there is a marked increase in the call for carnations from outside the city, with few available to meet the demand. The city buyers do not ask for carnations, because asters are so abundant and so cheap that they are preferred to carnations. One large grower says he will cut no more carnations until October.

There has been an increase in the supply of Beauties and the quality also has improved. As the young stock gains strength, longer stems are available and the most critical buyer can now be pleased with the Beauties available in quantity. Killarney is giving an excellent crop for many growers, but it is the most popular rose at this date and sells well. Some first-class Kaiserin also are seen and are in good demand, but Bride and Maid are small and not in request when other varieties are available. There is little demand for red or yellow roses.

Asters cleaned up in first-class style until July 27, which was the first day the wholesalers had any surplus. The quality is good and the supply from now on promises to be equal to the capacity of the market. Sweet peas are practically out of it; there still are a number of shippers, but the quality has deteriorated and they will see their end shortly.

The growers of Easter lilies ought to figure out some better program. Not many days ago orders for lilies could not be filled at any price, while now the supply is so great that prices are lower than they should be. The trouble comes in that there is a break between crops, and all growers seem to be either cutting or off crop at once. There continue to be good supplies of auratum, and rubrum and album have been added to the list.

Gladioli are coming in heavily. America and Augusta sell well, considering the oversupply, but the common varieties are hard to dispose of at any price. Much of the stock is poor.

There is little demand for green goods, other than ferns and galax, and the growers of smilax and asparagus strings would be glad to see a few good orders for decorations.

Various Notes.

August Poehlmann is spending a few days at boyhood scenes in Milwaukee. It also is vacation time at the city store. George Poehlmann returned Monday from a week's rest, and O. W. Freese is rejuvenating this week.

Zech & Mann have a grower who is sending in some specially good Maids.

Poehlmann Bros Co. is cutting a heavy crop of Killarney and says the shipping business is excellent.

Mrs. Marshall Field rose is making a splendid record this summer for Peter Reinberg. They are cutting about as much Mrs. Field as all other varieties combined.

Percy Jones says that he sold the last of the peonies for Klehm's Nurseries July 29; last year the supply held out to August 25.

C. M. Dickinson, of E. H. Hunt's, is expected home from Pelican Lake July 30. He would have returned before but for the illness of his son, Donald, who took the family vacation time for his measles.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has added Rudbeckia Golden Glow and dahlias to its list of seasonable stock.

George Reinberg has no summer cooling facilities at his greenhouses, so he now sends the cut to the city store at 10 a. m. and 5 p. m., as soon as made, to take advantage of the fine ice-box facilities there.

Joseph Briggs, who is one of the old-time florists, but now in the catering business, appears in the market occasionally when his order also includes the flowers.

A. C. Kohlbrand, of E. C. Amling, has returned from a fishing expedition to Alden, Mich.

Max Ringier, of the staff of the Kennicott Bros. Co., is on duty after his annual vacation. This house is now receiving large shipments of album and rubrum lilies, in addition to auratum.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting the heaviest crop of summer Beauties in their history. Mr. Washburn says it is more than 2,000 flowers per day.

The Florists' Club cleaned up about $235 on its annual picnic this year.

The A. L. Randall Co. is receiving large consignments of cut blooms of Lilium Philippense from the Cushman Gladiolus Co., at Sylvania, O. This lily is splendidly adapted to growing on a florist's home grounds for use in making up designs, etc., but it is not specially liked in the wholesale cut flower market, where much of the stock must be reshipped. It does not open well if cut in the bud state.

The Budlong family is again summering in cottages at Lake Geneva. Mrs. J. A. Budlong and her daughters and grandchildren are there permanently, and A. H. Budlong and P. C. Schupp go up before the week end.

Frank Johnson, of the A. L. Randall Co. force, is taking his summer holiday this week.

L. P. Walz, who is now in business at Seattle, Wash., sends Chicago friends blooms of a new, large fringed daisy that originated on his place three years ago. He says it is hardy and has all the good qualities of the other varieties and he expects to put the stock on the market soon. He makes bride's bouquets of the daisy for $10 and finds they give excellent satisfaction.

It is reported that our old friend of the Masonic Temple, T. Mosconosotes, has opened a retail flower store at Polk and California streets, San Francisco. He has cut his business name to Mosco, just as he was called in this market.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., was in town last week, with a big line of samples at the Great Northern hotel. He was working toward Niagara Falls from a trip through the south and said business had been good right along, practically everyone giving some sort of an order.

The Pittsburg Plate Glass Co., during the last two weeks, has secured several orders ranging from 1,000 to 1,500 boxes each.

Vaughan & Sperry say the growers are all trying the shredded cattle manure, but that sheep manure is, in the firm's present opinion, the best stuff.

Wietor Bros. are cutting from new stock from about everything on the place except carnations, and the place of carnations is filled by asters, of which they have a big field again this year.

Among the week's visitors are Mrs. Grandbury, of the W. J. Brown Floral Co., Jackson, Miss., and L. J. Becker, Peoria; J. R. Fotheringham, Tarrytown.

PEORIA, ILL.

John Stroerr, who has been employed by James C. Murray at the store, has resigned and accepted a position as foreman with Hugo Rudolph, of Manitowoc, Wis. Mr. Stroerr is one of Peoria's boys and has made lots of friends, who regret having him leave. They all wish him success.

Alex Alexander, of Pekin, Ill., has accepted a position as foreman at J. C. Murray's greenhouse and will begin work there August 1. Mr. Murray reports that the aster blight has ruined his crop of asters.

Everybody is busy repairing and replanting. B.

Mr. Mason, who has been acting as foreman at the J. C. Murray greenhouses for the last two years, has moved to Kansas City, where he will engage in business with a cut flower establishment of that place.

One of the finest beds of Begonia Gloire De Lorraine that has ever come under our observation was shown us at D. U. Augspurger & Sons. The plants were all well branched and healthy-looking, with that polished, soft green leaf so peculiar to this favorite begonia.

D. U. Augspurger, senior member of the firm of D. U. Augspurger & Sons, was a business caller at Bloomington, Ill., last week.

Mr. Dysinger, representing Ionia flower pot manufacturers, called on the Peoria florists last week.

J. C. Murray has planted a large bed of Boston ferns. He also has a nice looking lot of chrysanthemums.

A. M. Augspurger has returned from the north, where he disposed of an immense lot of ferns and other plants. H. C. R.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

In looking over the flower market we find the supply largely exceeds the demand. There is little fancy stock of any kind coming in and little of this grade of stock is expected before the last of next month, especially in roses and carnations. The market is mostly made up now of asters, which are plentiful, and with any kind of business in funeral work should sell well, but even a lot of these are being dumped. Gladioli have been a glut and sold as low as $1 per hundred stalks in assorted colors.

A fair number of roses are coming in. White and pink Cochet, at Kuehn's, are selling better than Bride and Maid. A nice lot of Killarney were seen at Berning's July 27. Beauties are selling fairly well when good. Carnations are all to the bad at present. A fair lot of Enchantress were being looked over at Smith's July 27.

Hardy hydrangeas, tuberose stalks, good valley and smilax, also a lot of outdoor truck, made up the daily market last week. In retail circles it is reported as dull all of the week.

Various Notes.

Leonard Herdt, one of our South Broadway florists, is traveling in Europe and expects to return August 15.

Edward Buechel, manager of the Riessen Floral Co., is known to be one of the best amateur painters in the city. Some of his water color paintings have been highly commended by lovers of art in this line.

Walter Retzer, of the St. Louis Seed Co., took a northern trip for his vacation.

Mr. Boucker, who has quite a plant on Marcus avenue, and grows a lot of fancy carnations for the local trade, says he had a successful season and has read the REVIEW from its first number.

A. G. Greiner, our cactus grower, reports that he has shipped a lot of large orders for cacti this year.

Souvenir postals from Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Weber, Vincent Gorley and Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Klockenkemper, who are traveling in Europe, say they are having a great time on the other side of the big pond.

Miss Clara Holtzman, of Young's, is spending a two weeks' vacation on a trip to California.

Fred Williams has taken the position at Berning's vacated by Frank Dwyer.

William C. Smith contemplates a trip to his old home at Milwaukee early next month. Now that Will Osseck is home, Mr. Smith will have more time to spare.

Charles Kuehn will spend his vacation with his mother and father in Detroit. The trip will be made before or after the S. A. F. convention.

George Waldbart has finished repainting his place and has added to his front on the north with a store room. The front will be used for showing plants.

Henry Riessen says he was not surprised at his wife winning the bird and cage in the ladies' race at the picnic, as she is a fast runner, and he speaks from experience. The prize was deliv-

The nineteenth annual banquet to gardeners, florists and nurserymen provided for in the will of Henry Shaw will take place at the Mercantile Club, August 12. Delegates to the Apple Growers' Congress, which meets here August 11 and 12, will be guests of the director at the banquet. The decorations will be in charge of J. W. Dunford.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning are as yet undecided as to where they will spend their vacation, but a trip will be made next month.

Al Gumz, of Angermueller's, since his return from his vacation has taken to letter writing, something unusual for Al to do.

The Henry Shaw medal, value $25, will be again offered at the fall flower show of the St. Louis Horticultural Society. This medal was first brought out by the board of trustees of the Missouri Botanical Garden in 1893, and has been offered every year since, when a flower show was held. Mr. Shaw provided that the judges making awards at such exhibitions shall certify that said medal is awarded for a plant of decided merit for cultivation, not previously an article of North American commerce and introduced to such commerce by the exhibitor during the year in which said award is made. There are numerous plants worthy of this medal introduced into American trade each year. Any detailed information will gladly be furnished by Prof. William Trelease, director of the Missouri Botanical Garden, St. Louis. J. J. B.

Headquarters for Lilium Harrisii
Just received in extra fine condition, MICHELL'S Special Brand Lilium Harrisii
By special brand, we mean lilies that have been grown, harvested and packed especially for us. They are the cream of the Bermuda Lily crop, being a selection of the most uniform bulbs, gathered in districts where the smallest amount (if any) of disease exists. Every year the florists are making greater demands for this particular strain and we advise all to order early.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Vacations are in order, and there is plenty of time to enjoy the same. The remaining help at the stores is being kept fairly busy with funeral work and once in a while a wedding order breaks in.

Stock is a little more plentiful than last week, for the reason that more asters are coming in, thereby easing up a little on the other flowers. The roses are fairly good. La Detroit and Kaiserin are the best. Carnations are gone. Sweet peas and asters are about the best flowers available. In former years most of the asters on this market came in from Mount Clemens, but this year other neighboring towns had to be called on, as asters are not as plentiful in the Bath City. Besides the above stock there is phlox, snapdragon, larkspur, Golden Glow, etc. Green of all kinds is plentiful.

Club Picnic.

The Detroit Florists' Club held the annual outing July 27 at Bois Blanc island, a beautiful spot some twenty miles from Detroit. The largest part of the crowd left on the early boat. The weather, which is of so much importance in an event of this kind, was ideal. The outing was the most successful ever held and the attendance exceeded other years by far.

Of course the most important event of the day was the ball game, between the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange and the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House teams. The latter won by a score of 8 to 3. The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange team has been winning all the honors so far and seems to have become a little too confident. Louis Charvat, of the winning side, played excellent ball from the first to the last inning. Hubert Pierce, the captain, was also in good trim. The teams were evenly matched and in the beginning of the game honors were pretty evenly divided, but in the sixth inning the Detroit team broke away from the opposite side.

The tug of war between the east side and west side teams was about the most evenly matched of any ever seen on the island. For about five minutes both sides toed the line and then the west siders seemed to weaken. This gave the east side team, under Captain J. F. Sullivan, its opportunity to win.

The balance of the program was car-

The Market.

Flowers are about as scarce as they ever get at any season of the year. After the orders are filled there is not a flower left in the wholesale houses; even the smallest and those of the poorest quality find a ready sale and at good prices. Prices are averaging better than they did even in mid-season. There are no carnations. Asters are coming well, but still not nearly enough to take care of the demand. Roses from new stock are coming in and the quality is good. They sell on sight and bring good prices. Gladioli are good property and sweet peas are sought after, even though they are very short-stemmed.

New green galax is on hand and there is plenty of bronze on cold storage as yet. Ferns and other green goods are in good supply and the demand is good.

Various Notes.

Geo. E. Tromey, who bought out W. K. Partridge's retail store last week, has sold his interest to the Bletcher Floral Co., which has already taken over the business. Mr. Bletcher was formerly in the employ of Mr. Partridge, but for the last year has been with Julius Baer. He is noted for the high grade of the work which he turns out and we predict success for the new firm.

C. E. Critchell's face is wreathed with smiles. It is a boy, and papa is supremely happy.

Coulthard & Pogue, who bought out Huntsman & Co.'s store at 609 Walnut street, have remodeled the entire store and it is now bright and clean and well equipped for the beginning of business in the fall.

The florists' outing July 23 was a decided success and a great crowd turned out. There was something doing all of the time and all enjoyed themselves to the utmost.

Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion, Ind., has accepted the position at the soldiers' home in Tennessee.

Henry Lodder, of Hamilton, O., is spending a few weeks at West Baden, Ind.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The cut flower business has reached its lowest summer level. There is not enough stock coming into the market to keep the wholesale houses busy, but quite enough, were quality not considered, to satisfy all demands. Quality, however, is considered more and more, and the quality of much of the stock coming into the market is not satisfactory to the critical buyer. As a result, special orders require special effort to fill them properly, and a few special orders will stir the placid summer season of the wholesale market into something approaching a ripple of life.

Asters are much more plentiful than a week ago, but the quality of the asters grown in and near Philadelphia is not such that we like to point them out with pride to our New York cousins. A few select blooms are coming in from a distance, notably of the variety Ostrich Plume, described before in this column, and the Pink Ostrich Plume, a sister sort of refreshingly lively color. Gladioli furnish us this week with a soft pink variety, named May, that can be had in quantity, and commands attention from the best buyers. The commoner sorts are more plentiful and lower in price.

Kaiserin roses are in crop. They are very nice indeed. Killarney from down east has reappeared, a stride in advance of the locally grown stock.

Valley continues an important factor in funeral work and in choice orders, but cattleyas have decreased so markedly in quantity as to be unobtainable at times. Carnations, gathered from old plants still in the houses and from the young stock in the field, cannot together muster enough force to form a corporal's guard, but such as there are appear to be in demand. Of the smaller outdoor flowers, some have improved with the rain and some have not. Golden Glow has made its appearance in quantity. Water lilies continue plentiful.

It is Brand-new.

It was suggested to Phil that Robert Kift had a beautiful photograph of an ivy cross decorated with a bunch of American Beauties tied with Beauty ribbon. It was really worth seeing. So to Mr. Kift's shop Phil straightway repaired, bent on seeing and securing that photograph for the benefit of the Review readers. Now, Mr. Kift is himself a writer of high renown, but Phil argued that inasmuch as Mr. Kift is a modest man, he might possess that Beauty photograph for many moons before his friends knew it. Mr. Kift was cordial, and, like Barcus, willin', but there was a difficulty. The Beauty photograph on the ivy cross was so firmly moored as to be unobtainable, but it often happens that when you go for one thing you get another. The great thing is to keep going.

In this case Phil, who was rambling about, heard Mr. Kift say: "It is brand-new," and saw him standing in front of a table covered with ferns in tiny conservatories, with a look of pride on his face. "Talk about them," Phil commanded, and Mr. Kift obediently explained that these tiny conservatories or oval-shaped glass bowls, inverted, were intended to keep off the air and at the same time give an unobstructed view of the plant underneath. Fish bowls are somewhat similar in general appearance, but they are better suited for tiny aquariums or for partridge berry bowls, so often seen in the shops. Mr. Kift's idea is to plant a single fern in a little glass saucer made to fit the bowl, which is turned upside down on top of it. He is experimenting with the close saucer and with the saucer with air holes, as seen in a lamp, but has not yet decided which is better suited for growing purposes. Mr. Kift's fern bowl is very attractive, and seems well adapted to its purpose. The ferns were uniformly healthy and could be seen to advantage.

Seashore Effects.

More attention is being paid to planting at the seashore resorts this season than ever before. Many of them were formerly content with a little grass plot around a few favored hotels or cottages, never dreaming of aspiring to the luxuriance of flower and foliage seen at Newport and a few of the more fashionable resorts. This season marks a decided advance in planting. I mean by this that planting, intelligent planting, is spread over a broader area than ever before. I was interested in the planting seen on a flying visit to one of the Rhode Island resorts by the sea. A colony of people from St. Louis had laid out a tract of ground on which they built a score of so-called shoreby cottages, and a club house. The planting in front of this park was composed entirely of Wichuraiana hybrid roses, in several varieties, backed by Yucca filamentosa. Both the roses and the yucca were in full bloom the third week in July and presented a really beautiful appearance. The former were trained upright, forming a dense hedge about two and a half feet in height, which was covered with pink and white blooms. Another pretty feature here was the boxes covered with birch bark and filled with scarlet geraniums, used on some of the private summer houses overlooking the jetties or piers.

Eugene Bernheimer says that the Florex Gardens have the extensions to the two carnation houses completed and planted with carnations. These plants have all been bench grown, close together, and are now given their proper distance for the coming season. One section of one of these smaller houses is planted with American Beauties, the idea being to propagate in this section largely from the plants now in it, a different section being used for carnation propagation. Mr. Bernheimer adds that the same varieties will be grown next season as were grown last year, namely, Winsor, Enchantress, Beacon, Boston Market and Queen.

ANTIRRHINUMS FOR WINTER.

I want to grow a few hundred antirrhinums next winter and have plants in 2½-inch pots, also some in the field which have been pinched back and are large and bushy, all from seed sown in March. Can I use these, or will it be necessary to make another sowing of seed? E. C. B.

The plants you have will answer well. Give those in 2½-inch pots a shift into 4-inch. If you want an early crop of flowers and have the necessary bench space, plant them out about September 1. The plants in the field will also give you good returns. Our finest spikes have been obtained from stock lifted in this way. It is not necessary to have any ball of earth attached to these, but keep all possible roots intact. A light shade until they become established will be of assistance. The field plants, having been pinched back, will send up more shoots than you will require. Rub out all the weakest if you want first-class spikes.

C. W.

SWEET PEAS FOR THANKSGIVING.

When should I plant sweet peas for Thanksgiving blooming? How many rows to a bench, how close together for the rows, and what kind of trellis should be used? R. E. G.

To have your sweet peas in full crop for Thanksgiving, sow on or about August 10. The rows should not be nearer than four feet apart and, if your house is high and of good width, it is better to allow five feet. If you contrive to run your rows in line with the supports of the house, a good plan is to run lines of stout twine a foot apart the length of the house and use upright strings of soft white twine. Wire netting we cannot recommend, while brush of any kind causes too much shade. The vines will need looking after every few days. Strings to hold them in place should never be tightly fastened. About two inches apart for individual plants is sufficiently thick. If the seedlings are thicker than this, have courage to thin them if you want fine flowers. The best winter blooming varieties are Christmas Pink or Earliest of All, pink and white, and Mont Blanc, pure white. C. W.

SHAW'S POND LILIES.

The lily ponds of Walter B. Shaw, at Kenilworth, D. C., are not only a profitable commercial enterprise, but they constitute one of the interesting sights in the vicinity of the national capital.

Fifteen years ago Mr. Shaw, who is a Civil war veteran, was working in the treasury department at Washington. He had a little place out in Kenilworth, about a quarter of a mile from the marsh along the Anacostia river.

This marsh is full of spatter dock, a kind of poor relation of the regular water lily. But Mr. Shaw had been born and brought up in Maine, where real water lilies grow in all the ponds, and these spatter docks were just enough like the genuine article to make him wonder why that genuine article was so conspicuously absent.

So he began experimenting by digging a little pond, about ten feet square, in the oozy bank of the marsh, and there he planted a few roots of wild water lilies that had been sent to him from friends in Maine. One by one other ponds were dug by Mr. Shaw and expensive cultivated varieties were bought and planted. Then he began to experiment by hybridizing to produce entirely new lilies. Now all his time is given to his lilies. His one little pond has grown to nine big ponds, from which he can pick more than 1,500 lilies daily. And instead of one variety, and that one uncultivated, he can now show more than a score. At least six of these are new and distinct varieties which he himself has produced and named.

At the Shaw ponds picking begins as early as there is enough daylight for the pickers in their flat-bottomed boats to discover the new buds which have just reached the surface. If these buds were not picked they would probably open later that morning. But as soon as they

IMPATIENS SULTANI.

Kindly advise me as to the trouble with my Impatiens Sultani; a slip of which I inclose. The trouble appeared soon after the purchase of a couple of plants, and is spreading. They are grown in a cool, open and somewhat shaded house. R. P.

The conditions under which your plants are growing would seem to be all right. We have had no trouble of this sort on plants raised from seed, which is the best method of propagation, but on rooted cuttings bacteria similar to those on the specimen forwarded often appear. Plants propagated by the latter method seem to lack the vitality of seedlings. Throw away all affected stock, only retaining the most vigorous. Give the plants a moderate amount of sunlight and avoid wetting them overhead any more than is necessary. Blow some air-slaked lime over them through powder bellows, as a remedial measure. C. W.

Inspecting California Seed Crops in June.

THOSE who had a surplus of longiflorums of last year's crop, and stored them, have not yet succeeded in cleaning up, but the reported shortage in larger sizes of pure Harrisii gives them renewed hope of an early market.

H. A. BUNYARD, with A. T. Boddington, New York, states that his firm has been advised to expect not over fifty per cent total delivery of 7 to 9 and 9 to 11 pure Harrisii; 5 to 7, Boddington's growers in Bermuda say, will be delivered in full.

D'ALCORN & SONS, Portsmouth, Va., have received an order to ship 100,000 bulbs to Holland! We think this augurs well for American grown bulbs, especially as many tons are also being shipped from this country to Guernsey and England, in spite of the freight being $25 per ton.

THE Stoecker Seed Co., Peoria, Ill., has been incorporated by L. F. Stoecker, K. Stoecker, N. W. Stoecker and Ernie Nuzicker, with $30,000 authorized capital stock. L. F. Stoecker has been the head of the Weber Seed Co. for the last six years. A general wholesale and retail business will be transacted at the old Weber headquarters, 117 south Washington street.

THERE are varying reports as to the condition of corn in Nebraska, some saying it is fine and others poor. An observer who crossed the state says the general condition is fair, some fields being good and others spotty—too much rain for the low lands—and the crop on the average not as far along as it should be at this date. The same reporter says he found corn in Iowa better than in Nebraska.

J. A. SHELTON and Thomas Shelton, of the Southwestern Seed Co., Fayette, Ark., have recently purchased of W. B. Rees his beautiful suburban home. This is an 11-acre plot, lying just outside the city limits, along the Fayette and Springdale road. The Messrs. Shelton intend to enlarge their plant-growing department, and on the newly acquired property will erect a range of glass for that purpose. They expect also to devote some space to the growing of ornamental nursery stock.

ST. LOUIS SEED CO. AFFAIRS.

July 24 a petition in involuntary bankruptcy was filed at St. Louis against the St. Louis Seed Co., by the following creditors:

|---|---|
| H. W. Kaster & Son Adv. Agency | $997.00 |
| Manewal-Lang Co. | 6.98 |
| Witte Hardware Co. | 53.45 |

It was alleged that the St. Louis Seed Co. had committed an act of bankruptcy by the payment of a claim of $2,500 held by the Merchants' National Bank. The store is open for business as usual and the following letter, sent out over the signature of W. F. Nichol, president, sets forth the company's position:

It becomes the painful duty of the board of directors of the St. Louis Seed Co. to notify each and every one of its creditors that a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the company on July 24, 1908, at 4:30 p. m., notwithstanding that this proceeding was brought about by no fault of the management of the business.

The cause which brought about this unfortunate proceeding was the fact that the corporation was suddenly refused the renewal of a $3,000 note, which in the opinion of the board of directors it had a right to expect a renewal of.

It is true that the dull season in our business is on now, but in prior years a large business and patronage has been enjoyed by the company during the winter and spring months, and this in connection with a small accommodation of ready cash in the summer months has caused our business to grow year after year, but when this refusal came to us at a time when we were unable to realize cash from other channels than the bank, we immediately learned that some creditor became nervous and in order that no preference might accrue to any creditor the president of the corporation has as yet made no effort to stop the proceeding in bankruptcy, and it will depend entirely upon the board of directors' ability to raise ready cash in order that the petition in bankruptcy may be contested and withdrawn.

You of course understand the terrific loss to any estate that falls into litigation, because everything will be sold at a sacrifice, but we assure you that we will do everything in our power primarily to see that the creditors will receive the best results if possible to again redeem the business.

On account of having enjoyed the confidence of our creditors in the past, we feel very keenly the situation in which we have been placed, but we sincerely hope that there will be a way to save the business and to adjust matters satisfactorily to all parties concerned.

LEM BOWEN NOW PRESIDENT.

Lem W. Bowen, treasurer and general manager of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, was elected president July 21, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late D. M. Ferry. This advancement, however, is merely a formal one, as Mr. Bowen has been the actual executive head of the firm for a number of years.

Mr. Bowen is succeeded by D. M. Ferry, Jr., as treasurer. H. K. White was elected vice-president and Kirby B. White secretary. A. E. F. White continues as auditor.

tees. The business of the year was reviewed and it was found that it had been very satisfactory. Plans for the increase in business in the future were discussed. The prospects are bright for a good trade the coming year.

EASTERN DROUGHT BROKEN.

Frederick M. Clark, secretary of the Everett B. Clark Co., Milford, Conn., wrote July 25:

Our drought was broken in this section July 22. It was too late, however, to help a great many of our crops. Much of the corn on light soils is beyond help, while that on heavy ground will now make a fair crop. Our seed crop of turnip harvested a very nice crop. Parsnip is harvested and is a very heavy crop. Beet is nearly ready and promises well. Onion is doing fairly well. Symptoms of blight have developed in some fields, however, and the present muggy, wet weather is very apt to develop more blight. The crop is not yet assured, although within two weeks of harvest.

DUTCH BULBS.

The harvesting of tulips is completed in Holland. The bright, warm weather that marked the last days of May continued all through June and, although it put a sudden end to vegetation in many bulb fields, the beneficial influence of such ripening off cannot be too highly appreciated, although the number of salable bulbs will decidedly be less than last year, and the same must be expected from the hyacinth crops. Narcissi will also be smaller, as they ripened off too early, but they are likely to be more satisfactory in forcing.

The early and thorough ripening of the bulbs, while it reduced the size of the bulbs, and also of the crop, should prove of value in improving the forcing qualities, with the result of more satisfactory results than the buyers secured last year.

LILY BULBS IN ENGLAND.

From reports to hand from Japan it would appear that prices will be somewhat lower for Japan lilies of all classes during the coming season. The crops are reported to be good and the disease has done hardly any damage this season. The quantity planted for stock was

Christmas-flowering Sweet Peas

READY ABOUT AUGUST FIRST

Introductions from 1907

Mrs. Alex. Wallace. Lavender. This variety is without doubt the best in a lavender; every florist has been pleased with it, and the flowers keep for nearly one week without losing their fine color.

Mrs. Wm. Sim. Pleasing salmon pink; very popular with the retail florist; a good seller.

Mrs. F. J. Dolansky. Daybreak pink. While not as large as the others, the color takes well.

Le Marquis. This is the same color as Princess of Wales violet; has very large flowers, and sells well where a dark blue Sweet Pea is wanted.

Xmas Meteor. Scarlet, fine open red flower.

Jack Hunter. Light yellow.

Xmas Captain. Blue and purple. The same as Captain of the Blues.

Mrs. Chas. H. Totty. Sky blue. In best shape for late planting, or when in crop in March and April.

Miss Josey Reilly. Lilac. Very large flowers.

Wm. J. Stewart. Blue self.

All these varieties produce steadily immense quantities of flowers throughout the winter, with from two to five flowers on stems up to 25 inches in length, all growing over 7 feet high and, when well grown, reaching the height of 12 feet.

Price, 1 oz., 50c; 2 oz., 75c; 1 lb., $5.00

Winter Flowering Mixture. Over 25 colors, mixed.....1 lb., $2.00

Standard Varieties

Xmas Pink. The most popular Sweet Pea in existence the past sixteen years.

Florence Denzer. Pure white; has been ten years in commerce and improves yearly.

Mrs. E. Wild. Carmine or dark pink.

Price on the above three varieties: 1 oz., 30c; 2 oz., 50c; ¼ lb., 75c; 1 lb., $2.00.

Watchung. Pure white; black-seeded; short grower, seldom exceeds six feet in height, and a very good sort when head room is limited. 1 oz., 30c; ¼ lb., 75c.

None genuine unless this Trade Mark is stamped on the packet. If some one tries to sell you so-called Winter Sweet Peas without this Trade Mark, send back his lemon.

Novelties for 1908

New crop ready in September

Mrs. W. W. Smalley. A pleasing satin pink; flowers are very extended, while the stem is not extremely long. Behind every leaf comes a good, salable flower, with a good color from early in fall until late in spring. This will be found a very good commercial variety in light pink.

Mrs. Geo. Lewis. White-seeded. Pure white. Very large orchid or wavy flower. I think it will outclass Florence Denzer in a few years.

Greenbrook. White, standard, slightly touched with lavender. Very large orchid flowering.

Miss Helen M. Gould. White, open flower; standard, lilac, marbled.

Mrs. Hannan. Deep rose-pink of a very pleasing shade; medium flower.

Price, each, trial packet containing 100 seeds, 25c; 1 oz., $1.00.

larger than usual, some reports even saying the largest acreage ever planted was put down last year, and owing to stock being kept back previously, owing to oversupply, the larger sizes will be in larger percentage. Longiflorum giganteum, the true black stemmed variety, will be easier to obtain and the quantity on offer will be much larger, although the common types of eximium will be in smaller quantities. For some years now every dealer and shipper has bought all possible of the true giganteum, and the Japan grower has not been long to see that is the variety to grow, and has quickly worked up larger stocks.

Some of the retarders here have lately been badly bitten by keeping the common eximium and multiflorum too long in cold stores, with the result that heavy losses have been made, in one or two cases as much as $5,000 to $10,000. This has taught them a lesson and there will be few of anything in future but giganteum kept in cold stores after June, this appearing to be the latest time at which the other types will successfully bloom after retarding, while moderate success can be had from giganteum if kept in cold stores as late as November.

NEBRASKA SEED CROPS.

J. C. Robinson Seed Co.

W. J. Mack, of the J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Waterloo, Neb., wrote July 25:

Our corn crops are coming along in good shape, although original acreage has been greatly reduced by high water and continuous rains from the middle to last of June. In some of the fields on our low lands, that were severely flooded, the ground has baked very hard, and a light shower now would be beneficial. Weather conditions the last two weeks have been very favorable, and if weather conditions continue favorable the balance of the season, and we have a late fall, I believe we will raise two-thirds of a normal crop in our vicinity. If the weather should turn hot and dry during August, I fear it will damage corn crops materially, as the crops suffered severely from so much wet weather early in the season that they will not be in condition to withstand a long dry spell.

As to vine crops, it is a problem, just at present, what they will do. Crops of all kinds are late; acreages have been materially reduced by rain and floods. The melon aphis is working muskmelon crops quite hard, and is making its appearance within the last few days in cucumber fields as well. Farmers have been watching their fields, pulling up and burning affected vines, but as this pest works on the under side of the leaves, it is almost a hopeless task to fight them, especially on a crop of any considerable acreage. As to the vine seed situation, in the opinion of the writer, it is a question of awaiting results as to the work of the aphis for the next three weeks, and general weather conditions.

Western Seed and Irrigation Co.

Wm. Emerson, of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., wrote July 25:

We have had favorable growing conditions for the last week or ten days, and what crops remain standing have been growing fast, and the growers are getting them practically free from weeds, although in most cases there are some weeds standing in the rows.

We have recently received some reports of damage by hail to some of our melon crops, and understand the aphis is working on the melons, and some small lots of cucumber in eastern Nebraska. The striped beetle has also done some damage to the pumpkin and squash crops.

A large percentage of many varieties of sweet corn has been washed and drowned out, especially the medium early and late varieties. Many of the crops are also in a backward condition, so that we do not look for any surplus crops of the medium early and late varieties of sweet corn, but believe there will be a serious shortage of some varieties.

Nearly all sweet, flint and field corn, also vine seed crops, are somewhat late and backward, and it will require favorable conditions and a late frost to insure fair average crops on the acreage standing.

SEED NOTES FROM EUROPE.

It is a little too early to speak with any degree of accuracy as to crop prospects in seeds at present, but in England, at least, it is fairly safe to say that peas, beans, turnips and other such crops will be very light indeed, and, I fear, in many cases a failure.

Growths were badly crippled by the backward spring, continuous rains and bitter cold, and when the warm weather came they were weak and unpromising. But all seed crops grew away from this condition rapidly enough. In fact, it seemed almost like the work of a magic hand as we beheld the rapidity with which the whole country side took on a summer aspect, and the seed fields were no exception. But from beautiful spring weather we rapidly were plunged into excessive heat, almost tropical, which continued without rain long enough to cause a serious drought, and the crops, when relieved by the late storms and heavy rains, were in many cases too weak to ever pull up to a full crop. During the hot wave, too, insect pests have been a terror to plant and animal life alike, and some of the crops are badly handicapped by the ravages of swarms of flies and caterpillars.

I think only a very moderate return may be expected from cabbage, turnips, peas and other such crops. Clovers appear to be heavy, both white and red. Some fields of white that I have visited appear particularly promising. Much is being said in the daily papers as to the bumper crop of hay and clover, but I think that when these are stacked the farmer will not have so much cause for congratulation.

The seed crops in the seed districts of southern Europe have lately been rather badly knocked about by storms, and it is generally reported that in Italy many crops are destroyed. This, I think, is exaggerated, and, so far as I can gather, no great damage has been done and the crops show a fair promise.

Of late years Italian grown seeds have come much to the fore on the English market, and the demand is enormously on the increase. In future years they will no doubt be a much more serious competitor with other producing centers. As a rule they are far cheaper than those from other countries, and, though the quality a few years back left plenty of room for improvement, the strains are improving every year. In many lines the Italian specialties in vegetable seeds and many flower seeds can now compare well with those of any country in the world. I recently had brought under my notice a plot of aster seed obtained from Italy—the varieties Comet and Victoria—at the price of 18 shillings a pound, and they were equal in every respect to some of the highest grade German strains at four times the money.

In Holland the bulb farmers are in the full swing of lifting and curing, though the lifting in some cases is finished. The crops generally are well up to the average. Daffodils are in plentiful supply and of fine quality. Spanish iris are plentiful and cheap. Gladioli, the early flowering section, have experienced a smart drop in value and can now be bought for little more than half the prices quoted at the beginning of the season. Hyacinths are in good supply, but the demand for these is every year getting less. They are not wanted in England and, it is reported, can be had at bargain prices in Holland.

Generally speaking, prices for all bulbs are little below those of last year, but have no tendency to rise. The sales in England have not been so large as last year and much grumbling is heard from the travelers on their return from their spring trip. J. B.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

The National Sweet Pea Society's floral committee had a full day's work July 10, inspecting over 300 trials of sweet peas at Reading, including a large number of new varieties undergoing the necessary test that qualifies for the society's awards. The committee rigorously excluded every variety that showed a single rogue, as well as many others that in their opinion were too much alike or did not surpass in merit existing varieties. Consequently the awards were by no means numerous.

The silver medal of the society and F. C. C. were awarded to George Stark, from George Stark & Son, Great Ryburgh; F. C. C. to Mrs. A. Ireland, from Dobbie & Co., Rothesay and Marks Tey; F. C. C. to Mrs. H. Bell, from T. Bolton, Carnforth; A. M. to Constance Oliver, from W. Lumley, Havant, and A. M. to Paradise Ivory, from H. Hemus, Upton-on-Severn.

The above in the floral committee's opinion are the best five varieties of the year and the only awards that the N. S. P. S. will make. Before giving future awards the society stipulates that seedlings must be tested at the society's trials. This insures that no awards are granted until stocks are quite fixed, and new varieties at later shows must go to the trials next year.

When the floral committee had done its work a large number of N. S. P. S. members, after being hospitably entertained at lunch by Leonard Sutton, of the firm of Sutton & Sons, spent a few hours among the trials, taking notes.

A deputation of Hungarian agriculturists visited a number of the leading seed growing farms in Essex, England, recently, and were greatly impressed by the rigorous methods adopted to insure purity of stocks. Sweet peas are extensively grown in Essex, and a large party of the N. S. P. S. members visited the fields of Hurst & Son and Dobbie & Co., in Essex, July 11.

The crops of sweet pea seed are not anticipated to be quite so short as at one time expected. Rain came just in time to save the situation. Of course, all depends on the harvesting, but growers at one time saw no prospects of any weight of seed to harvest. On the other hand, culinary peas have finished off and the crop is below average.

G. W. Kerr, a son of the late William Kerr, Dumfries, Scotland, a well-known grower of many good potatoes, has left our shores and settled down with W. Atlee Burpee & Co. at Fordhook. For some years he was with Dobbie & Co., and later he managed the extensive nursery grounds of Baher's, Wolverhampton, where sweet peas, dahlias, pansies, violas, etc., are grown on a large scale.

Hugh Low & Co., Bush Hill Park, Middlesex, received an award of merit from the R. H. S. July 7, for a new hybrid fruit obtained by crossing the loganberry and blackberry. It is named

BOSTON.

The Market.

No great change has taken place in market conditions, nor is any probable for a few more weeks. There are less flowers arriving, especially of carnations. These latter are now hardly worth purchasing, but their place is well taken by asters, which are now coming in abundantly and of fine quality. For funeral work they are much superior to the under-sized carnations. Remaining sweet peas have been helped by late rains, but are not plentiful. Kaiserin, Carnot and Killarney roses are about the only ones seen. The last named is far the most popular of pink roses and is being used a great deal for funeral work. Dahlias are already seen in small lots, but these have never been popular as a cut flower in Boston. Of really choice flowers there is a decided scarcity. Cattleyas and gardenias are few. Of valley there is a fair supply, while a little Bouvardia Humboldtii is seen. Quite a few speciosum lilies are coming in, chiefly the colored forms. Gladioli are now quite good and there is the usual assortment of outdoor flowers.

Various Notes.

Only fine weather is wanted to make the picnic of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Pine Banks park, Malden, July 29, a great success. Prizes have been donated by the following firms and individuals, among others: A. H. Hews & Co., Lord & Burnham Co., Boston Plate Glass Co., Houghton & Clark, W. W. Rawson & Co., R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Schlegel & Fottler Co., Stumpp & Walter Co., J. Breck & Sons, H. E. Fiske Co., T. J. Grey Co., William Sim, Edward Hatch, T. H. Westwood, Peter Fisher, S. J. Goddard, Alex. Montgomery, Wilfrid Wheeler, W. N. Craig, New England Nurseries, Daniel Iliffe, F. E. Palmer, William McLaughlin, D. Finlayson, William Downs, H. M. Robinson & Co. and P. Feinstein.

F. E. Palmer, state vice-president of the S. A. F., is working hard for a good delegation from Boston and vicinity to the Niagara Falls convention. It is hoped to get favorable railroad rates and that a good crowd will represent the club.

A club field day will be held at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, August 14, in addition to the one at the New England Nurseries September 5.

Considerable damage was done to the office and packing-sheds of the Bay State Nurseries by the severe thunder storm July 18.

A. Leuthy is just completing work on a new 150-foot house. Daniel Iliffe furnished most of the material.

J. B. Velie, the local representative of Lord & Burnham Co., states that their business in New England this year will equal that of 1907 to date, although in other sections of the country it will show a decrease.

A fall of 1.65 inches of rain July 25 effectually ended our prolonged drought.

WITH PRIVATE GARDENERS.

H. J. Osterhoudt, gardener on the Clyde estate, at New Hamburg, N. Y., is an enthusiast on dahlias, and is pushing the show to be held in September, which promises to beat the record. He has 150 varieties under cultivation and says they are all distinct and good. This is a beautiful place and reflects great credit on the able superintendent.

Jas. Keeley, gardener to the Sands estate, showed me some fine specimens of the English Frame cucumber, which equals in flavor the famous Telegraph and is as long and thicker than that variety.

A. A. Hunt, at Millbrook, N. Y., has made many improvements since assuming charge of the Mrs. Dan. Lamont estate, which is one of the most charming on the banks of the noble Hudson river. Mr. Hunt was associated for several years with Wm. H. Head, at the famous M. T. Plant estate, at Groton, Conn., and will introduce many ideas conceived there. I noted specimens of Retinospora plumosa aurea and R. Veitchii twenty-five feet tall, perfect trees. The glaucous Picea Kosteri is also extensively planted. The entrance to this charming estate has been made most inviting by Mr. Hunt, with a pond of hardy aquatics backed with bright hued plants.

E. Hicks, gardener on the H. H. Flagler estate, at Millbrook, is doing some fine landscape work at this new place. Much of the seed is being supplied by W. C. Russell, who was formerly superintendent at the Dieterich estate, but is now located in the village and doing a good business as landscape artist, seedsman and florist. The Bennett school, with its 500 pupils, makes the demand for flowers good and Mr. Russell gets the patronage.

J. Bovington has charge of the Wing estates, which comprise three of the finest plots in this section. There is something doing all the time, and to keep up a rotation of crops is one of the secrets of the successful gardener.

John Baxter, gardener to D. Odell, at Peekskill, N. Y., has made a thorough test of hardy grapes and finds Niagara the best white in commerce. The bunches are thinned out carefully and produce berries equal to that old favorite, Buckland Sweetwater.

Robert Hutchinson recently took charge of the James Shewen estate, at Cold Spring, N. Y., and is making many changes and improvements. A combination rose and carnation house has been completed by the Lord & Burnham Co., who will now erect a handsome palm house. Mr. Hutchinson held a responsible position at the beautiful estate of the Duke of Westminster and proposes to make his new charge a model after Eaton Hall. Robert Hutchinson, Jr., came over with his father and has charge of the pretty place of Captain Jenkins, at Balmville, having as neighbors W. Correz, superintendent at the Burton estate, and Duncan Aird, of the Van Dusen establishment. Mr. Aird is a specialist on carnations; some of the finest blooms handled in Newburgh are from his houses. A splendid collection of conifers and flowering shrubs are cared for, a duplicate of which is seen at Downing Park, under the care of Charles Hueble. M.

SHAWNEE, OKLA.—John G. Brenner, of Indianapolis, Okla., has purchased 200 feet of ground on Broadway and Bell streets, and will erect a range of greenhouses at a cost of about $18,000.

CLOVERPORT, KY.—Among the preparations made for the Breckenridge fair was the erection of a building which will be known as the new Floral Hall. It is a commodious and well finished structure, with abundance of light. The managers concluded that the horticultural display last year was so creditable as to entitle this department to more suitable quarters.

PACIFIC COAST.

TACOMA, WASH.—The new conservatory in Wright park is now completed. The central section, 20x25 feet, is surmounted by a dome, and there are two wings, each 20x50. The erection of this conservatory is due to the generosity of W. W. Seymour, a capitalist, who gave $10,000 for the beautifying of the city.

COMPULSORY TREE TRIMMING.

A town in the vicinity of San Francisco has passed an ordinance making it obligatory on the part of property owners to keep sidewalk trees trimmed off to within twelve feet of the ground. The plea has been made that fire engines have been unable to navigate along many streets owing to the overhanging branches. The fact that this town has many miles of sidewalk trees that will be affected by this ordinance, and their butchered appearance when altered after the trees have been allowed to grow naturally for years, shows the evil results of non-systematic planting and pruning.

If trees are allowed to spread too much at the expense of their center-growth when they are young and can be easily trained, a grave mistake is made. A tree that has put all its vigor into lateral branches will after a time show no inclination to fill in with easily trained growths, and when, as in the present case, it becomes necessary to cut large and heavy branches off, it is usually no longer possible to get the trees back into symmetrical shape again.

By proper pruning our largest trees can be kept at any desired height or form for an almost indefinite time. The writer has on his grounds a cypress hedge (Cupressus macrocarpa), which, though growing in the present location for forty-seven years, is only four feet high and two feet through. Directly across the street are two specimen trees of the same variety, twelve years of age, that are forty-five feet high and thirty feet spread at the base.

The carelessness shown in the treatment of sidewalk trees is deplorable, and what should be an object of beauty is more often a subject for ridicule or censure. Uniformity and the suitability of the various growths to the subject at hand are rarely taken into consideration by the general planter, and here the practical gardener and the landscape architect have a splendid chance to display their knowledge to the greatest advantage, for by the use of trees on the public highways the visitor is often impressed more than by the well kept lawns or masses of private shrubbery. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is about in the same condition as it has been for the last month. There is practically nothing doing except funeral work. Flowers, with the exception of fancy roses, are overplentiful. Long-stemmed sweet peas, however, have not been in oversupply for the last two weeks, but there are quantities of short-stemmed stock offered at any price.

Carnations are of better quality than those usually seen here in the middle of the summer, but the prices asked are away down and those usually received are still lower. Short-stemmed roses can be had at any price offered. Valley moves slowly and there have been several big batches of it brought into town during the last week. Lilies of all kinds are in fair demand, and the prices received are better than they were a week or two ago. Other kinds of outside stock are not worth mentioning, there is so little being used.

Over in Alameda county the retailers seem to be doing a fair share of business. Funeral work has been good, owing to the fact that there were several deaths among prominent people during the last week.

The weather continues to be too cool to be comfortable in the mornings and evenings, but during the middle of the day is very pleasant.

Various Notes.

The Marin County Horticultural Society will give a chrysanthemum exhibition at San Rafael in October.

William Walters, the well-known landscape gardener of San Rafael, has just recovered from a severe illness.

John Martin, of Ross Station, has received a large consignment of orchids from several eastern growers within the last week. It is the intention to devote the greenhouses principally to this article in the future.

Albert Galloway, a prominent carnation grower of Fruitvale, Cal., died July 12. Further particulars concerning him are given in this week's obituary column. G.

SPOKANE, WASH.

The Inland Nursery and Floral Co., the enterprising firm which has already been referred to in the REVIEW, has recently completed a handsome and substantial office on its grounds at the corner of Washington street and Nora avenue. The building is constructed of concrete blocks. It is 30x40 feet, two stories high, and is divided into two display rooms and an office. The firm also has attractive grounds and large greenhouses here, besides its thirty acres of country property. Its business is increasing rapidly and from all appearances development has only just begun.

The stockholders of the company are H. C. Rice, J. H. Mumm, J. M. Harris, E. L. Rice, J. J. Bursell and W. G. Thompson.

BUFFALO.

The Market.

Business at present is at low ebb and good stock rather scarce. Sages, Maids and Brides from young stock are the best in the market. The recent heavy rains spoiled many asters, but we expect to see plenty of good ones coming in from now on.

Carnation growers have started planting and, as this has been an excellent growing season, field plants are in fine shape.

The S. A. F. Convention.

The S. A. F. convention is the main topic of conversation these days, for, in the absence of a local florists' club at Niagara Falls, the members of the Buffalo Florists' Club are doing all in their power to make the convention a success.

All indications point to a record-breaking attendance. The natural wonders of Niagara, combined with the wonders there created by man, make it the Mecca of the world's travelers. When the S. A. F. chooses it as its meeting place, why should not the spasmodic convention attendant choose this as his year to attend? And we hope he will. Passing over the international bridge and watching the water, boiling and rushing by beneath you, is not seeing Niagara. To be impressed with its full grandeur you must see it all, not once but several times, and each time you will be more fully impressed with the wonder of it all.

And so I say, brother florist, if there is a doubt in your mind as to whether you should finish planting your carnations, complete that house you are building or attend the florists' convention, choose the latter, for a few days at Niagara Falls will fill you with inspiration and energy, more than enough to make up for the few days of manual labor you fear to lose.

The sports committee of the local club, consisting of Messrs. McClure, Cloudsley and Slattery, has secured the Palace alleys, the finest in this part of the state, in which to hold the S. A. F. bowling tournament, and is trying to arrange for the use of the Buffalo baseball team's grounds for the ball game between the Buffalo florists' team and the All-America florists' team. This promises to be a great event, and as the Scott boys have agreed not to make up the entire team, the All-Americas may have a show. For August Poehlmann's benefit, we are hoping to have uniforms for both teams.

Various Notes.

Wm. F. Kasting and family are spending the summer at Erie, Pa., where we understand Mr. Kasting puts in three hours each day at the wheelbarrow, getting in condition for the bowling tournament.

Wm. J. Palmer is just now putting in most of his time at Lancaster, superintending the erection of about 40,000 feet of glass.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

A NEW nursery firm has begun business in Monroe, Mich., with Cormac J. McCormick as the general manager. It is said that the organization is backed by ample capital and is sure to succeed. Mr. McCormick was with the Greening Nursery Co., of Monroe, for ten years, and was also editor of the Horticulturist.

C. E. SNYDER, of Preston, Minn., is not exactly building a five-story office, but it stands nearly as high as most of the city skyscrapers, owing to its location opposite his residence on Summit avenue overlooking his nursery grounds and with a fine view of the surrounding country. His growing business makes an office imperative and it is thought that the time is not far distant when he will erect some extensive greenhouses as well.

OKLAHOMIANS MEET.

The Oklahoma Nurserymen's Association met at the Chamber of Commerce, Oklahoma City, July 28. This was the regular summer meeting of the association. The objects of the organization are educational, fraternal and protective, and it invites the membership of all nurserymen in the state. The program of the convention was as follows:

Opening address by the president.
Report of secretary and treasurer.
Gleanings from the National Association, J. A. Lopeman, Enid.
"Will Not the Development of Indian Territory Since Statehood Increase the Demand for Nursery Stock?" by A. L. Luke, Wynnewood.
"Commercial Orcharding in Oklahoma, with Reference to the Nursery Interests," by Jim Parker, Tecumseh.
"To What Extent Is the San Jose Scale Working Toward the Southwest?" by J. W. Tetirick, Blackwell.
General business of the association.

ELLWANGER WILL SUIT.

After a litigation extending over a year and a half and involving the largest estate which has ever figured in a contest in Surrogate Court in Monroe County, New York, Helen C. and Margaret Ellwanger have won their title to a large share in the estate of their grandfather, George Ellwanger, the well-known pioneer nurseryman, of Rochester, who left an estate of several million dollars.

Surrogate Selden S. Brown has denied probate to the second codicil of the Ellwanger will, which cut the two grandchildren off with a small portion of the estate and gave the greater part of it to the two sons of the testator. He sustains the original will and the first codicil.

As the result of Surrogate Brown's decision, Helen and Margaret Ellwanger will each receive about $250,000, instead of about $30,000, which would have been theirs had the codicil been admitted to probate. The shares of George H. Ellwanger and William D. Ellwanger will be correspondingly reduced.

Surrogate Brown sustains both the contentions of the contestants, that George Ellwanger was of unsound mind when he added the second codicil to the will and that he was influenced in cutting his granddaughters off by his son, George H. Ellwanger.

Thursday, August 13, a trip to Minnesota's finest lake, beautiful Lake Minnetonka.

THE BASKET WILLOW.

One of the most unique experiments of the government in tree-growing is the work in basket willow culture at an experimental holt at Arlington, Va., just across the river from Washington. The holt is located on an experimental farm on rich Potomac bottomland, on the slope of the river bank about six feet above the water level. Twenty-eight contiguous plats, ranging from one to six square rods each, were planted several years ago with four varieties of approved basket willows, to determine the best method of management and its influence on the growth and quality of the rods produced.

Experiments show that the commercial quality of the rods grown in this country under proper care and management is equal or superior to the finest of those imported from France or Germany. Perhaps the best evidence of how signally the government has succeeded in its endeavors is shown by the fact that a great many farmers as well as manufacturers of willow ware have been encouraged to plant basket willows for profit on lands hitherto considered entirely useless.

The experimental planting in the holt at Arlington has proved that close spacing in and between the rows is a matter of paramount importance to basket willow growers. The tests on close and wide spacing were made by setting the cuttings at distances of six inches apart in the row by eighteen inches between the rows, 9x21 inches, and 12x36 inches. The form and quality of the rods produced under these different systems of spacing show decidedly the advantage of close planting. The American green willow, Salix amygdalina, and three other varieties of approved basket willows, were employed in the tests.

The results of the experiments will be published by the Forest Service for the benefit of those interested in basket willow culture. This publication, entitled "Recent Practical Results in Basket Willow Culture," will be available soon for free distribution and will be mailed upon request to the Forester at Washington. The experimental holt at Arlington will be considerably enlarged this year by planting cuttings obtained from Europe. Cuttings of a great many tested varieties of European basket willows have been bought from European growers in order to increase the number suitable for cultivation in this country.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Conditions have varied somewhat from last week's report. With few exceptions the larger florists have been busy, while the smaller dealers received but a limited amount of work. Home-grown flowers are used almost exclusively, the shipments from outside being light. What stock is received, in the way of roses, has been of good quality. There have been more asters, and of better quality, than have been seen for some years. Many of the florists have shipped asters in large quantities.

According to local dealers, the seed business is improving at this time.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club held its monthly meeting at the home of George Bayer July 22. The meeting was well attended, considering the season of the year. The probable attendance at Buffalo was discussed. After the meeting a social hour was enjoyed. During the next week there will be an election of officers.

J. L. Schiller, who has some asters of exceptional quality, is furnishing them to many of the local florists. He has also shipped many primulas during the last week.

S. N. Peck has enlarged his place on South street, by erecting an addition of two greenhouses 20x112. This addition is almost completed, and within a short time he expects to fill them with carnations. He also anticipates the removal of his Broadway greenhouse to South street. He will have a sales display room downtown.

F. Schoen had the decorations for the opening of Miller Bros., 1,500 asters and 500 lilies being used.

Miss Helen Patten had the decorations at the Niles-Gates wedding, one of the prominent events of last week.

Mrs. E. Suder did some splendid decorating at the Yacht Club for the Trost wedding. She also had the Rudd wedding at Bellevue, O.

Mrs. J. Freeman, designer for Geo. Heinl, is spending a two weeks' vacation at Lakeside.

Local florists are receiving large shipments of gladioli from E. H. Cushman, of Sylvania, O. H. L. S.

PASSAIC, N. J.—John L. Lundsted has erected a mum house, 12x100 feet. John Albers has completed a new greenhouse, 20x200. It is now planted with mums. Later he intends to grow sweet peas for a winter and spring crop.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—The old city greenhouses at Lawton park are being demolished to make way for five modern houses, money for the building of which was appropriated by the council last week. The new houses will be put up by a Chicago firm.

MOVING ASPARAGUS.

I have an asparagus bed alongside my greenhouse and I want to put up another house where that is this summer. Would it do to take up the plants and set in another place now? L. C. P.

You cannot move the asparagus now. If carefully transplanted, many of them may live, but they will never amount to anything. You will do far better to plant out fine young, two-year-old plants next spring. If you build over the bed this fall you may cut considerable asparagus from under the benches this winter, which will sell for good prices. H. G.

ONIONS FROM SETS.

Can you tell me how to grow green onions from sets under glass, and if the soil from the onion beds can be used, mixed with other soil, for repotting geraniums, etc.? On account of my hot water system having to be relaid, the regular mum beds will be idle for some time yet, making it too late for mums at all this year. C. E. A.

Use compost containing a good proportion of well decayed barnyard manure; plant in rows nine inches apart, giving the sets two inches of space in the rows. If you can stir between the rows with a hand-weeder, you might run them even closer. As you are going to pull these green, the space named will be sufficient; if left to make bulbs, a foot apart in the rows and four inches between the seeds would be better. There would be no special advantage in starting these before January. A cool house, 40 to 45 degrees at night, will answer.

While the old soil from the onion beds could be used for geraniums, we would prefer to use fresh loam for them. It is generally assumed that "any old soil" will grow geraniums, but if you want good ones use fresh compost. The soil in question could be used for another bench crop, with the addition of some manure or fertilizer. C. W.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business is at a low ebb. There are few good flowers, but enough for all demands, there being so little doing. We are having extremely hot weather just now, the thermometer reaching 96 degrees in the shade. We have just been visited by a heavy rain storm, the first good rain since May 23. All outdoor stock that could not be reached with the hose has suffered severely, both flowers and vegetables.

The summer flight of our population has taken place, and block after block of houses give no sign of being inhabited. Some of the uptown stores have closed entirely for the dull season, and others adopt shorter hours. Except for funeral work and the supply for the hospitals, the demands are light in every branch of the trade.

Among the growers, naturally, everybody is up to his eyes in work, and planting as a rule is pretty well advanced. There seems to be less building than usual this year. High cost of material and labor in most cases prohibits many new structures.

Various Notes.

The park board has just had finished two new walks in Druid Hill park. They are about one mile long and were badly needed since we have had so many automobiles in the parks. The visitors had to use the driveway or else walk on the grass. The mounted police in the park have all been furnished with motorcycles instead of horses.

The Charles street boulevard has just been opened to traffic after nearly one year and a half of grading and macadamizing. It is about 150 feet wide, with three driveways and with grass plots the entire length, which is nearly one mile and a half.

There are quite a lot of the Baltimore florists going to the convention.

H. J. Quick has just finished a new propagating house, 14x60.

Halliday Bros. have a fine lot of hardy phlox.

Roland Bolgiano, of the well-known seed firm of J. Bolgiano & Son, was operated on for appendicitis. The operation proved successful and he expects to be out in a few days.

Charles Cook has a fine lot of Boston and Piersoni ferns, which are selling well.

Wm. Terry, of Owings Mills, has been cutting some extra fine asters from outside, which are selling readily at $1 per hundred. Q.

DAYTON, OHIO.

Trade During July.

Throughout the month of July business has been fairly good, and still nothing to brag about, funeral work being our main support. None in our trade is complaining any more than usual, for each feels satisfied if he makes enough in summer to cover running expenses.

Roses are holding up remarkably well, and there is good demand for them. Carnations are scarce. Longiflorums are consumed as soon as they make their appearance on the market. Asters also find ready sale. The outdoor crops have been blessed with a little more rain this month than last, and as a result there is a great improvement in their appearance, although extremely hot weather has prevailed during the month.

Various Notes.

At the present time the most popular topic for discussion among the florists is the coming convention at Niagara Falls, and quite a number of our florists are planning to attend.

The Dayton Lighting Co. had an opening July 25 and gave a reception to the public, each visitor being presented with a rose as a souvenir. In Dayton flowers are given away extensively as souvenirs, and this idea seems to be well taken by the public.

July 23 there was a baby show in this city, in which different contests were arranged and prizes awarded. The baby cab decorated by Mrs. Bertha Hendricks captured the first prize.

Arthur Avard, of New York City, is a guest at the home of George Bartholomew.

Everett Brubaker, of West Alexandria, O., a former employee of the Miami Floral Co., left July 25 for his vacation, which he intends to spend in Canada and the Rocky Mountains. R. A. B.

North Woburn, Mass.—Adam Foster, the market gardener, is making preparations to build two greenhouses, in addition to the four houses already in use. Mr. Foster makes a specialty of cucumbers for the Boston market.

EAST BROOKFIELD, MASS.

The Miller Floral Co. has been formed at East Brookfield, for the purpose of building very extensive greenhouses at Salt Lake City, Utah, under the direction of Robert Miller, who formerly conducted greenhouses at East Brookfield. The officers named are Robert Miller, president and manager; Warren E. Tarbell, vice-president; Eugene W. Reed, of North Brookfield, secretary; George R. Hamant, treasurer. There are 2,500 shares of preferred stock to be issued at $10 a share. The business is to be the growing of roses, for which Utah has an ideal climate the whole year around. Salt Lake City is one of the fastest growing cities of the great new west. Mr. Miller looked over the ground thoroughly and is satisfied that it is just the place in which to start a growing business, which would have practically no limitations. Mr. Welch, of Boston, is named as one of the directors.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Valentine Burgevin's Sons, Kingston, N. Y., have one of the prettiest show places on the Hudson river. The approach to the houses is laid out in park-like arrangement, with a lily pond and fancy designs in carpet bedding. They have done much to educate the public taste, by making a continuous display both at the greenhouses and at their handsome store, and they attribute their great success chiefly to this fact.

W. Saltford & Sons, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., are adding one house, 24x150, for smilax and sweet peas. Mitchell is the builder and he reports good business along the line. Chrysanthemum Polly Rose is planted between the houses here and covered at night in case of early frosts. Usually a crop is cut before plants inside are ready. Mr. Saltford has been strongly tempted to try violets again. Marie Louise brought him both reputation and opulence.

John A. Ruppert, of the Henry A. Dreer Co., was a recent visitor at Newburgh, N. Y., booming the annual convention, which he says will be a record breaker.

R. Harry Cathcart, Jr., of the Yuess Gardens Co., at Newburgh, says the demand for palms is again on the increase.

George Cranshaw, of Newburgh, has a white aster that blooms early in June, an improvement on Queen of the Market. He has his mums planted. He may be one of the delegates to the Falls.

The Schaefer Co., Inc., of Newburgh, does much local advertising and attributes much of its success to this. M.

Beloit, Wis.—John Rindfleisch will open a store in his building on East Grand avenue, opposite the Baptist church. The building has been remodeled and has a handsome new front, with the store on the first floor and living rooms above. The exterior is of rough pebble finish.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year. It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1908, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Do not fail to see our exhibit at the S. A. F. Convention, Niagara Falls

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz., $35 per 100; 4-in. pots, $7.50 per doz., $50.00 per 100; 6-in. pots, $1.50 each, $15.00 per doz.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

The Birmingham Florists' Society left in a special car July 22 for West Lake, near Bessemer, where the members held their annual outing and barbecue. President C. C. Thach, of Auburn Institute, was present and made an address.

Florists from Montgomery and other parts of the state also attended. The West Lakes, near Bessemer, are ideal picnic grounds and fine fishing and a good time are always in store for those who go there.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

The weather continues uncomfortably warm, and the lack of rain is beginning to make itself felt. Roses run about equal to the demand, but Brides and Maids are badly mildewed. Carnations are scarce and poor, and asters are taking their place rapidly. Lilies continue to come into the market. The demand has been good for these, as there were a number of funerals in town last month. Beauties are not to be had in town, and orchids are scarce.

Various Notes.

A number of the florists are talking about taking in the convention at Niagara Falls, but it is not quite decided yet just who will go.

Rice Bros. find business excellent, with stock about equal to the demand, but not enough carnations.

E. Nagel & Co. are again making extensive repairs on their plant this summer, reglazing and rebuilding the houses not repaired last year.

H. Barsch is building over his houses, and has built a small new house.

Visitors: J. F. Wilcox, Council Bluffs, Ia.; D. U. Augspurger, Peoria, Ill.

GOSHEN, IND.

The Colonial Flower Shop moved July 20 to its future home in the new brick building at the corner of Jefferson and Main streets. The building is one of the most artistic in the city. As befits the name of the establishment, both the exterior and interior carry out the colonial idea, the colors in decorating being yellow and white, while the ceiling is paneled in mission design. The ice-box has been rebuilt, having a show window in the center, with plate glass mirrors on the top and sides. Mission furniture will be used and new white show cases will be installed. A basement the size of the building is used for supplies and the heating plant for the store and conservatory.

Miss Dora Brown, the proprietor, is expecting a carload of material from Chicago for the new conservatory, to be built just south of the new building as soon as the old store is removed.

CORNING, N. Y.—The Corning Floral Co., a newly organized north side firm, in which F. H. Starr, of this place, and Eugene M. Dusinberre, of Geneva, are interested, has purchased of W. J. Cheney the greenhouses on West Pultney street and removed to that location.

MONTREAL.

The Market.

For the last fortnight we have had plenty of rain, which was much appreciated, as previous to that everything was beginning to dry up in the intense heat. It registered 102 degrees one afternoon.

Flowers are scarce and the few that are on the market are not very good. Asters of all colors are to the fore, selling at 50 cents and 75 cents. Business is quiet.

Various Notes.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club held its nineteenth annual picnic on Wednesday, July 29, at Highgate Springs. A fine program of sports had been arranged.

The various judges for the garden competitions have been busy the last week, and many fine places are entered this year.

Miss Carmichael has returned from a short visit to the Quebec tercentenary.

Miss Rodderick, of P. McKenna & Sons, returned this week from an extended visit to Ottawa.

Mrs. T. White, of St. James street, spent a week in Toronto recently.

F. C. Smith left last week with Sir Wm. Van Horne for St. Andrews.

Miss Bennett has returned from Quebec and Thetford, where she has been for some time. TOMMY.

BERLIN, CONN.—A. A. Weldon has sold his greenhouses to Leland Gwatkin and John Canfield.

FINDLAY, O.—E. R. Barnd has returned from Texas and has entered the employ of J. J. Waaland. He was formerly in the business here.

SPENCER, IND.—E. T. Barnes, of Barnes' Dahlia Gardens, has ten acres of dahlias for cut flowers coming along nicely. He also has a nice lot of late asters which he expects to bloom after the great bulk of asters is gone.

BRADFORD, PA.—J. W. Leasure, of South Bradford Farm, is preparing to put in a cement counter on one side of the store and a cement terrace on the other side, running the entire length of the store, for palms and ferns; also to extend the skylight so as to make the store perfectly light. He expects to expend nearly $1,000 on these improvements. At the farm they are erecting a new house, 20x52, to be used for hydrangeas and propagating.

Araucarias Our Specialty

WE LEAD THE COUNTRY IN ARAUCARIAS

ARAUCARIAS! ARAUCARIAS!! ARAUCARIAS!!!

Over the sea together we go,
Aschmann and I, with plenty of dough.
I'll play the fiddle to make some fun,
He seeks the best plants under the sun;
Palms and azaleas, many a score,
Araucarias better than ever before.
In Belgium my music will make people dance,
While he'll buy to give his patrons a chance
To pile up the dollars the people will pay
With gladness to take such beauties away.

Houses full of them whichever way you look. Why? Because the everlasting evergreen foliage of this beautiful decorative plant gives it such a striking and charming appearance that everybody falls in love with it and buys a plant for their parlor, summer porch, office, store or shop and it is selected freely for gifts.

The song of the frog is "Croak, croak, croak," but the "froggie" here is happy, plays the fiddle, and his tune is, "Prosperity! Don't croak, don't croak, don't croak; be happy, make business, make money."

Sit down a few minutes and write out an order to Godfrey Aschmann for his Araucarias—Excelsa, Glauca or Robusta Compacta. This kind of speculation is safe, never fails, but will yield you 200 per cent profit while you are asleep. Our reputation for the last 12 years, as propagators, wholesale growers and shippers of Araucarias, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is sufficient proof of our business ability. Every child in the trade knows our araucarias. Many thousands, of all sizes and varieties, can be seen growing in our greenhouses ready for shipment.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 8 to 10 inches high, 40c; 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 10 to 13 inches high, 50c; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 14, 15 to 20 inches high, $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5¼ to 5½-in. pots, 22 to 25 inches high, 50c to 60c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 35c to 40c.

CANNAS.

TO THE GROWERS OF CANNAS.
Brethren:
There has been a movement on foot, for several years, among the growers of that "Queen" of summer bedding plants, the canna, among those who are members of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I am only in the business on a large place for the pleasure that there is in it, and do not sell, and for that reason I have not favored a canna organization. I now think the time has come that a National Canna Society should be organized, and I hope that all the growers will be at the convention at the Falls, so there can be an exchange of opinions.
Yours truly,
H. D. Seele, Canna Specialist,
Lawndale, Elkhart, Ind.

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.
Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.
Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.
As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.
Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price, $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

Greenhouse Heating.

NECESSARY BOILER CAPACITY.

Please give me information as to the size of boiler required to heat the following greenhouses, in the climate of southern Ontario: One house 21x100, one house 18x100, and one house 20x60. The houses measure six feet to the plate and twelve feet six inches to the ridge.

Our present boiler is thirty-six inches by nine feet eight inches and contains thirty-four 3-inch tubes. It did the work for the two 100-foot houses. We have added the 60-foot house and would like your opinion. The 60-foot house will be used for cucumbers and will require a temperature of 65 degrees. If the present boiler is not large enough, how large a boiler would you advise putting in? Kindly state the size of grate surface required in either case, for steam heat.

H. E. R.

Your present boiler should, when working under full capacity with water at 180 degrees, heat all three of the houses to 70 degrees during zero weather. If the 100-foot houses are safe at 60 degrees, as the cucumber house will be, the boiler should have capacity enough, but there is no factor of safety allowed. Everything is figured at full capacity. In adding to the plant, the future glass area will in large measure determine the plans for increased boiler capacity.

L. C. C.

DEPENDS ON THE PIPES.

I shall appreciate a little information through your valuable paper, about my heating plant. I have a large, nine-section Ideal steam boiler which I have been using two seasons to good advantage with hot water, as I cannot stand the pressure of staying up nights, firing up, and as yet cannot afford a fireman. I have one house 40x60 feet, one 16x40 feet, one 10x45 feet, and I want to change from hot water to steam, using natural gas for fuel. I do not want to disturb my heating pipes. Can I use the same system? I have been told here in Pittsburg, if water works, so will steam. Any information you can give, as to what I must do in making the change, will be fully appreciated. G. J. L.

It is impossible to answer your question in a satisfactory way because you fail to state the size of the pipes you are at present using in your greenhouses. If the houses are piped for hot water, and you have sufficient radiation to hold the temperature desired during cold weather, the chances are that you have too many pipes for steam, and probably also too large ones. If the houses work well on a hot water basis with coal, they will work as well or better with gas. If you lack radiation during cold spells the chances are that you can best run on hot water during mild weather and convert to steam for cold spells, thus increasing the capacity of your plant without materially modifying it. If you have cast-iron pipes, however, the steam plant is out of the question.

L. C. C.

PIPING A LEAN-TO.

How would you pipe a lean-to house, 6x100 feet, six feet to the eaves, on the north side for propagating purposes, using as much 1-inch pipe as possible, as we have them on hand? Our heating system is hot water. Missouri climate.

K. & S.

I would not advise any one to attempt to heat a 100-foot house with 1-inch pipe using hot water; 2-inch is about right, but 1½-inch can be used on a pinch. For a propagating bench of this character I should install four 2-inch pipes and inclose the bench. I should also place valves on each end of two of the pipes to modify the temperature to suit the stock being propagated. L. C. C.

A SECTIONAL ROUND BOILER.

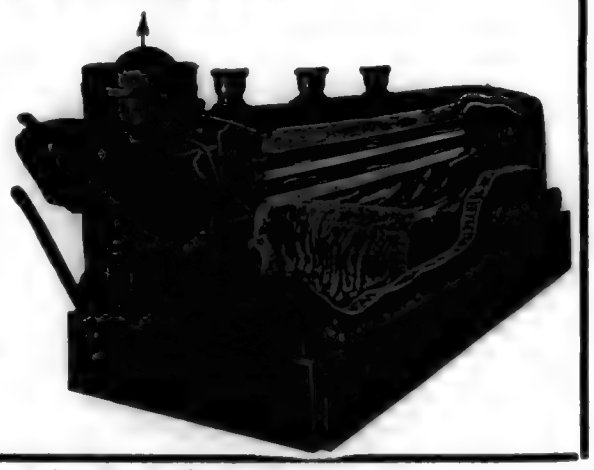
The Plumbers' Trade Journal keeps an eye open for new ideas in the heating line and has discovered a new point in a boiler the Lord & Burnham Co. has just put on the market, which it describes as follows:

"One of the latest boilers placed on the market is a new Burnham sectional-round boiler, a product of the Lord & Burnham Co., of Irvington, N. Y., which is described by them as a combination of the available strong points of the Burnham one-piece round and the Burnham vertical sectional.



"There are several noteworthy features about this new boiler, which is of the push nipple type, which are put forward by the manufacturers: (1) Its three sections can be extended to four or five; (2) tie bolts on the outside, easy of access; (3) direct surfaces formed by deep cross fire channels; (4) all cleaning surfaces in plain sight and easy to reach; (5) fire pot water-surrounded.

"The great success of their Burnham vertical sectional boiler prompted them to incorporate in this new boiler some of its economy principles, the keynote of which is the direct fire surfaces formed by the deep fire channels running across the boiler. There are no water legs, drop tubes or arms extending into the combustion chamber of great depth, which extends from the grate to the inside limit of the top channel. This arrangement permits of deep firing and the consequent carrying of a fire a long time without attention, as well as the economy in coal consumption resulting from same. The indirect fire surfaces formed by the sections above the combustion chamber section are so arranged that the gases must travel back and forth, completely across the boiler, thus adding greatly to the positive efficiency. In the dome of the steam boiler is placed a baffle plate above the water line and directly under the steam outlet, which prevents the water going over into the steam outlets."

THE PLUMBER SPOILED THE JOB.

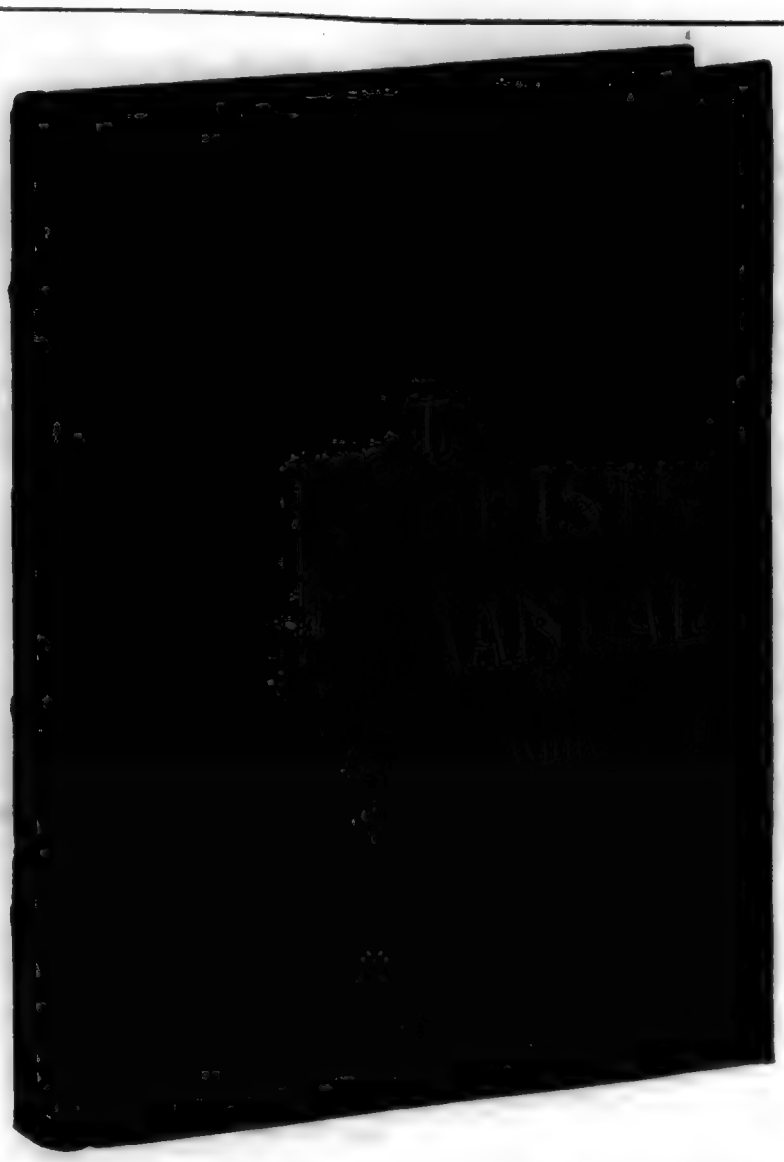
We had trouble heating our greenhouses last winter. We had a plumber pipe the houses. He said he knew how they should be piped, but he made a botch of it, for it does not heat. He put in a gravity steam system, with his main return below water line in the boiler.

Our boiler is twelve feet long, with thirty-two 3-inch return flues and a grate 46x50 inches. We have four houses, three of them 18x170 feet and one 20x84 feet. The houses are six feet to the eave and twelve feet to the ridge. Our beds are solid concrete beds. The houses run east and west and are well sheltered on the north side and west end. The boiler has two 6-inch outgoing taps and two 5-inch return taps.



We should like to heat the houses to 50 or 60 degrees in zero weather, in this Illinois climate. We grow only cool plants. S. E. L.

Each of the 170-foot houses should be equipped with a 3-inch flow under the ridge, returning by twelve 1¼-inch returns. The 84-foot house can be handled with a 2½-inch flow pipe and fifteen 1¼-inch returns. All the returns should be at least two feet above the water level of the boiler. The main returns, if long, can be made three or four inches in diameter and used as a water-leg to seal the system, but the greater the difference in level between the water-leg and the heating returns the better. The water-leg can be carried on the level of the bottom of the shell of the boiler, if desired, and be satisfactory. Without a good difference between the level of the heating returns and the water in the boiler, difficulty will be experienced, but the water-leg will help to overcome it to some extent. L. C. C.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Market.

Weather conditions in this section continue as for the last two weeks, hot and dry, and all outdoor stock shows it. Business is quiet. Benching carnations is the only order of the day.

Florists' Picnic.

The picnic given by the Indianapolis florists at Germania park, July 23, was a great success and was much enjoyed by all present. Races, baseball, dancing and bowling kept all amused till late. The ball game brought many shining lights who had been keeping their light hid under a bushel. Those who deserve special mention are Homer Wiegand, Otto Laurenze and Walter Hanson, for home runs made when some were badly needed. H. Wiegand also made a grandstand catch and was able to make a double with the aid of Sydney Smith. Both batteries worked overtime. The catchers cannot be excelled and the pitchers had everything a good pitcher should have. The line-up of the team was as follows:

| North Side. | | | South Side. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Earl Sellars | P | | H. Rodenbeck |
| John Chisholm | C | | Ed. Larsen |
| Theo. Woerner | 1st | B. | F. Hukreide |
| Sydney Smith | 2d | B. | Chas. Pahud |
| Fred Stolte | 3d | B. | Walter Hanson |
| H. Wiegand | S. | S. | Harry Pahud |
| J. Nagel | L. | F. | Robt. Glaubke |
| Geo. Wiegand | R. | F. | Alfred Warner |
| Chas. Eland | C. | F. | Otto Laurenze |

The south side won by one run, the score being 11 to 10. John Hartje and John Elsner did the umpiring in a most satisfactory manner.

Various Notes.

E. A. Nelson and wife are spending their vacation at Webster Lake.

A. Wiegand is at French Lick, taking a course of the waters.

J. B. Hensley, of Knightstown, was over visiting the craft last week. He has completed his range of three houses, each 28x200, and has them planted with carnations. He anticipates a fine business the coming season and is well prepared for it.

A. Wiegand & Sons are building a new conservatory adjoining their store, instead of the old structure, which has been in place for several years. The new building is of iron construction and strictly up-to-date, and will be lighted by electricity.

Baur & Smith have finished benching their carnations, the plants being in fine condition.

Several of the trade are making arrangements to go to the convention, and Indianapolis is sure to be well represented at Niagara Falls. S.

CAMPBELL'S PATENT SULPHUR VAPOURISER.

Extract from paper read by John H. Dunlop before a convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association: "Campbell's Sulphur Vaporizer is an English patent and a trifle expensive, but very effective, and eliminates almost all of the danger of ignition. We are using eight of them at present with excellent results."

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

There was a great deal of funeral work here last week. The call for flowers was mostly in whites. These were scarce, as the carnations hereabouts have been thrown out and the recent hot, dry spell has not been very beneficial to asters outdoors. As a result it is pretty hard to fill all orders. Not many of the growers have commenced to plant carnations inside yet, but the next two or three weeks will see them hard at work on this job.

Carnations bring 35 cents per dozen retail; the same also with asters. Roses are quite poor; $1 and $1.50 per dozen retail is the price asked. There are plenty of sweet peas to be had now; they sell at almost any price, but the general retail price is 50 cents per hundred.

Various Notes.

R. H. Woodhouse is making great changes at his place. He is tearing down two old houses and making them into one big house.

A. B. Hathaway has a nice stock of Boston and Whitmani ferns, which will be fine for the fall trade.

Napoleon Lemay, the Hillman street florist, was away in New York last week. He has recently taken a new partner into the firm. The same policy will be adhered to—quick sales, low prices and small profits.

E. Y. Peirce is cutting some Boston Market carnations, which are fine for this time of the year.

We had some good, heavy rains last week, and vegetation is once more looking nice and green. W. L.

NEGAUNEE, MICH.

The new range of houses for the Cleveland Cliffs Co. will soon be ready for use. The framework of the five main houses has been completed and good progress has been made in constructing the benches. Another house, which will be used for palms, is also well under way. The boiler has been received and will be installed within a week or two.

It has not yet been decided what disposition will be made of the old greenhouses, but it is likely that they will be torn down, as much of the framework is in poor condition. If it were possible to retain the buildings without extensive repairs, they would probably be used for forcing vegetables.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

THE BROKEN CIRCLE.

Cycas leaves have been used as a proper groundwork for the broken circle as shown in the illustration of a funeral design by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia. Mr. Fox's treatment of this design confined the material chiefly to white roses and ferns. In his shop the broken circle is made up flat on the counter and, when complete, attached to the base. A bow of moire ribbon has been used to complete the work. PHIL.

STORE AND WINDOW INTERIORS.

The Window.

Do you find finger prints and hand marks on the outside of your window glass? Till then, when you see the children stopping and self-forgetfully studying your display, you may conclude that you have some improvement yet to make. After that the grown-ups will begin to take notice and mark your window as one of the beauty spots of the locality. It is the best advertising in the world. There is no fraternity, family or society pull like unto it.

To have a good window display there must be a good window, which is to say, sensible, plain ground and fittings. Eschew all flowered or scenic panels on walls. Permit no fantastic coloring anywhere.

Have no permanent back to the window. Occasionally your window decoration will call for something of the kind, but it can be manufactured or secured for the time being. Ordinarily the atmosphere is all that is needed.

Let any necessary woodwork in the side walls be of a retiring color, such as will never be in the least conspicuous when the decoration is in. The whole is to be a picture, with its central point, setting and frame, and any feature which interferes with its perfection must be considered foreign.

As was so emphatically stated in the first of this series of articles, the woodwork and permanent decoration of the window must be a continuation of that used in the store room.

Relative Size of Window.

Some question might arise as to the relative size of the window to the store room. There is but one answer—make it as large as possible, the ceiling as high as possible, the floor as low as possible, and as plain as possible. If the space is not as large as is desired, add to the apparent size with a mirror at one or both sides. One large window with a side entrance is much better than two windows with a door between.

A large window does not necessarily demand an immense outlay of stock for display. Vacancies and atmospheric effects are worth their proportion of high rents. If anyone should inquire what part of the florists' equipment is the most important, I would unhesitatingly answer, "A good window."

Many otherwise beautiful windows are marred by the awkward placing of the sign. No permanent sign lettering, though perfect of its kind, should be permitted unless it is placed well above the eye line. Leave space for a high decoration occasionally. No sign should appear in front of any part of it; neither should a chandelier be allowed to extend into the display space.

In accordance with the size and spaciousness of the window, let the glass be perfect and clear, and kept scrupulously clean. Have electric lights so arranged as to be able to carry a wire to any part of the window in such a way that the observer cannot trace its course.

The Window Floor.

We are now ready to consider the floor and its coverings—also a matter of prime importance; so important, indeed, that we would better amend and say floors, instead of floor, for one needs not only dry, but wet windows, prohibition or non-prohibition.

In order to gain variety, introduce a water window occasionally, in spring or summer. To carry out this idea satisfactorily, one needs a cement basin, an inlet for the water and a drainage pipe. All this sounds more expensive than it really is. Two men's time in as many dull days of summer will complete the job. Let the cement basin be twelve or eighteen inches below the lower edge of the glass and slightly lower in the center, where the drainage pipe should be set. The original floor of the window can be replaced in sections over the cement floor up to the edge of the glass, and when the inspiration comes for a cool pond, waterfall or running brook—presto, you are ready to set in the gravel, rocks and other paraphernalia, for any one of a great variety of attractive little scenes.

Another advantage of the additional cement floor in the window is the provision it makes for drainage when watering potted plants in the window with a hose, and general cleaning may be freely done and self-drained.

Covering the Window Floor.

Providing a lasting and suitable covering for the floor of the window is no easy matter. Plant pots and dampness soon wear and rot out anything that does not possess cast-iron qualities. Too much expense on one material does not appeal to one as prudent.

A non-removable fixture is certainly not altogether desirable, as with different kinds of displays various grounds are called for. We see them of tile, glazed brick, inlaid wood, linoleum, cement, or plain flooring painted or stained. Most of these are good as far as they go, but they do not go far enough. Now you can use the permanent background, and again your style of arrangement requires soft, felty background. While, of course, the soft ground may be built over the hard one, the hard surface should at least be built in removable sections.

One good, everyday covering for the window floor, recently seen, was of soft, neutral, olive green linoleum. It is one of the ideal ones, inconspicuous, soft, thick-looking and easily cleaned, removed and replaced. As with all other fixtures about the store, all kinds of advantages will be found in having these window furnishings removable.

Having discussed the finishing and equipping of the display window minutely, in our next article we will suggest some designs for a window thus conveniently arranged. Gertrude Blair.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

Some Notes on Cause and Effect.

Did you ever stop to think about it? Who pays for the advertising of merchants and other business men?

Not the customer, because he buys cheaper from the one who advertises, and has a better assortment and fresher stock to choose from.

Who, then, really pays the advertising bills?

Why, the non-advertiser, of course.

A just proportion of the money he loses through his lack of initiative and enterprise, eventually finds its way to the printer, to advance the cause of education and the interests of the community.

Who pays for the advertising which attracts the people from your town to the near-by cities?

The non-advertiser not only loses that business, but in that loss pays for the other fellow's advertising. Plain, isn't it?

Just remember this fact, that the people in your town are going to spend just about so much money within the next twelve months, and the best way to secure your portion of this sum of money is to reach out for it through persistent advertising.

A Crop of Wishes.

The man who sits back and just wishes for business is surely enough going to get "wishes" in return, for his future success—and they don't go at the bank. Advertising points the way.

And advertising is simply the power to persuade the people to spend their money for your goods instead of for the other fellow's.

Now, if you will regularly tell these people what you have to sell, some of them will buy of you.

If you will cordially invite them, more of them will buy of you. But if you persuade—really and truly persuade—most of them will buy of you.

So the problem confronting you is: How can you persuade the people to buy your goods?

As advertising is the means, the question now arises: How and when to advertise? The latter part of this question can best be answered in the simple statement, "Advertise persistently and with judgment."

In other words, spasmodic advertising is neither profitable nor advantageous.

In this connection I will cite a personally observed case.

Two Methods of Advertising.

Two florists—one advertised, using quarter, half and full page ads, which appeared every once in a while, with a rather lengthy quietus between each utterance.

The other used a small, but attractive and well written ad, changed weekly and run continuously.

The latter believed in the steady pull.

Every ad—and there were many—was a strong link which he forged into a chain of confidence that pulled the business to his store—this in spite of a less advantageous location.

But the former used the spasmodic, jerky variety, and as advertising does not jerk, but invariably pulls, the end of the season showed that the "steady one" was figuring his decided gains, and the "occasional advertiser" was deeply concerned with the falling off in business.

If you can't advertise with some degree of continuity, don't make the start.

Remember, it is the continuous dropping of the water that wears away the stone.

In answering the question, "How to Advertise?" let it be understood that there can be no hard and fast rules governing the making of business-getting print.

It can't be measured with a yardstick. However, there are certain known ingredients possessed by all successful advertising.

A Carefully Laid Plan.

First of all, there must be a definite plan.

Successful advertising does not just happen. It is the result of carefully thought out and well executed plans.

Quality must necessarily precede quantity. If both can be had, so much the better. The man who has to dig for every word that goes into his ad turns out a much more readable product than the fellow who can grind it out by the yard.

Be careful that you don't crowd too much matter into your space.

Leave off the frills and the trimmings—and don't talk over your readers' heads.

Plain, common-sense talk is the desired kind. Be sensible if you want sensible people to read your ads.

Simple language is easily understood by everybody.

Don't ruin the effect of the entire space with such incongruous headings as "We are It," "We have the goods," "Siz!" "Boom!" "Bah!" and such other meaningless nonsense.

Drop the "We" habit in writing your ads—"We this" and "We that." Get the "You" habit. It is much better.

There is no person we are interested in quite so much as ourselves. It is much more agreeable to be saluted as a "you" than a "we."

Avoid demanding business. Don't impress people with the idea that you think they are under obligations to buy from you.

Solicit patronage in a courteous, business-like way.

A request is tenfold more powerful than a command.

Don't talk price—talk quality. There are plenty of people who would rather buy a good article than a cheap one.

Time to Awake.

There is an awakening among the retail florists to the realization that a better and more up-to-date plan of advertising is now in order if they expect to keep on the firing line.

Still, the formal, stilted, unchanging card announcement style of advertising is in all too common use among florists.

Many continue to cling to this lifeless and well-nigh ineffective kind of publicity—using practically no other means to tell the people that they solicit their patronage.

Bare statements and prices alone are not the best means to get people to do as you would have them do when, possibly, they are inclined to do something else.

For example, is there anything particularly attractive or appealing in an ad like this?

EMPIRE FLORAL CO.

CUT FLOWERS AND PLANTS

DECORATING

100 Main St. 'Ph. 13 W

And yet, hundreds of just such "footless" announcements are still occupying valuable space in the newspapers.

That's about all they do—just "occupy" space.

Why not put a real, live message in that space? And every florist has many, if he only realizes it.

Tell the people about your flowers and their many points of excellence. Why and how they differ from the ordinary run—and many other topics which can be presented in an attractive, interesting and convincing manner.

Have every ad contain and deliver a message.

A small ad, given even a few insertions, is worth any number of timeworn "classics" of the above variety.

Keep in mind that your advertising, first, last and all of the time, must be salesmanship.

When your advertising ceases to be salesmanship, then it isn't worth your paying for space to display it.

H. Raymond Campbell.

SWEET PEAS ON SUGAR HILL.

Sugar Hill, near Watkins, N. Y., is the home of Louis J. Bates, who ships asters and sweet peas to the New York city market in large quantities each season. He begins to cut the latter part of July and last year made his latest shipment October 18. He trains his sweet peas on the American Field wire fence, forty-five inches high and set several inches above the ground. At the time of taking the photographs reproduced herewith, late last season, the vines were veritable bushes, four to five feet thick. The varieties grown are principally Nora Unwin, Dorothy Eckford and Countess Spencer, and even in as unfavorable a season as last year stems ten to twelve inches long were the rule; occasionally they run considerably longer. On the Nora Unwin picking had just been completed when the picture was taken.

Nora Unwin Sweet Peas at Sugar Hill, N. Y.

Last year the aster crop was practically ruined by the drought, and this season has been dry, but the stock is thus far in good shape and promising well.

PEONY LADY ALEXANDRA DUFF.

T. C. Thurlow & Co., West Newbury, Mass., list Peony Lady Alexandra Duff in this season's catalogue. They copy the description from the Manual of Kelway & Son for 1908, as follows: "Lovely French white; one of the grandest peonies existing; tall and robust, and very highly perfumed; scarce. First-class certificate, R. B. S., £5 each." In explanation they say, "Several years ago we bought two plants of Lady Alexandra Duff of Messrs. Kelway and think we got the true variety. It is tall and vigorous and on good land the flowers are very large and fine. Some of the experts around Boston think ours is identical with James Kelway, but it does not agree with the description of that variety in the Messrs. Kelways' last Manual. Whatever it is, we believe it to be a valuable kind and shall propagate it as fast as possible. We have never sold any, but will offer a few this year at $5 each."

STATE STUDIES FOR FLORISTS

FOREIGN EXPERIMENTAL WORK.

Results of Investigations at Urbana.

The study of European experiments in the forcing of plants, as reported in previous issues of the Review, have revealed a number of interesting features. A new method of forcing tuberous begonias has been published by Ragionieri. In January the tubers are placed in well drained pans and covered with a mixture of leaf-mold and sand. They are kept quite warm. When the sprouts appear the tubers are potted up.

Most winter flowering varieties are stated to be hybrids from the summer flowering B. Socotrana, which bears many bulbils in thick, scale-like leaves near the base of the stem. These have the property of requiring only a short resting period.

A second flowering of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine may be obtained after the first flowering in December or January by resting the plants for two weeks, cutting off old flowers and buds and planting in a greenhouse.

Eucharis may be induced to flower twice a year by plunging the pots in a warm bed in a greenhouse. After the plants have flowered, remove the pots from the warm bed, lower the temperature of the house a little and partly withhold water. After six weeks or more, again plunge the pot a second time in a warm bed.

Forcing tulips: Select bulbs from the first shipment from Holland, pot them up in September and put in a coldframe. Allow three weeks from bringing into the greenhouse for flowering.

Forcing Peonies Outdoors.

Several French gardeners have reported methods of forcing peonies outdoors in borders. Schneider recommends planting in a warm, protected location, and at approach of winter building a coldframe over the plants. In January, remove the soil around the plants and replace with fresh horse manure. The plants will bloom in April. As the sun gets bright whitewash the glass. The flowers are larger and fresher and the plants remain longer in bloom than do those grown in the open. By forcing only every other year the same roots can be used for twelve or fifteen years.

For forcing peonies in the greenhouse the same writer suggests, on the basis of systematic experiment, growing the plants in pots outdoors one season and bringing them into the cool house early in January. Do not let the temperature rise above 8 or 10 degrees C, and give abundant ventilation. Flowers cut when the bud is about half open can be kept for a long time in a cool place and bear transportation to considerable distances. After the plants are through flowering harden them off in a coldframe and plant out in pots for one season. The same plants can be forced several times.

To overcome the common difficulty in getting vandas and some other orchids to bloom, Page recommends that they be put outside in full sunlight and allowed to dry up through the summer. Bring them in in the fall and they will flower heavily.

Retarding and Timing by Cold Storage.

Vercier has made considerable investigations on the retarding of growing plants by means of cool storage, with a view to timing. Growing plants are taken from the field and put in cool storage at 2 degrees C and then brought out and flowered normally at a predetermined time. The air in storage must be neither too wet nor too dry. About eighty-five to ninety per cent relative moisture is best.

By this treatment orange buds were kept for thirty days and then opened without loss of perfume. Azaleas were delayed fifty days, Bengal roses thirty days and lilies sixteen days.

Holding Cut Flowers in Cold Storage.

Fourton and Ducomet, professors in a French agricultural college, have made extensive experiments with thirteen kinds of flowers with reference to preserving cut flowers in cold storage. Forty-six kinds of weak solutions were used. Many of the substances tested, of course, proved unavailable, among them being some which are recommended by retail florists. Different substances and different strengths are required for different flowers.

Experiments with size of bouquet in the vessel showed that, in general, small bouquets keep the better; but with some kinds of flowers large bouquets are better because they make the water more antiseptic. Minerals are used in various concentrations up to one one-hundredth of one per cent, and organic substances in concentrations of one to ten per cent.

The wilting of flowers in water ordinarily is due to decay of the stem and clogging of the water vessels. The nearer the surface of the liquid is to the flower the longer the flower keeps.

Chinese peonies give the most marked results under this treatment. They were held in marketable condition for 138 days. Marguerites kept in water fifteen days and in salt solutions twenty-four days.

These rather cursory notes will give the American reader a little idea as to what is being done in an experimental way in the interest of floriculture in other countries. V. A. Clark.

ASTERS.

During the months of July and August last year Ross E. Zander, of Soudersburg, Pa., cut 227,000 asters from the field shown in the illustration opposite and, although the weather has been a little dry for best results, he hopes to do equally well this season. The flowers, of course, find their market in Philadelphia.

Lorraine Begonias.

With the shortening days and somewhat cooler nights the little Lorraine begonias begin to grow much faster. Lose no time in potting off late rooted cuttings. These will make useful little plants in 3½-inch or 4-inch pots. Give earlier propagated plants shifts before they can become potbound, and spread them out from time to time. For the final shift 6-inch pots or pans are sufficiently large, unless quite large plants are wished for, in which case 8-inch may be used. These begonias do not root deeply and we find they succeed better in pans than pots. If the latter receptacles are used, put in plenty of drainage. Do not use a heavy soil in potting. Flaky leaf-mold, sand, powdered charcoal and loam make a good compost. Let half of the whole mixture be leaf-mold and do not pot too firmly. Keep tops pinched and flowers removed for some time yet.

Poinsettias.

Early rooted cuttings of poinsettias should be benched by this time. Be careful not to overwater. Any sogginess at the root will cause a loss of foliage. Keep the house well ventilated night and day to keep the plants as stocky as possible, and there is no need for any shading on the glass.

It is now time to make up the early pans, which can be 8-inch or 10-inch in size. Work some little plants of nephrolepis, Cyperus alternifolius, or any other cheaply grown foliage plants between the poinsettias. These will cover up any nakedness of stem and materially add to the selling value of the pans. Grow these pans cool for some time. For another month or six weeks a frame will grow them better than a greenhouse.

The last lot of cuttings should now go into the propagating bench. These will make up into nice, serviceable little pans for Christmas sales. On no account leave the cuttings long in the benches after they are rooted. Once they become hard they are of little value.

Bouvardias.

It yet is too early to lift bouvardias, but they should be looked over once a week and leading shoots pinched. If allowed to grow ad libitum high winds will break them down badly. The early-flowering, white, sweet-scented variety, Humboldtii corymbiflora, comes in useful now in bouquet or design work, at a season when choice flowers are quite scarce. By letting a portion of the plants bloom now and keeping others pinched, a long succession of flowers may be had from this finest of all bouvardias. It would pay commercial growers to try this variety, especially where there is a good home trade. It may be had in bloom from early August until frost in the open and, if lifted and given a warm house, it will bloom much longer.

Herbaceous Calceolarias.

It is useless sowing seed of the large-flowering herbaceous section of calceolarias before this time. During intense heat, the seedlings will damp off. As florists' flowers they are less useful than the rugosa section, but their large, showy, spotted blooms will attract many customers. Like cinerarias, they are headquarters for green aphis if any are to be found, and want at all times to be grown cool. Anything just clear of freezing in winter will suit them, 40 degrees at night being better for them than 50 degrees.

In sowing the seed let the compost be largely leaf-mold, powdered charcoal and sand. Make the surface smooth and water before scattering in the little seeds. Drop a little fine sand over the seeds. Lay a sheet of glass over it, then cover with newspaper to exclude light. A cool north house or frame is suitable for the seeds. Be sure not to allow the soil to become dry and remove the paper as soon as the seedlings appear. Sun must not be allowed to strike the little plants or they will quickly perish.

Sweet Peas.

If sweet peas are desired late in October, and especially for Thanksgiving trade, the seeds should now be sown. Some growers find difficulty in germinating the seeds during hot weather, and the percentage of failures is usually heavier than during the cooler months. The seeds may be sown either in flats of sand and transplanted from these into the beds or benches where they are to flower, or, better still, be sown two or three seeds together in 2½-inch or 3-inch pots. The latter method entails more labor, but unless a large quantity is to be grown it is preferable to the sand system. Of course, the seed may also be sown directly in the benches where they are to grow, but the transplanting method will be found the safest. The little plants do not need to be nearer than two to two and a half inches apart in the rows.

Several good forcing varieties are now offered. The most popular are Earliest of All and Christmas Pink, pink and white; Florence Denzer, Mont Blanc and Watchung, pure white. Mr. Zvolanek has raised a number of other fine winter varieties. These can be had in shades of lavender, pink and red.

If you have facilities for doing it, sterilize the soil where your sweet peas are to be grown. It will well repay you for the labor involved.

Hydrangeas.

Early rooted cuttings of hydrangeas should now be in 4-inch pots and, if given a shift into 6-inch pots within the next fortnight, will make splendid plants for forcing another season. Keep them outdoors in full sun and let them have abundant supplies of water.

If you have omitted the insertion of cuttings there is still time to root a batch. These can be grown into nice little 4-inch pot plants before fall. It is yet rather early to dig up and pot any left-over stock you planted outdoors. Wait until the end of the month before doing this.

Marguerites.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to secure any cuttings of marguerites during the summer months which are not of flowering wood. As the cooler nights come on the old stock plants grow with increased vigor. Prune back one or two of these at once, if you have not yet done so, in order to secure a crop of strong, healthy cuttings. Get these into the propagating bench as soon as you can, to grow along into specimens for Easter, 1909.

Seed Sowing.

If you have omitted sowing seeds of any of the useful biennials and perennials, lose no time in doing so. There is still time to get nice plants of pansies, myosotis, digitalis, hollyhocks, delphiniums, gypsophila and other hardy stock. As the seedlings become large enough to transplant, remove them to nursery rows. The soil should be well loosened up for them, and select cloudy days, if possible, for the work.

French Bulbs.

The earliest arrivals of such French bulbs as Roman hyacinths, Paper White narcissi and Trumpet Major narcissi are about due and, as these are all useful early winter flowers, a good batch should be gotten into flats as soon as received. Four inches of soil is ample for any of these bulbs. Give a good watering and place on the floor in a dark cellar. The Paper Whites will be the first to sprout and these can easily be had in flower for Thanksgiving. The number of bulbs forced in America this year will be considerably less than were grown last season. It is to be hoped that prices will be more satisfactory and with a heavily reduced output this is more than probable.

Propagating.

While there is still plenty of solar heat and cutting benches are largely unoccupied, it is a good plan to root a quantity of crotons, dracænas, dieffenbachias, ficus and other ornamental-leaved plants. Kept constantly moist, they root much more quickly than in winter with bottom heat.

If the stock of that ever useful plant, the variegated vinca, is a little short, look over the plants in the field and rub off a number of the short, succulent shoots with a heel. Started thus early, they can be grown into fair-sized, salable plants by next May. There is rarely any overstock of this vinca and for filling vases or window and piazza-boxes it is indispensable.

BOSTON FERNS.

There are few places of retail growers where there is not a side bench somewhere, maybe a little too shady for carnations, but just the place to bench out at once a few hundred 2½-inch Bostons. What fine stock this will make by October—away ahead of any pot culture that could be given them! The soil you use does not need to be just so, as long as it is sweet and porous. They can stand any amount of sun; that is, if they have been used to it. Only the other day, while visiting one of the places near Chicago, the owner showed me a 200-foot bench of freshly planted Bostons — every leaf burned brown. This happened on the day the stock was planted out. There was no shade given —the temperature was 93 degrees outside and the young stock came from a rather dark side bench of a palm house.

When one considers that the Boston fern is one of the most desirable of house plants, with which so many have success, and quite often one sees fine, large specimens, which have made their growth in a bay window, it would seem that with all the thousands and thousands which have been sold in the last twelve years, every family would have at least four of its own, and yet the demand is constantly on the increase, and, as Louis Wittbold says, "It simply seems impossible to have too many good Bostons."

After all, there seem to be none of the beautiful sports which have been introduced from time to time as hardy as a house plant as is the Boston, and since its introduction I doubt whether any other novelty has been more profitable to a greater number of us than the Boston, and there will not be any let-up in the demand next winter. So get busy.

REPAIRING THE ROOFS.

In this time of house-cleaning it may not be out of place to remind you of the going over of the roofs of the houses. It is not a bit too early to do it, for it will not be any cooler this month, and in September fall work begins to take away our time, and heavy night dews will often keep the sashbars of the houses damp for a couple of hours in the morning. There is no better time than now to do all such repairing as is needed to put the roof into first-class shape for the coming winter.

The putty bulb, with liquid putty, either bought ready-made or prepared out of whiting and oil, will be a coal saver next January if properly applied now, just enough to fill the space between the glass and the bar; any more would be wasted. If everything is ready and one man goes over the rows of glass to see to it that every pane is properly kept in place by the glazing points, or whatever is made use of to hold the glass, and another man follows him with the putty bulb, it only takes a short time to go over a 100-foot house.

If the bars are in such condition as to require a coat of paint, this should be attended to first and it takes a good man to do it. To paint with white lead and oil on top of putty, or to mix even the least white lead with putty, always causes trouble whenever the putty is to be removed from the woodwork, as is the case when broken panes are to be repaired.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

The Plants in the House.

As soon as the plants are reëstablished enough to have resumed growing and when frequent syringing can be dispensed with, it will be time to go over the beds and break up the surface of the soil, pulverizing the lumps and leveling it off. The first crop of weeds will be coming up and, if this is done in time, most of these weeds can be killed by being worked into the soil while breaking it up. Those that do take hold and grow again can be pulled up a week or two later with far less labor. The sooner this is done after planting the better, because after planting the soil is usually left uneven, with low places around the plants. If the soil is allowed to crust around the plants and then soaked continually when watering, it is sure to cause stem-rot and souring of the soil. Breaking it up so the air can get into it keeps it mellow and sweet.

Mulching and Syringing.

Do not be in too great a hurry to apply any mulch, as that tends to keep out the air as well as to keep in the moisture. Better water more frequently and stir the soil when it crusts over for at least a month after planting. After the roots get to working through the soil is time enough for the mulch. Reduce the syringing to about twice a day. When you water in the forenoon, spray the plants overhead and again after dinner. Damp down the walks at the same time. This should be done, of course, only on bright, warm days, when the doors and ventilators are wide open, and in no case after the plants have taken hold should they stand wet on the foliage over night.

Removing Dead Foliage.

While stirring the soil is a good time to take off what dead foliage may be on the plants. We do not approve of cleaning the plants to any great extent when taking them up to plant. It cannot be done at that time without exposing the roots to the air, and more harm is done than good. We find, too, that this year we have far less dead foliage to take off than usual. Whether the lack of shade has anything to do with this, I am not certain, but I am inclined to think it has. The plants being well matured naturally has much to do with it, too, but I think that, as the two go hand in hand, both deserve credit for the result. I certainly would not care to go back to the old method of heavy shading during planting time. It is a mistake, even when done most skillfully and carefully.

CARNATION SUPPORTS.

The Old-fashioned Kind.

Once upon a time all carnation growers tied up their plants by the network of wire and twine still seen in many places, but it has been found that this is not as cheap a method as most of those who use it have thought—and cheapness is about all the system has to recommend it. True, two runs of wire between each row of plants, and a few nickel balls of string, cost little, but they are extravagant of time in putting up each season and unhandy to work among.

A great many of the best things in this world are due to man's laziness, and perhaps that is the reason we now have the patent carnation support; at any rate, those who have tried any one of the several excellent devices of this character now on the market have usually abandoned the old-fashioned method for good and all. Of course the man who benches 50,000 carnation plants must make quite an investment if he buys patent supports, but, once bought, they last for years. Besides, the wire supports are so quickly put in position that the economy of time affords a good saving on a large place.

The Wire Supports.

Probably the first of the "ready-to-wear" carnation supports was that sold under the trade name of Model, by Igoe Bros., of Brooklyn. It was patented July 27, 1897, and has had a steadily increasing sale for more than ten years. It is an extension support, a second section being readily attached at the top when the plants have made sufficient growth to require it.

Next in point of age among the supports now on the market is the so-called tendril of H. Thaden & Co., Atlanta, Ga., Several years ago the S. A. F. gave this a certificate of merit, and although not often seen in the west, hundreds of thousands of these are now in use in all parts of the country.

At the Dayton convention of the S. A. F., J. H. Broxey had a neat exhibit of the Gem support, showing it in use on a section of bench planted with year-old plants. It received a certificate of merit. This support consists of one stake and two rings, which can be raised or lowered according to the needs of the plant, or when not in use can be folded flat without the rings being removed from the stake. It takes little space when folded.

The Heim support is made by the Heim Support Co., of Connersville, Ind., in which C. A. Rieman is largely interested. It consists of one double stake with a ring on either side, the rings being adjustable to suit the needs of the plants.

A. LAUB & SON.

Hughsonville, N. Y.,
July 30, 1908.

With the backing of this well-known florist it has sold largely the last two seasons. It was patented July 31, 1906.

Christ Lund, of Wausau, Wis., was the inventor of the Common Sense support, put on the market last season by C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee. It is manufactured by the O. J. Jawort Co., Wausau, who put in a lot of special machinery to give the wire the necessary twist and are turning it out in large quantities this season. It consists of a single wire stake and an open ring, encircling the plant and locking and unlocking with a simple twist of the wrist.

The Richmond is a support manufactured by the Eagle Machine Works, Richmond, Ind., and used by some of the well-known growers of that town. It consists of a double wire stake to which the rings, in pairs, opposite, attach themselves through the springiness in the wire that clasps the double stake.

The latest candidate for the favor of the carnation growers hails from Omaha, where it is manufactured by Wm. H. Woerner, who is well known to western florists as the maker of wire designs. This is entirely different from any of the other supports, consisting of two tall loops to set over the plants like the center arch of a croquet set. The supports are bent to provide three notches into which wire rings are dropped as the plants need higher supports. Mr. Woerner has applied for a patent and is preparing to manufacture his support in quantity.

These are by no means all the ready-to-use wire supports, but they are the ones illustrated in this issue and the ones in which the manufacturers have confidence enough to push them; hence they are naturally the ones most largely used. If you are still using string, better send for a hundred or so of each and try them out for yourself this season; the chances are it will mean your emancipation from the cordage trust.

A VISIT TO MT. CLEMENS.

A. Von Boeselager.

At this time of the year the greenhouse man is not very anxious about having any callers, especially callers who are themselves in the business and want to see what they can see. For it is the time of the year when the houses are usually at their worst. Still, something can always be learned, as was clearly demonstrated to the writer and his companion, Robert Rahaley, during a recent trip to the Bath City.

The first stop was made at the model plant of August Von Boeselager. Mr. Boeselager has not had as much experience as a grower as have some others in the trade, but, having been raised on a prosperous farm in the old country, he does know that in order to grow good stock it is absolutely necessary to keep the houses in good repair at all times. Two large boilers were protected against rust and other harmful agents by a good coat of asphaltum on the outside and a free circulation of air on the inside. No dirt was lying around under the benches or in corners, to act as breeding places for various pests. A number of empty paint cans accounted for the well preserved houses. Mr. Boeselager employs only a small force of help, but, as he puts it, "We keep after the dust all the time, never letting it get so thick that a mop has to be used." Result: Good, clean stock when the demand comes. His carnations are all planted in the houses. He will grow an assortment of roses, single violets, and mums, besides some smilax and asparagus.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Von Boeselager we were able to drive around in a nice runabout instead of walking, giving us much more time at each place and saving some exertion.

Leopold Mallest.

It was a pleasant drive from here to Leopold Mallest's place. Mr. Mallest built up quite a reputation as a violet grower several years ago and is after the honors again this year. He has a good start, for his stock looks well. Besides violets, Mr. Mallest will again go heavily into carnations. These he does exceptionally well. What is no doubt the best patch of asters was seen at this place; the plants are quite free from disease and the varieties are good. Mr. Mallest is fortunate in this, as asters promise to be a scarce article this year, at least as far as Mount Clemens is concerned.

Breitmeyer's Sons.

The genial William Breitmeyer showed us around at their large place. They are pretty well caught up in all the work. Carnations are about all planted. Stock in the rose houses looks well. The only thing that is troubling Mr. Breitmeyer is what he terms a new species of thrips. Whatever it is, it does no end of mischief. The young buds are crippled and the young leaves so badly eaten that they invariably die. In some cases whole plants are destroyed in a night. The Breitmeyers grow many varieties of roses. Among them for this coming season will be: Rhea Reid; Potter Palmer; the old Safrano, for use in corsage bouquets; Queen Beatrice, of which Mr. Breitmeyer expects a great deal. The color is a beautiful rose-pink and the plants produce a healthy, vigorous growth. One house in the newer range is to be devoted to carnations this year. The old houses have all been put into good shape, though with as little expense as possible, as the idea is to gradually transfer the whole plant to the opposite side. The chrysanthemums look well and should produce good flowers, judging from present appearances. This firm will make another effort to grow good violets, but they will have to live in the oldest houses on the place, as they are not to receive much "petting and nursing," as Mr. Breitmeyer puts it. If they do not look favorable in fall, out with them. Herman Pautke will look after the violets this year. Several houses will be devoted to summer roses for another year. The Breitmeyers are also firm believers in the fact that a well kept place produces better stock.

Robert Klagge.

Robert Klagge was not at home, but his son proved to be well posted on all that was going on about the place and he posted us. A nice house of Kaiserin and La Detroit has been helping to swell the receipts from the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. Mr. Klagge is going heavily into violets this year, room having been made by growing two houses less of carnations. Many carnations have already been planted and the stock looks fine. Some of the help was busy carting out old lancifolium lily bulbs, which have been bringing good returns. No new houses are under construction this year, but there is some talk of building some Beauty houses next year. Mr. Klagge's place can also be spoken of as a model greenhouse plant. Everything, from the coal pile to the rubbish heap, shows care. One thing that has gone back on Mr. Klagge this year is his asters. His early ones are pretty well dried up, and while in other years he has usually supplied the market pretty well, he cannot do so this year until the later crops arrive. The Detroit market is also supplied pretty well with various greens from Mr. Klagge's place.

Albert L. Stevens.

Albert L. Stevens' place, just across the way, was next visited. Carnations and violets are grown by Mr. Stevens. He does not intend going very heavily into violets, but will grow the usual number of carnations, and he grows them well, too. The men were busy taking off some of the soil from the solid benches, which will then receive a new top-dressing. Mr. Stevens has a fine lot of asters coming into bloom. Up to the time of the visit, Monday, July 20, few blooms had been cut, but the plants were full of good-sized buds. This plant is not as large as the two above, but is steadily growing, and what there is of it is well kept. Mr. Stevens divides his stock between our two local commission houses.

Taylor, Carey, et al.

James Taylor's place was receiving a thorough overhauling. Most of the houses are to receive a coat of paint before any planting will be done. A change from steam to hot water is also contemplated. Mr. Taylor talked some of growing one large house of violets. He has a nice lot of asters for the Detroit market.

James Carey was, as usual, hard at work. Considerable of his plant is devoted to roses. Mr. Carey's son, who has been with Poehlmann Bros., will have charge of the rose houses this year. He does not intend to grow any new varieties, the old standbys being good enough. Mr. Carey has some fine asters. The same trouble has been experienced here as nearly everywhere in Mount Clemens, namely, dryness, causing many of the aster flowers to come with a yellow center and small flower. Many fine sweet peas were ready to pick.

On the whole, the outlook is good for a nice lot of stuff from Mount Clemens this coming season. At present there is a scarcity of asters, due to dry weather and the damage being done by stem-rot or some similar disease. Sweet peas are quite plentiful, and the flowers good. The writer is of the opinion that too many colored asters are sown by the growers. One fine batch seen were nearly all dark purple and rose-pink. This is a big mistake, as most of the flowers are used for funeral work at this time of the year and light colors are in demand. Mr. Rahaley is of the opinion that there is room for more good carnations on this market and was surprised that some growers intend growing less than in former years. H. S.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

National Sweet Pea Show.

For several weeks the prospects of the sweet pea show at London being up to its usual standard had been a debatable point. At times unfavorable weather caused growers to be despondent and, when a period of rain set in during the first two weeks of July, the hopes of many went down to zero. But the situation was not altogether irretrievable and a week's sunshine prior to the show brought about wonderful changes, with the result that the galaxy of blooms under the roof of the R. H. S. hall July 24 was never surpassed, and the beauty of the general arrangement of the exhibits was the theme and the admiration of all.

Upon entering the hall, visitors passed under a grand archway of sweet peas, designed by R. Pinches, London, and decorated by R. Felton & Sons, court florists, Hanover square, London, with sweet peas and gypsophila, and for this a special gold medal of the society was awarded. In the center of the hall, Carter & Co., London, had erected a pyramidal stand decorated with thousands of sprays of sweet peas, small palms and ferns, and the effect was magnificent. For this, also, a special gold medal was awarded.

Gold medals were awarded to Dobbie & Co., Rothesay; G. Stark & Son, Great Ryburgh; E. W. King & Co., Coggeshall; Baker's, Wolverhampton; Hobbies, Ltd., Dereham, and Cannell & Co., Swanley.

G. Stark & Son exhibited George Stark, the new variety which received the society's silver medal as the best variety of the year at the trials, and Mrs. R. W. Pitt, rosy pink, another new variety of promise.

E. W. King & Co. put up a fine exhibit of vases and stands, surmounted by an arch from which baskets of sweet peas were suspended, but the center of attraction was a new pink, giant flowered variety named Ernest King.

Very high quality was represented in the beautifully arranged exhibits from Dobbie & Co. The head of the firm, William Cuthbertson, is the society's president. Mrs. A. Ireland, a new variety which received the society's F. C. C., was greatly admired.

Hobbies, Ltd., Dereham, demonstrated in a telling manner that they know how to grow and show sweet peas to perfection.

Silver gilt medals were awarded to E. Webb & Sons, Stourbridge; W. J. Unwin, Cambridge, and C. W. Breadmore, Winchester, all contributing pretty exhibits. Henry Eckford did not come out quite so strongly as on some past occasions and did not rise above a large silver medal, and Jones & Son, Shrewsbury, received a similar award.

Considerable interest centered around the tables on which the challenge cup classes were arranged, and competition was never so keen. The Sutton silver challenge cup, trade competitors excluded, for fifteen bunches of sweet peas, distinct, was awarded to Sir Randolph Baker, Blandford. For the Henry Eckford memorial cup there was a stiff fight between the champion growers, the judges deciding in favor of F. Wellesley, Woking. Last year's winner, T. Stevenson, was fourth, and T. Jones, the previous year's winner, came in second. Thus, in three years it has been won by three different men. It must be won three times by one man in direct succession before it becomes his property. Its value is 50 guineas.

The Horace Wright challenge bowl, for nine bunches, was won by Rev. T. McMurdie, Addlestone.

C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., presented the prizes in a class for twenty-four bunches, distinct, and W. H. Ramsley, Alford, secured the first prize.

For the Burpee challenge cup six competitors entered. It is awarded to the best display of sweet peas on a table three feet by four feet. Only a few points separated the first and second exhibits, but the balance was in favor of R. Bolton, Warton, Carnforth, who has been going strong at several shows this year. His exhibit contained fine vases of Helen Lewis, Countess Spencer, John Ingman, Primrose Spencer, Mrs. C. Foster, Evelyn Hemus, The Marquis, Constance Oliver, etc. The second prize and silver gilt medal were awarded to Silas Cole.

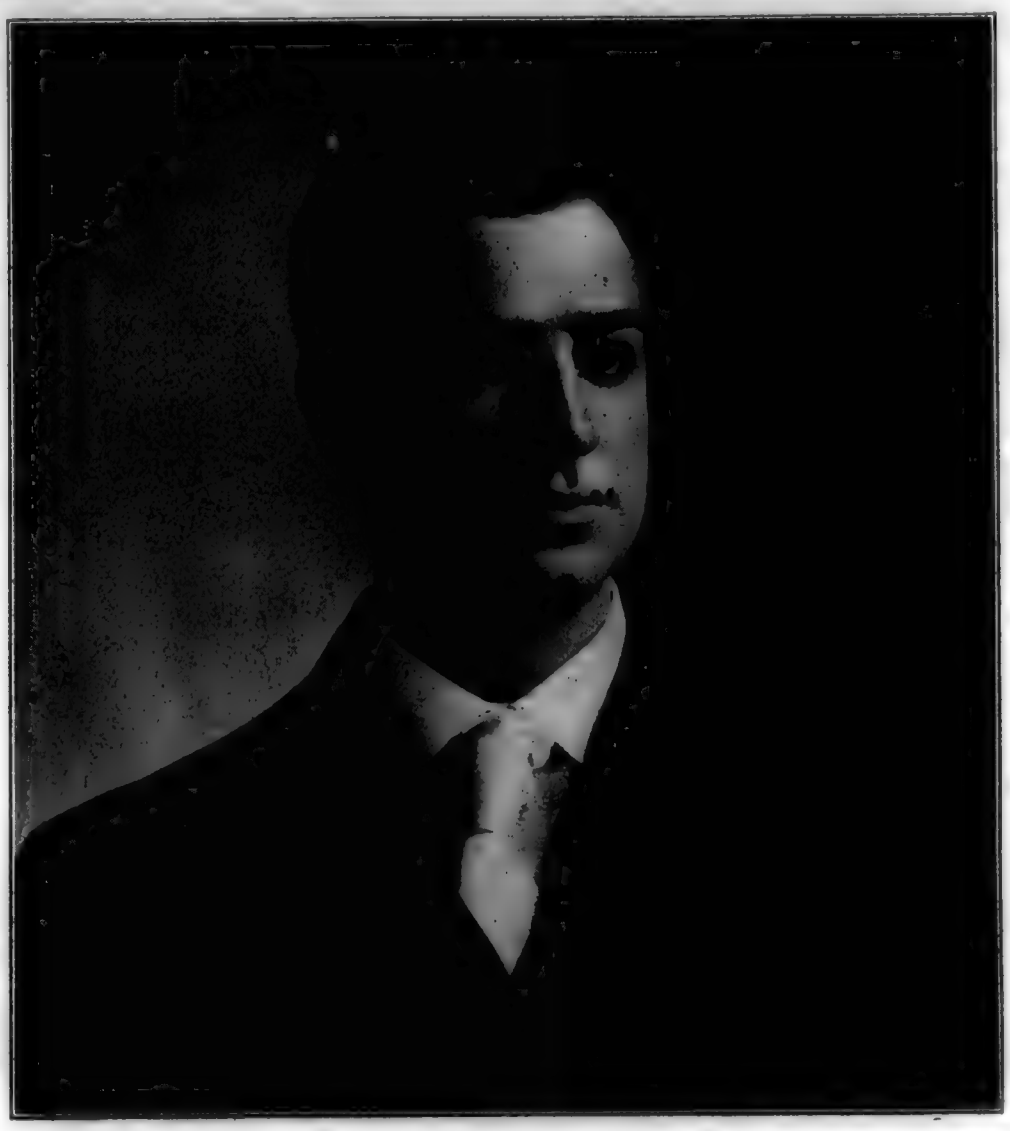
Decorated dinner tables were a lovely feature of the show; also decorative vases, epergnes, etc., of sweet peas, Miss Cole and Miss Cuthbertson being awarded the highest honors.

Of course, growers had many new varieties on view, and critics were busy morning, noon and night, and no doubt will continue to be for many days to come, but according to N. S. P. S. rules, no awards are made until varieties have stood the tests of the society's trials, seeds for which have to be sent in as may be directed. Thirty-five varieties engaged the attention of the floral committee. These were exhibited under number only, the exhibitor's name being unknown to the members. Fourteen varieties were recommended to go forward for trial, and until July of next year there will be little more to say about them.

Altogether, the eighth show of the society was a grand success, a glorious display of flowers, and favored with beautiful weather.



There was a large attendance at the show, including Arthur M. Kirby, of Peter Henderson & Co., New York, who officiated as one of the judges; also W. Miller, of the editorial department of Country Life, New York, and Mrs. Miller, and enthusiasts from British Columbia, New Zealand, France and Germany.

At the annual dinner, held the same evening, William Cuthbertson, J. P., president of the society, occupied the chair, and in the course of the proceedings presented a testimonial to the honorable secretary, Chas. H. Curtis, from the society, in the shape of a check for £60 and an album of photographs of sweet pea growers. Mr. Sherwood, of Hurst & Son, London, followed with the presentation of a gold bracelet to Mrs. Curtis.

A. M. Kirby, in replying to the toast of the judges, said that the world looked to England as the leading country in the advancement of the sweet pea. At present much difficulty was experienced in the fixing of new varieties; this he attributed to the break in the blood through the advent of the Spencer type. The main object of his trip was to see what the N. S. P. S. show was like, and he was greatly impressed with its high standard of excellence.

W. Miller, in proposing the toast of the society, said that England beat America hollow in the cultivation of sweet peas, and he spoke many appreciative words regarding the work of English hybridists in bringing the flower to such perfection. He concluded an interesting speech by proposing long life and prosperity to the National Sweet Pea Society.

The last toast on the list, "The Ladies," was entrusted to S. B. Dicks, of Cooper, Taber & Co., London, who spoke in his usual effective and humorous vein. Referring to the toast as the most important toast on the list, he coupled it with the names of Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Cuthbertson.

Israel Rosnosky.

Mrs. Miller, New York, replied. She naively remarked that the toast was the last on the list, to give the ladies an opportunity of having the last word. Continuing, she said: "I knew it was an honor to come to the sweet pea show, an additional honor to be invited to the dinner, but to be invited to speak—I am simply speechless. Today I have noted with admiration the grace, the elegance and the dignity of the sweet pea, and I never expect to see a more beautiful show, a fitting finale to the splendid two months spent in England." BEE.

LONGIFLORUMS FROM FORMOSA.

[A paper by I. Rosnosky, of the Henry F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, read before the Philadelphia Florists' Club, August 4, 1908.]

The Formosa lily was discovered about three years ago, by Mr. Uhei Suzuki, of Yokohama, Japan.

Mr. Suzuki, after repeated efforts to bring a lily on the market that could compete in earliness with the Bermuda Harrisii, discovered on the island of Formosa a wild-growing lily of longiflorum type. The bulbs were collected and cultivated exactly as they are on the mainland. The cultivation proved highly successful, and three years ago six cases, in miscellaneous sizes, of the Formosa lily were shipped for the purpose of experimenting in the United States.

The experiment proved a success, and as the following year a further consignment of sixty cases resulted equally well, the Yokohama house was instructed to plant as many Formosa lilies as possible.

Quality of Blooms.

The Formosa lily flowers in the month of February in its native island, which is about two months earlier than the Harrisii in Bermuda. By the end of May the bulbs are ready for shipment and ought to reach here in August. Repeated experiments have proved the Formosa lily to be strictly free from disease and the bulbs are good for either pot, plant or cut flowers.

There are about six different kinds of Formosa lilies, but the flowers are almost identical and bloom at the same time. The flower opens up a fine, pure, waxy white, and keeps splendidly. The average size of the plants is thirty inches to forty inches high, with leaves from the root up. The plant produces three to eight flowers to a plant and, according to size of bulbs, they stand out firm and strong, and last long. The plants stand very erect and their stalks are firm and hard.

Peculiarities of Culture.

I wish to call special attention to the fact that if the Formosa lilies are not forced too much they will all turn out the same height. If forced very early they will grow rather tall and may not produce flowers as large as they should if grown in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees.

If the lilies are wanted for Easter, the bulbs should be potted in November and kept cool. This long rest that the bulbs get, from the time of their arrival until they can be potted, is very beneficial.

An interesting result was achieved by the Hinode Florist Co., of Whitestone, N. Y., with this year's lot of multiflorum lilies. They did not pot the bulbs until a week after Christmas and, much to everyone's surprise, the plants were ready for the Easter market in perfect condition. Furthermore, the Hinode Florist Co. only had to throw out ten per cent of their multiflorum lilies, while some other growers sustained a larger loss on the other varieties. They kept their lilies in a temperature of from 50 to 55 degrees at night, sometimes 60 degrees.

A Caution as to Watering.

I also wish to emphasize the fact that a great many lilies are killed by overwatering, for even the strongest and healthiest plants can be killed that way. The roots get soaked until they are brown, and the plant dies. During cold weather the water should be warmed up, to avoid chilling the plants.

For the benefit of the Philadelphia florists, I wish to say that E. Lieker, at Lansdowne, Pa., gave the Formosa a thorough trial of 1,500 bulbs. He was exceptionally well pleased with the results last Easter. I also saw a fine lot of Formosas at A. Graham & Son's, Cleveland, O., A. N. Pierson's, Cromwell, Conn., and several other places. All these parties have placed increased orders for 1908 delivery.

I am also informed that Bassett & Washburn, of Chicago, had especially good results with Formosas last Easter. This firm grows a large quantity.

GRUBS IN GERANIUM BEDS.

We have several geranium beds infested with white grubs at the roots. The roots are eaten off and, on examination, we find a white grub boring in the lower part of the stock. These beds were planted to bulbs last fall and were covered, when the ground froze, with perhaps two inches of half rotted stable manure, which was spaded in this spring. The soil is a clay subsoil. Other beds planted to other kinds of plants under the same conditions have not been bothered to any great extent. Has the wet season anything to do with it? Late in May the ground was rather wet when spaded. H. D. C.

The damage spoken of has probably been caused by the larvæ of the May beetle or June bug. The beetle deposits its eggs usually in patches of cow manure, and these hatch out the white grubs which in some seasons work widespread destruction to grass land and many garden crops, including those grown under glass. The only remedy we can recommend to quickly kill off the grubs without injuring your plants is to procure a bottle of carbon bisulphide. Pour a few drops of this in holes eighteen inches apart each way, immediately covering these after pouring in the liquid. The fumes strike downward and will suffocate the grubs. Do not use any lights while using the carbon, as it is of an explosive nature. It would be well this fall to lime the ground well where these pests have appeared and, if you are not going to plant with bulbs, dig the ground over and leave it rough over winter. Even if you used new soil, while it might be better for the plants, it would be just as likely to be full of the destructive larvæ which are attacking the roots of your geraniums. The spring rains are not responsible; with most of us, drought followed.

ASPARAGUS SPRENGERI.

Have you ever figured out what it costs for cut Sprengeri during the winter months? Or, have you ever been caught when it was as scarce in the market as red carnations a week before Christmas? Strange, and yet the case is the same as with Boston ferns; the more new and more curly members of the nephrolepis family are introduced to take the place of the Bostons, the more Bostons are sold. There are two things the retail grower has hardly ever enough of, and these are Bostons and Asparagus Sprengeri. Leave the growing of plumosus strings to the specialist and buy the strings whenever in need of them, but grow the other kind yourself, even if only able to maintain a carnation house temperature in winter. Do this not alone for what this indispensable green costs in midwinter, but for the convenience of having it when wanted.

Do not try to crowd the fleshy roots into small pots or into a bench of four or five inches of soil and expect good results. It cannot be done, and why occupy valuable bench room when they can be grown to perfection in wire baskets?

Right now is as good a time as any to start for next winter's supply. Use three strong 3-inch pot plants for a 12-inch, or, what is better, a 14-inch basket. You can make the baskets out of chicken wire, but the cost of the ready-made article is so little, not to mention the unsightliness of the home-made affair, that it does not pay to bother. Use sphagnum moss for lining and a good, rich, but porous soil for planting. Do not hang the baskets now; they are better off stood on a bench until they begin to crowd each other for room. In every greenhouse plant there are a lot of places to hang the baskets, and there is nothing hung up which will bring better returns with less expense and trouble.

When the roots begin to shove through the bottom and sides of the baskets, it means a light dose of liquid cow manure is wanted, say, once every two weeks. And, like Boston ferns, they want plenty of water, but cannot stand sour soil.

In filling the baskets now, do not start wrong by using a lot of stunted or small stock. If you have no good stock of your own, a glance through the classified advertisements will get you in touch with a dozen or more who have the stock, and some of them not far from home.

BUFFALO.

Club Picnic.

The annual picnic of the Florists' Club was held at the Bedell House, on Grand Island, Wednesday, July 29, and the 130 persons who attended pronounced it the most successful outing ever held by the club.

We regret that a few of our members, notably Miss Rebstock, Mr. Palmer and C. F. Christensen, were unable to be with us.

The ball game was, of course, the largest and most talked of event of the day and, while it was a rather one-sided affair, the west side team winning over the east side by a score of 10 to 4, it served to show us who could and who could not play ball, something we need to know in choosing a team at the S. A. F. convention. W. F. Kasting umpired.

The tug of war, between teams captained by W. F. Kasting and William

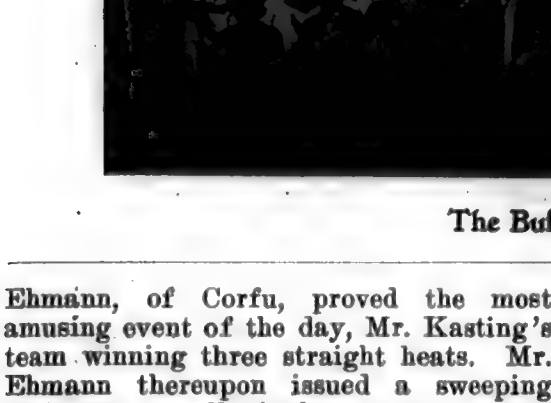
Ehmann, of Corfu, proved the most amusing event of the day, Mr. Kasting's team winning three straight heats. Mr. Ehmann thereupon issued a sweeping challenge to pull, singly, any man on the grounds. He was kept busy the remainder of the day.

The relay running race, between five of Palmer & Son's employees and a picked team, was won by the former, largely through the ability of James Longley.

The other events on the program were as follows:

Hop, skip and jump, David Scott first, William Grever second, James Longley third.

Men's race, over 35, T. Shank first, E. C. Brucker second, John Preisac third.



Running long jump, David Scott first, James Longley second, William Grever third.

One hundred-yard handicap, open to all, James Longley first, Edward Walther second, Joseph Speidel third.

Philip Scott, being a professional, was barred from the above events, but he gave us an exhibition jump which almost equaled the world's record.

George McClure won the bowling tournament, and Mr. McClure, by the way, has been chosen captain of the bowling team to represent this city at the convention.

Much credit is due Mr. Sangster and Mr. Grever for the able way in which everything was arranged for and carried out. R. F. D.

INSIDE CULTURE IN SUMMER.

Watering, Weeding and Disinfecting.

Those who grow their violets in the house should have their planting done before this time, and for a while they must take extra care of them, paying particular attention to the watering and never allowing them to suffer for the want of it, but keeping them rather on the wet side until they are well established and growing.

Do not get careless and overlook the little details which, during the hot summer weather, go to the making of a perfect house. For one thing, keep the house clean. Do not let the weeds get even a start, as they take strength from the soil, harbor vermin of one kind or another, and, last but not least, smother and injure the plant. Not only should the weeds be kept out of the beds and borders, but it is equally important to keep them from the paths and under the benches.

It is well not to forget the scattering of lime about the house freely, keeping everything wholesome and sweet, as well as working annoyance to the sow bugs, centipedes, etc., that always like to visit our houses. R. E. S.

OBITUARY.

Christian Rieger.

Christian Rieger died in Pittsburg, Pa., Sunday, August 2, after an illness of ten months. Mr. Rieger was a regular attendant at the S. A. F. conventions for many years and, while he was not a florist, he had made nearly all the wire designs used by the trade in western Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia for the last thirty-five years. He was loved and respected by all who knew him, for his many good qualities. He was always cheerful and had a kind word for everyone. Being above the average in intelligence, he was often given the opportunity of tendering advice, which was always on the right side. The trade all knew him and will all mourn for him as a friend.

William Hale.

William Hale died in San Francisco, Cal., July 22, at the age of 63 years. Mr. Hale was at one time the owner of the Dwight-Way Nursery, in Berkeley, Cal., but retired from business several years ago.

Justin A. Goodhue.

Justin A. Goodhue, president of the Utah Nursery Co.; and an old resident of Salt Lake City, Utah, died suddenly July 23 at the Alta Club, from apoplexy. Mr. Goodhue was seated in the library of the club at about 6 o'clock, when he was seized with the sudden attack. When the attendants ran to his assistance he was unconscious and completely paralyzed. He was taken to a bedroom and Dr. A. C. Ewing was summoned. When the doctor arrived he at once saw that Mr. Goodhue could live but a few hours. He died about 8 o'clock. His niece, Miss Katherine G. Vorse, who has been his housekeeper for some years, was called to his bedside and was present when the end came.

Mr. Goodhue was born in Ohio in 1845. He enlisted in an Ohio regiment at the opening of the war of the states and served throughout the whole struggle, winning the rank of captain at the time of his discharge from the service. He removed to Salt Lake about twenty years ago and has been engaged in the nursery business since that time. Fourteen years ago he became associated with M. B. Sowles, who, with Mr. Goodhue, organized the Utah Nursery Co.

Mr. Goodhue was a bachelor and was one of the oldest members of the Alta Club. Mr. Sowles, his most intimate associate, said that so far as he knew, Mr. Goodhue carried no insurance at the time of his death, although several endowment policies held by him had matured and had been paid in. Mr. Goodhue was a Mason of many years' standing.

COLEUS DECAYED AT ROOTS.

I send some coleus plants, and also some of the soil in which they were bedded. The plants were healthy when bedded, except that there were a few mealy bugs, but to no damaging extent. The trouble seems to lie in the soil, as the roots are badly decayed. The soil has been in beds for five years and was well manured last fall. Coleus has been planted in the beds for five years in succession and has done well up to this year. Do you think a change of soil would be an advantage? G. T. D.

Without knowing more of soil and climatic conditions it is difficult to tell just what has caused the coleus to act in this way. The specimens sent were certainly in a bad condition and some mealy bugs were on the roots. It is just possible that something in the soil, which came with the manure, may be the cause of the roots decaying. A renewal of the soil would seem to be the best remedy. As a rule, coleus will grow luxuriantly in almost any soil in any location, and unless some disease unknown to us has attacked your plants, the trouble would seem to be in the soil. C. W.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Although extreme quiet prevails in cut flower circles at present, the arrivals are so much reduced from a few weeks ago that much better clearances are being effected. Outdoor flowers now hold the center of the stage, asters being most in evidence. Prices on these have dropped within the last few days. Sweet peas are not abundant and are of rather poor quality. Gladioli are plentiful and good. Carnations are almost out of the running at present. Such as are coming in are small. The same holds true of roses, although the flowers of Kaiserin and Carnot are of fair quality. In lilies there are good blooms of longiflorum, also a fair supply of speciosum and auratum. The latter does not sell well on account of its heavy odor, however. It looks now as though there would be a slow but steady improvement in business from now onward.

A Visit to Farquhar's.

The members of the committee on plants and flowers of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, with other invited guests, visited the greenhouses of R. & J. Farquhar & Co., at Roslindale, July 31, to inspect their collection of new lilies from northern China, now in bloom. The party consisted of T. D. Hatfield, C. W. Parker, J. A. Pettigrew, Duncan Finlayson, E. Johansson, Joseph Clark, Samuel Hartwell, Thomas Roland, Robert Cameron and W. P. Rich. Before going to Roslindale the party was entertained at lunch by Messrs. Farquhar at the Parker House. There are several thousand of the new lilies, of which a goodly proportion were flowering. A pretty, little, graceful variety similar to L. pulchellum, with bright scarlet flowers, was much admired. James Farquhar thinks that by crossing it on one of the new white trumpet varieties he may eventually obtain a scarlet trumpet lily. A large quantity of blooms were open on a variety with large white or pale lemon trumpet flowers, with chocolate markings on the outside of the petals, similar to Brownii, but with much shorter foliage. Grown and opened under glass the flowers come pure white and take on an entirely different form, more nearly resembling auratum in this respect. The bulbs are quite different from those of Brownii. Bulbs of small size flower, and Messrs. Farquhar think there are great possibilities in the intercrossing of this lily and L. Philippense for the production of an ideal white forcing lily.

Numerous seedlings of shrubs, also collected by E. H. Wilson in northern China, were noted, and as the climate there resembles that of the nothern states of America, some valuable additions to our hardy shrubs will, no doubt, be obtained. Seedlings of L. longiflorum x Philippense in various stages of growth were noticed. In the nursery a good general collection of herbaceous plants and ornamental trees and shrubs were growing. Messrs. Veitch, of London, introduced many beautiful plants collected by Mr. Wilson while in their employ, and that the treasures of northern China have not all been introduced is evident from the many new things now being sent here.

Why not send it now?
I wish to state that we received many more orders from our advertisement in the REVIEW than we were able to fill, receiving orders from New York, Minnesota, Illinois, Ohio, Colorado and several other states. We were sold out a few days after the first insertion.—GEO. M. KELLOGG, Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Club Picnic.

Once more the Gardeners' and Florists' Club was favored with ideal weather for the annual picnic at Pine Banks park, Malden, July 29. The grounds are commodious and beautiful. The ball field, used for the athletic contests, was an excellent one and everything passed off without a hitch. The attendance was about 500 and all attending seemed to have a full day's enjoyment. The athletic events were slightly less numerous than a year ago, but could be still further reduced in numbers with advantage. The results of the various events were as follows:

Baseball.—Private gardeners captained by R. W. Curtis, 29; commercial growers captained by F. E. Palmer, 13.

Baseball. Boys. — T. Westwood's team, 8; Palmer's team, 3.

Hundred-yard race, boys under 15, handicap.—T. Westwood and R. Rust; twelve ran.

Sack race for men, 75 yards.—W. J. Collins first, R. Roehrs second, W. Martin third; ten ran.

Novelty race for married ladies.—Mrs. E. J. Rogean first, Mrs. G. H. Cray second, Mrs. J. F. Flood third; thirteen entries.

Fat man's race, 185 pounds the limit.—W. R. Nicholson first, D. Iliffe second, J. Wheeler third; eight ran.

Hundred-yard dash, men final heat.—W. S. Grassie first, J. W. Lally second, T. S. Brown third, A. E. Walsh fourth; sixteen ran.

Three-legged race, boys.—F. Hargraves and Walter Westwood first, J. Sisson and T. Westwood second; six entries.

Eighty-yard race, boys under ten.—W. Erickson first, T. Palmer second; eight ran.

Half-mile race, men.—W. S. Grassie first, T. S. Brown second, David Burns third; ten ran.

Seventy-five yards, girls under 16.—Harriet Coles first, Lillian Campbell second; ten ran.

Seventy-five yards, boys under 12, handicap.—T. Iliffe first, Theodore Palmer second; eight ran.

Three-legged race, men, fifty yards.—W. J. Collins and John Reid first, W. J. Thurston and A. E. Walsh second; five entries.

Fifty-yard race, girls under 12, handicap.—Edith Iliffe first, Margaret Iliffe second; seven ran.

Running broad jump.—W. J. Collins first, 16 feet 2 inches; J. W. Lally second, 15 feet 9 inches; G. H. Grey and T. S. Brown third; ten entries.

Ladies' potato race.—Mrs. H. F. Woods first, Mrs. J. F. Hood second, Mrs. E. J. Rogean third; seven entries.

Fifty-yard race, girls under 18.—Elizabeth Reed first, Anna Barteam second; ten entries.

Tug-of-war, private gardeners vs. commercial growers, won by private gardeners.

Fifty-yard race, girls under 10.—Margaret Iliffe first, Dorothy Palmer second; eight ran.

Putting the shot.—John Reid first, W. J. Collins second.

Consolation race, 100 yards.—Edward Rose first, William Iliffe second, H. Coles third; eight ran.

Picnic Pickings.

During the baseball game James Wheeler got a nasty crack on the left eye with the ball, but continued in the game. Several of the spectators had rather narrow escapes.

In the fat men's race Daniel Iliffe surprised everyone by the way he ran. The Iliffe family are all sprinters and figured heavily in the prize distribution.

Among visitors noted from a distance were: Ed. Roehrs, Rutherford, N. J., whose brother, Rudolph, ran in several races, and F. C. Green, Warwick, R. I. W. H. Elliott came down from Madbury, N. H., for the occasion.

Once more the private gardeners were too much for the commercials in the tug of war. The winning team consisted of D. Finlayson, captain; J. Wheeler, S. Bolton, A. G. Sawyer, W. S. Grassie, J. L. Smith, J. G. Duguid, William Robb, J. W. Lally, A. Lowe and John Reid.

W. S. Grassie won both the 100-yard and half-mile contests handily against some fleet competitors. Though short of stature, he can cover the ground fast.

Additional prize donors to those mentioned in last issue of the REVIEW were: Lager & Hurrell, Braman, Dow & Co., W. H. Elliott and Henry Penn.

The baseball contest was marked by some tall scoring, and the privates would have added to it heavily if the game had not been called at the end of the fifth inning. R. W. Curtis proved a star pitcher for his side.

W. J. Kennedy made an ideal megaphone man, and Duncan Finlayson worked hard as chairman of the refreshment committee. Peter Miller and the whole of the sports committee put in good work.

E. J. Rogean, who was anchor man on the commercial tug of war, fainted at the close of the contest, but soon revived. Mrs. Rogean proved fleet-footed in the ladies' 100-yard race, making the fastest time yet recorded for this race.

Various Notes.

W. H. Elliott has completed and planted his big new greenhouse at Madbury, N. H. The dimensions are 60x1,340. It is divided into seven sections, of which six are devoted to Killarney and Richmond. Included are seventy-five of the white Killarney which sported with Mr. Elliott. The house contains about 50,000 plants and is probably the finest rose house in the world. Mr. Elliott will not attend the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls, leaving this week for the Maine woods for a few weeks' complete rest.

The exhibition at Horticultural hall, August 8, should prove a good one. Phloxes and annuals will be special features. August 22 and 23 there will be a large late summer show.

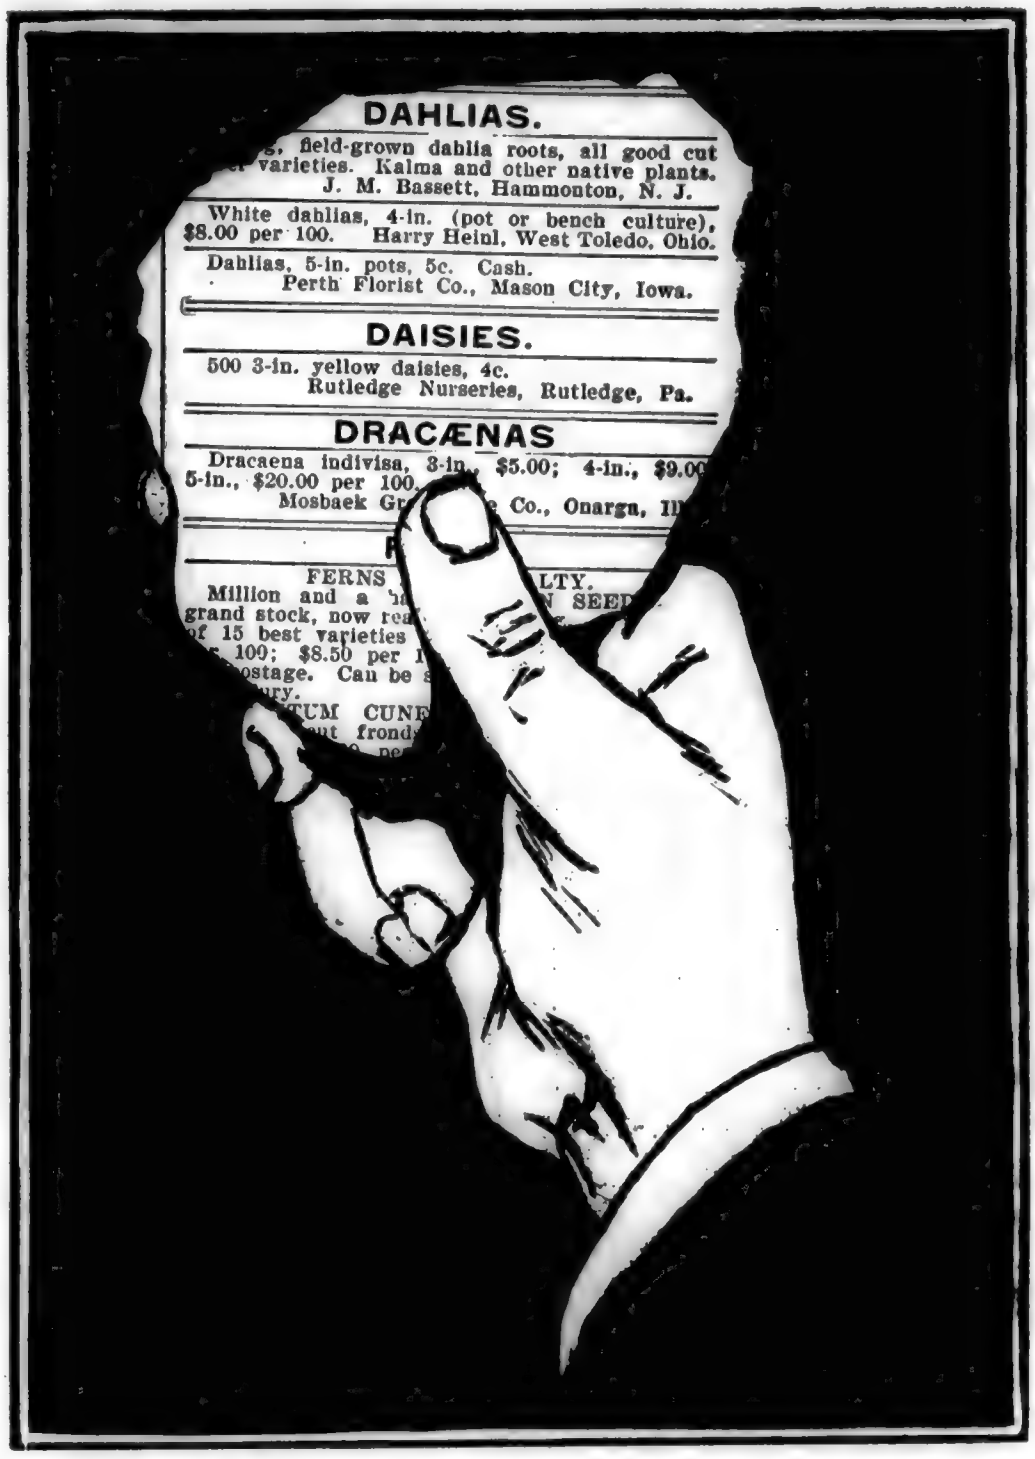
Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Neil, of Dorchester, sailed for England on the Majestic July 25. Mr. Neil will visit many prominent growers in and around London and will also take in the Island of Jersey, also hoping to see the great Shrewsbury show.

Thomas Clark, of Houghton & Clark, has a cottage at Winthrop for the season, where he is spending his vacation.

S. J. Goddard has finished housing his carnations, which are a fine lot, quite free from stem-rot. He will soon be able to start picking.

William Nicholson will spend his vacation this month at Nantucket, enjoying the shark fishing off that island.

Andrew Christensen, of Stoneham, who is a large grower of carnations, will not house his plants for a month yet, finding that early housing does not pay.



Herman Waldecker, of Braintree, is just cleaning out his tomatoes, which have given him heavy crops this season, to make room for carnations, which are looking splendid.

Florists bothered with cutworms who have not yet found a reliable cure for these pests should try Strawson's Vaporite. Experiments last week, which we had the pleasure of witnessing, proved that the cutworms' lease of life was brief once they had come in contact with this preparation. A small portion causes death.

Only a small number of members have as yet made up their minds to attend the Niagara convention, but it is hoped that Boston will send a good representation. Among those who hope to attend are M. A. Patten, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, F. N. Sanborn and Thomas Pegler.

The appearance of two additional enemies of shade trees, in the oak borer and leopard moth, adds to the already formidable list of insects we have to fight. The oak borers' attacks are made at long intervals and were quite severe seven years ago, since which time we have been almost immune from them. The leopard moth is a newcomer, and Professor Kirkland blames the English sparrow for driving from the cities the native insectivorous birds, which would destroy them. So far as our observations have gone, these same sparrows are about the only birds which eat any considerable number of our destructive tree pests, the native birds seeming to prefer more appetizing food.

Recent rains have wonderfully improved dahlias, and prospects now are for a splendid crop of these popular fall flowers in Massachusetts. The number of commercial specialists in them increases yearly, and there are few gardens where at least a few dahlias are not grown.

Kenneth Finlayson, Robert Cameron and W. N. Craig left for Bar Harbor, Me., Tuesday evening, August 4, to officiate as judges at the flower show opening there August 6.

A special meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club has been called for Saturday evening, August 8, at Horticultural Hall. Important business will come up and a large attendance of members is hoped for.

The Amherst field day has been changed from August 14 to 15, to accommodate some who could not make the journey on the earlier day.

The Niagara Convention.

F. E. Palmer, state vice-president for Massachusetts of the S. A. F., earnestly hopes that a goodly number of members of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston will attend the convention at Niagara Falls, opening August 18. If all who intend to go would make up their minds early, so that concerted action could be taken, the economy and comfort of the trip would be greatly facilitated. This, of course, includes any who desire to attend the convention, whether members of the club or not. The best rates available are on the 1⅗ fare, certificate basis, making the round trip from Boston $15.92 on the New York Central, or $15.12 on the Fitchburg railroad. This is exclusive of the sleepers.

There is no doubt in Mr. Palmer's mind that the destiny of the S. A. F. is to evolve into a national horticultural society on a broad basis, and that the gardeners' and florists' clubs of the country will be the natural feeders and correspondents of the society. That being the desirable objective, private gardeners as well as all lovers of horticulture should attend the meetings and seek to direct the policies of the S. A. F. into the desired channels. Mr. Palmer will be glad to assist in bringing together all who propose to attend the convention, and will promptly give any information obtainable, but hopes no one will put off making up his mind until the last moment.

W. N. Craig.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01

Officers for 1908: President, F. H. Traendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.

Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.

First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

W. H. Elliott has completed, at Madbury, N. H., a rose house, 60x1,340 feet.

Growers are invited to write to the Review about any of their heating problems. Give all the details.

Write on printed letter-heads; don't leave people to question whether you are in the trade, or an amateur.

There is no doubt that the growers have stood the brunt of the business depression of the last ten months, no other department of the trade having been seriously affected.

Adolph Jaenicke, president of the Nassau County Horticultural Society, Glen Cove, N. Y., has received a letter from President Roosevelt saying that he wished to become a member of the society.

It is the report from most wholesale cut flower markets that the growth of summer business, which has been apparent for several years, has overcome any effect of the depression in general business.

Sydney B. Wertheimer, New York, sends a carte postale from St. Ettienne, France, illustrating lace-making in connection with the ribbon industry there. Mr. Wertheimer will return for the S. A. F. convention.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., has returned home after two months' absence in Europe. He officiated as a judge at the international rose show in Paris during June, and he brings home trophies which were awarded his own rose productions, Rhea Reid, Admiral Evans and Richmond.

Tests of the Strawson preparation, Vaporite, seem to show that cutworms have short shrift when it is mixed into the soil. Try a little. If your seedsman does not keep it, write to Strawson's, 71a Queen Victoria street, London, for the name of one who does. Mention the Review when you write to any dealer for this preparation.

Quite a few firms make it their claim that they are prepared to execute any sort of an order, from a funeral piece to a landscape contract, and such as these now find themselves compelled to provide spraying outfits for cleaning up their patrons' trees and shrubs, so universal and destructive have the attacks of insect pests become.

THE FUEL DIRECTORY.

To the kindness of its readers the Review is indebted for the order of many a new advertiser, especially in the lines of the allied trades. Every now and then the user of a satisfactory article tells the vendor of the article that other customers are to be found by means of an advertisement in the Review—it is a service to both parties, and to the trade at large.

If you are buying coal by the car from mine or jobber, and are pleased with the arrangement, call your party's attention to the Florists' Fuel Directory in the Review. The coal and service that please you will gain the patronage of other florists if the mine or jobber only lets it be known that the business is wanted.

Send the Review the name of your coal man, or the seller of any other satisfactory article the trade should know about. Remember that any additional money paid the Review for advertising comes back to each reader in the form of a steadily improving paper.

PRICE OF GLASS.

Pittsburg.—The price of window glass was advanced August 1 by the American Window Glass Co., the increase being twenty per cent on single strength and thirty-three and one-third per cent on double strength. The advance, it is said, will be followed by an early resumption of operations in most of the glass factories.

Cleveland.—President A. L. Faulkner, of the Window Glass Workers, predicted August 1 that wages in the glass trades would increase largely after September 1 as a result of an advance just announced in the price of window glass.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Office in Washington.

It appears that under the charter the society should maintain a permanent office in the city of Washington, D. C.

President Traendly has appointed Wm. F. Gude as the official representative of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists in that city, who will maintain an office at 1214 F street, Northwest, Washington, D. C.

W. N. Rudd, Sec'y.

July 28, 1908.

PRIZES WANTED.

George W. McClure, chairman of the committee on sports at the S. A. F. convention, sends the following letter to the Review:

"Will you kindly place a notice in your next issue, in as prominent a place as possible, asking for donations of cash or special prizes to be awarded in the bowling and other sporting contests, but particularly for the bowling events, at the Niagara Falls convention? It might also be well to call attention to the short period of time remaining for donations between now and convention time."

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The market has been gradually slowing down. We are having one of the hottest summers on record, and two weeks of high temperature and no rain have had their effect in several ways. The local demand for flowers becomes exceedingly light with the thermometer registering above 90 degrees, and only two things support the market. Most important of these is the shipping demand; the other item is funeral work. The continued heat and drought have affected the outdoor flowers so that the quality of these is poor and it is impossible to realize anything but the lowest of prices for them, which makes the volume of sales less than it would otherwise be, for this market never is so badly off but that there is a sale for strictly first-class stock.

The Beauty crops are behaving strangely; they come on quickly and seem to pass off in a day or two. Ordinarily one would be justified in expecting a crop, once on, to last two or three weeks, but from a condition of abundant supply last week the Beauty market now is short and it is not possible to fill all orders as exactly as would be liked.

There are increasing supplies of other roses, but Killarney continues to lead the market. Quite a number of houses are cutting fine stuff, the best of it readily commanding as much as 12 cents. Killarney easily has established itself as the best summer rose. Kaiserin leads in white, but is not plentiful. The Brides and Maids from young stock are improving, but no good roses of these varieties are to be expected with the temperature in the shade running for days at a time around 90 degrees. August 3 the official temperature, at the top of the post-office dome, was 96.4 degrees, the warmest day in seven years.

There are few carnations, for the old stock has practically all been thrown out and the flowers from the field are poor as a result of the drought. Asters are in ample supply, but they are not as good as they would be if we had less heat and more rain. Still, there are asters which sell as high as 3 cents.

The principal glut at present is of gladioli. There are too many of the better grades to bring high prices and of the poorer grades there are many which are not worth express charges. There continue to be large supplies of auratum lilies and adequate receipts of rubrum and album. Considerable quantities of Philippense come in, but not much can be done with them. Comparatively few sweet peas are received, the dry weather having been their finish.

There is considerable doing in ferns and galax, but asparagus strings and smilax go slowly. Several wholesalers have quantities of last year's crop of boxwood eating its head off in cold storage. The loss, when they finally dump it, will destroy the profit on what was sold last winter, and the wholesalers are canceling their orders for this fall's delivery.

The Weather in July.

July was hot and dry. Only 1.45 inches of rain fell, as against a normal precipitation of 3.62 inches. There were nine perfectly clear days, eighteen partly cloudy, but only four wholly cloudy. On five days we had 100 per cent of the possible sunshine and on seven others more than ninety-two per cent of all that could be. One day 96 degrees was maximum and on eighteen days the maximum was above 80 degrees. The prevailing direction of the wind was southwest, which means heat.

July Business.

The first part of July was considerably better than the latter part and, taken as a whole, July has given as much business in dollars and cents as it did a year ago. The steady growth in summer business has fully overcome any result of business depression.

The Wittbold Bench.

The firm of E. H. Hunt, which is the selling agent for the Louis Wittbold inventions, says that more orders for the patent clamps for making concrete benches have been filled in July than in any previous month, although a couple of unusually large sales in June made the total sales for that month the best of the season.

Nees Bros., 19 Clara place, and W. L. Smith, the vegetable grower in Rogers Park, were among the recent purchasers of clamps and they are now building the one-piece concrete bench. J. A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, also was a recent purchaser. Poehlmann Bros. Co. is much interested in the Wittbold one-piece bench. August Poehlmann is convinced that wood shortly will be displaced by some more permanent and less expensive style of construction and he plans to equip the whole place with the best form of permanent construction as fast as the wood benches give out.

Louis Wittbold and C. M. Dickinson will attend the S. A. F. convention and make an exhibit of the Wittbold specialties, To-bak-ine, etc.

Various Notes.

It was reported in this market last week that E. Haentze, the veteran florist of Fond du Lac, had potted up his last batch of stock, but a letter from there this week says Mr. Haentze is just as much alive as ever and expects to join the Chicago party to the S. A. F. convention.

F. F. Benthey, chairman of the transportation committee of the Florists' Club, says he hears of many who are going to the convention, but has had few requests to book reservations. From outside the city J. A. Valentine, of Denver, has asked for a berth in the Chicago train, as have Theodore Wirth and party from Minneapolis and the gardener at Gen. Palmer's estate at Colorado Springs.

William W. Abrahamson, July 31, resigned his position as traveling salesman for E. H. Hunt to start in business for himself as a florists' purchasing agent. His headquarters are at 19 and 21 Wabash avenue and he will represent a number of buyers in this market.

Axel Aggerholm passed through Chicago July 31 on his way to New York for a trip to Europe. He expects to be away two months.

Charley Ernie is at West Baden, Ind., for his vacation.

A. L. Randall was at home August 3 from Michigan, where he is spending the summer, as usual, on his fruit farm. He says the peach crop is nothing to brag about, but that grapes are doing finely.

Scheiden & Schoos are preparing to send out their red seedling carnation this season and have made an arrangement with A. F. Longren to represent them on the road.

Walter Tonner thinks he knows of an occupation that beats the florists' business and is anxious to sell or lease his place.

C. L. Washburn says the lily crop reminds him of the old story of "On Agin, Gone Agin, Finnigin." This week it is "On Agin."

G. H. Pieser, president of the Kennicott Bros. Co., plans to attend the convention as the part of an eastern trip. E. E. Pieser will be away in September.

Miss Corbett and John Hausman are absent from the Bassett & Washburn city store this week, and Mike Rockwell has not yet returned.

The A. L. Randall Co. has a new grower who is cutting first-class Killarney.

Peter Reinberg is campaign manager for M. L. McKinley, who is a candidate for state's attorney at the democratic primaries August 8. Mr. Reinberg is spending a considerable part of his time at the McKinley headquarters in the Sherman House.

invitation, to the new plant of Wendland & Keimel, at Elmhurst. He says the 25,000 feet of glass, built this spring, is all planted to Killarney except for a few Richmond. The first cut was made August 1 and the indications are for splendid results.

A. C. Spencer and wife started August 3 for a fortnight's outing in the woods near Cook's Mills, Mich.

F. F. Benthey spent a day at New Castle recently. The summer Beauties in the Coatsworth greenhouses are giving a fine cut.

A team of ball players from the wholesale market went to Bowmanville Sunday for a chastisement by the score of 28 to 5.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. closed its business year July 31. John Poehlmann says the results were about as in the preceding year and adds: "They might have been a good deal worse; they might have been some better."

John Enders is at Peoria and later in the week will go to Sheboygan.

It is reported that the stork visited the home of Fritz Bahr, at Highland Park, August 1 for the sixth time.

President Leonard Kill plans to pilot the florists' club's delegation to the convention in person.

Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Winterson are preparing to go to the convention by way of the lakes.

E. C. Amling says that he hears nothing but good reports of the Crego aster from those to whom he sold seeds last season. He says that so far as heard from it germinated well and made fine growth. The first flowers are now being cut.

The big fire at Canal and Sixteenth streets August 3 upset the afternoon's shipments from Bassett & Washburn, as no train from the greenhouses at Hinsdale was able to pass the fire all that afternoon.

There is a "For Rent" sign in the Eaton flower store on Jackson boulevard.

Gus Alles is again on duty at the store of Wietor Bros., after a vacation, and Charles Drissler is away.

Ben Rubel, for Fleischman's, has begun suit in the Municipal Court to collect a bill of $45 from an actress called Toby Claude.

Visitors.

The first visitor en route to the convention was H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg, who was here last week and has gone on. A. Fitzgerald, of the Morehead Mfg. Co., Detroit, was here in quest of those needing steam traps. Mr. Boston, of the Stiles Co., Oklahoma City, Okla., was looking up cut flower supply. Mr. Boelter, of Boelter & Quehlke, Appleton, visited the market while in town on other business. J. J. Waaland, of Findlay, O., was here buying material. Miss Livingston, of Grand Rapids, also was here.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The flower trade is quiet, with lots of good roses, Beauties, lilies, gladioli and asters for anyone who wants them, but not much demand. Business is dull among both wholesalers and retailers.

Various Notes.

From present indications, a large delegation from Pittsburg will attend the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls. Quite a number of ladies will be in the party. The transportation committee has arranged with the P. & L. E. R. R. for an observation car on the Buffalo Limited, which leaves Pittsburg at 10 a. m., city time, arriving at Niagara Falls at 5 p. m. The rate is $7.50 for the round trip; parlor car seat, $1.25. Those intending to go with the party should get into communication with the committee before August 12 and state how many parlor car seats they wish.

Uncle John Wyland has gone to Michigan, fishing.

Gilbert Wenkler, manager of Randolph & McClements' Baum street store, spent his vacation in the mountains above Altoona.

Mrs. E. A. Williams, who spent some weeks at Simcoe lake, Canada, has returned, looking as if she had bottled up more than her share of health and energy for the coming season.

A report of the death of Christian Rieger will be found in this week's obituary column. Hoo-Hoo.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The wholesale market has been quiet of late, and midsummer dullness has set in for good among the retailers, who are doing nothing except funeral work and cleaning up for the opening of the season early next month. Until then, reports from here will be the same as above.

The same report fits with the wholesalers. They seem to have plenty of stock on hand each morning. Asters in all colors now hold the boards and there are plenty of them on hand to fill any order that may come in. Beauties from young stock are coming in finely and more than the local trade can use. Other roses, too, are more plentiful. White carnations from the field are coming better, pink and red poor. There are plenty of lilies in the market, also gladioli and tuberose spikes. Hardy hydrangeas are selling fairly well. Lily of the valley is dragging somewhat. There is plenty of good smilax and other greens.

Headquarters for Lilium Harrisii

Just received in extra fine condition, MICHELL'S Special Brand Lilium Harrisii

By special brand, we mean lilies that have been grown, harvested and packed especially for us. They are the cream of the Bermuda Lily crop, being a selection of the most uniform bulbs, gathered in districts where the smallest amount (if any) of disease exists. Every year the florists are making greater demands for this particular strain and we advise all to order early.

attend the annual convention of the American Association of Park Superintendents.

There is some talk of the reorganization of the florists' bowling club for this fall and winter. The first step taken was at a meeting held recently by a few of the old club members at the residence of President W. C. Young. This will be taken up at the next club meeting.

Miss Rolfes, of the city forester's office, is taking a vacation. On her return, August 10, Mr. Meyer, the city forester, will leave for a northern trip for the balance of the month. On his return William Jordan, his assistant, will be given his vacation.

Alex. Siegel, who with his wife is spending his vacation at Mackinac Island, writes to some of his friends that his head is rapidly becoming naked, not on account of business, but because the fish don't bite to suit him.

The members of the Florists' Club should not fail to attend the meeting of the club Thursday afternoon, August 13, at 2 p. m. It is the duty of every member to be present at this meeting, as there will be the election of officers, the secretary's report and the payment of annual dues. This meeting, too, will be beneficial to those going to the S. A. F. convention. A vote will also be taken on the proposition to hold the club meetings in the evening hereafter. A full attendance is looked for. J. J. B.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

Gustav Schneider severed his connection with the Springfield Floral Co. August 1. Mr. Schneider has held the position of superintendent and general manager of that concern for the last five years. He also has a greenhouse on South Center boulevard. He has been in the cut flower business only since last fall, but in that time has built up a good trade.

Mr. Schneider entered the greenhouse business when only 15 years old, in the George H. Mellen Co. plant. He was also employed at the Schmidt & Botley greenhouses for a number of years. When the Springfield Floral Co. incorporated, about five years ago, Mr. Schneider accepted the position from which he has just resigned. He was also a stockholder and director of the Springfield Floral Co.

Mr. Schneider recently purchased the Patrick Agnew greenhouses, located on East Johnson avenue, which will be used to grow fancy grades of peonies and phlox, and other plants for which there is a demand. Plans have already been laid for the building of a greenhouse about 35x400 feet, which will be erected next summer and will be used for growing a fancy grade of carnations.

OMAHA, NEB.—Lewis Henderson, who is state vice-president for the S. A. F., says that the florists of Omaha and Nebraska are doing well; prosperity seems to be all around. While business is a little quiet just now, everyone is busy preparing for next season, which is expected to be the best yet.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—It is stated that negotiations are now in progress for the sale of the property of the Idlewild Floral Co., on Charlotte street, and that if the deal is closed the property will be subdivided into lots and improved for sale. The property includes about 700 feet frontage on Charlotte street and embraces nineteen acres, and by reason of its situation, adjoining the Manor and opposite Grove park, is quite valuable. It is now owned by Mrs. C. T. C. Deake and J. W. C. Deake.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The cut flower market, while quiet, is normal, the consensus of opinion being that July was equal to or ahead of the same month last year. There is little change in the conditions surrounding the principal varieties on the cut flower list since last week. Cattleyas have advanced in price. They can still be obtained in moderate quantity. Lilium Harrisii is seen in most of the leading wholesale houses. The quality is excellent, demand fair. Valley is probably the most plentiful of the choicer flowers. The quality is as fine, or finer, than has ever been seen in this market in midsummer.

Asters are the ruling summer flowers. While there is general complaint of poor quality, there are large quantities of really fine stock on the market. The Ostrich Plume variety continues favorite, with some excellent Semple's Branching as a good second. Gladioli have taken a tumble. The choice named varieties still command fair prices, but ordinary stock is cheap and extremely difficult to market. Sweet peas are excellent, but by no means plentiful, locally grown stock being practically over. Outdoor flowers and greens are abundant. There is no change in the rose and carnation situation.

Philadelphia to Niagara.

The Florists' Club expects to take the train at 8:25 a. m., on the Pennsylvania railroad, Monday, August 17, arriving at Niagara Falls at 9:05 that evening. An excursion ticket, good until August 25, will cost $14.80 for the round trip. The Hotel Imperial, at $3 a day, and Temperance Hotel, are recommended by the committee. Arrangements should be made in advance.

The Surprise of the Week.

It was announced on the street late this week that Fox's uptown store, at Twenty-first and Columbia avenue, is for sale. This announcement caused considerable surprise, the store having been established by C. H. Fox seventeen years ago and being evidently prosperous. The most progressive paper, being determined to learn for its readers the why and wherefore of this move, went to headquarters for information; a somewhat difficult matter, you will say, for Mr. Fox is enjoying the fruits of his labor in Europe. Despite this fact, the Review is able to announce authoritatively that Charles Henry Fox finds the weight of two flower shops, with their large business responsibilities, too heavy. He therefore decided to offer one of them for sale, the older shop at Twenty-first and Columbia avenue, retaining possession of the newer, the Sign of the Rose, at Broad and Walnut streets. You will want to know how the most progressive paper was able to obtain this information. In answer I will give you a little story of George D. Clark's:

Mr. Clark says that when American missionaries and residents in China were thought to be in peril during the recent Boxer uprising, considerable anxiety was felt in this country. Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, determined to find out their fate, and after trying the usual channels without success he then cabled direct to Li Hung Chang. Result: The Tribune was able to assure its readers of the safety of our countrymen.

Moral: Go to headquarters for information, no matter what the cost.

Latest Improvements at Wyncote.

The Joseph Heacock Co., of Wyncote, has just successfully completed an extensive building operation of a difficult nature. This consists in removing the dividing walls and partitions between eighteen houses, large and small, throwing all into one open, glass-covered space 90x275. To do this it was necessary to take out the north side sashbars and plate, as well as the post, on one line of houses, using in their place a longer sashbar, covering not only the back of a wide house but a small house also. These sashbars now rest on a cypress gutter between this house and the next. This gutter is supported by 2-inch galvanized iron pipe-posts bolted on to the gutter and set in five feet of concrete. These pipe-posts are set five feet apart, making a strong and not expensive support that economizes room and admits light.

This remodeled range will be quite a departure from established ideas in its contents. The houses in this section rise one above the other on the side of a hill, the lower benches being devoted to the company's new rose-colored carnation now christened Dorothy Gordon. The next benches are filled with the popular Irish rose, Killarney, 5,000 plants all in thrifty condition, while the upper benches are filled with as pretty a lot of kentias as one could wish to see. Mr. Heacock believes that the proper temperature for each variety of plant can be maintained without partitions. If, however, this proves to be a mistake, sash with burlap or shading cloth can be used along the post lines.

Another improvement on the place is a new house 20x67 just built for Cypripedium insigne. Some 900 plants in thrifty condition fill the house. The cyps have now become so important a flower in the market that they are deemed worthy of a special house all to themselves.

The kentias are finer and more numerous than ever before. The cedar tub for larger sizes has evidently come to stay, as there are more 9-inch and 12-inch kentias in tubs than last year. The best decorators are gradually finding out the advantages of tubs over pots for decorative sizes. It would be difficult to imagine a prettier sight than the kentia houses filled with clean, thrifty plants, deep green in color, and shapely.

Other features of interest are some beautiful specimens of Cybotium Schiedei and some imported cattleyas added to those tried last year. In the present carnation houses Dorothy Gordon is still growing freely and blooming, despite the torrid heat of last month. In addition to the 5,000 Killarney mentioned in the remodeled range, there are 2,000 more of the same variety, besides a house each of Richmond and Mrs. Jardine. The last named variety is on trial in the house in which Killarney made its mark here.

Various Notes.

The steamer Albano was damaged by a fire that occurred on the Washington street wharf on the night of July 31. Both M. Rice & Co. and H. Bayersdorfer & Co., who had large consignments of novelties on the steamer, were fortunately able to remove their cases in the afternoon before the fire occurred. Visitors to the convention at Niagara Falls will, therefore, not be deprived of seeing the Philadelphia novelties from these two great houses, which are always a feature of the exhibition.

Among the visitors in this city recently, reported by H. Bayersdorfer & Co., were Charles Netsch, Buffalo, N. Y.; Charles Robinson and Joseph Margolis, of the firm of Henry Robinson & Co., Boston; Charles Munro, New Haven, Conn.

Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, Pa., was a visitor in this city a few days ago. Mr. Eichholz was on his way from Quebec to Atlantic City.

It was just fourteen years ago, August 1, that Leo Niessen started in business as a wholesale commission florist. Mr. Niessen's success in building up a large and prosperous business has been remarkable.

The Henry F. Michell Co. reports large sales on its special brand of pulverized sheep manure.

H. Bayersdorfer and Mrs. Bayersdorfer expect to sail from Cherbourg, France, for home, August 6.

Leo Niessen and Arthur A. Niessen recently visited the greenhouses of Albin Harvey & Sons, at Brandywine Summit. They found the varieties grown indoors all summer in magnificent shape, promising splendid results for the coming season. About half of the place is being planted with field-grown stock, also in fine condition. The planting should be finished before these notes appear. The varieties grown include Winsor, Beacon, Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, Marshall's white seedling, Victory, and several others whose names I do not recall. The Messrs. Harvey motored their visitors over to Edward C. Marshall's, at, I think, Willowdale, and William J. Palmer & Son's, at Mendenhall. Both places were full of interest. At the last named place all the carnations were grown from rooted cuttings that had been purchased. The stock was in exceptionally fine condition. The Messrs. Palmer had some trouble with their carnations two years ago. Last year they devoted their place to tomatoes, but this year decided to return to carnations. There is every indication that success will attend their efforts.

William J. Baker is receiving some choice Queen Louise carnations.

Martin Reukauf, with H. Bayersdorfer & Co., has just returned from a four weeks' vacation. Mr. Reukauf says that he has not generally been privileged to

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Though we are in midsummer, the total sales foot up well and we have every reason to be satisfied with the business so far this summer. Prices rule good and the fact that the demand is about equal to the supply tends to hold them up to a respectable figure. The retail stores are doing well with funeral work, and the political excitement brings forth a few decorations now and then.

Asters are the main stock now and they sell well and at good prices. White ones are about equal to the demand, but colored ones are short of the demand and average higher prices. Roses of all kinds are in heavier supply. Beauties are coming well and sell out clean. Pink roses seem to have the call over white, for some reason. The market is well supplied with gladioli and this is the main flower used for window display. They are effective for this purpose and some of the newer sorts are certainly beautiful.

We have been having some very hot weather and it has been using up the outdoor flowers in this district to a certain extent. Many growers report the aster crop as almost a failure and this is one of the reasons that asters are such good property now. It is dry in the country and we are sadly in need of a good soaking rain, but the weather man says there is none in sight for a while at least.

Various Notes.

Taft notification day brought a great crowd to this city. The city was in holiday dress, with a profusion of flags and bunting. This afforded the stores an opportunity to arrange effective window displays and they all took advantage of it. The Walnut Hills Floral Bazaar had an especially attractive window, as did Julius Baer, Hardesty & Co. and the Blecher Floral Co. Taft's picture, draped with American flags and surrounded with palms and vases of flowers, was used by most.

The Florists' Society will hold its next meeting August 8, at R. Witterstaetter's. It will be called to order at 3 p. m. The evening will be devoted to bowling. Invitations will be sent to all florists about the city and it is expected that a large crowd will be present. The final arrangements for inviting the S. A. F. to meet in this city in 1909 will be made and everything will be in readiness for our delegation to attend the convention and make a strong plea for the next meeting.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

The dull season through which we are now passing gives plenty of chances to the florists to repair or build their greenhouses and many are busy at it. The weather has been rainy, and where the chrysanthemums have not been really damaged by too much water their growth has been rapid in the last two or three weeks. They are well advanced for this time. Mrs. Robinson, the sort which is the most cultivated, is almost ready to show buds. As this flower is the most needed for November 1, the proper time to take the buds is about August 15, as they take fully sixty days to open.

B. M. Wichers, of Gretna, a little town on the Mississippi river, opposite New Orleans, is adding to his specialty of nephrolepis ferns the culture of hardy palms on an extensive scale. He had purchased some years ago eighty acres of ground on the Bayou Barataria, connected with the Mississippi river by locks, thirty miles from New Orleans and the first piece of high ground on the way from the Gulf of Mexico. The situation is ideal as to soil and climate for the culture of phœnix, washingtonias, chamærops and the like. Communication with the city not being very reliable, Mr. Wichers found out that the best plan for him was to have his own boat. So he has just finished building a 35-foot naphtha launch, the Lotus, which will carry him and his products from his settlement to the market in a few hours.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Watson S. Woodruff, Orange, Conn.; First Vice-pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

TOMATOES are suffering severely for want of rain.

THERE is great need for rain in all the seed growing districts.

THE first French bulbs are expected to arrive at New York during the present week.

HENRY NUNGESSER & Co., New York, had 200 bags of grass seeds on the last steamer from Havre.

THE seed trade will be interested in the report of the English sweet pea show on pages 10 and 11.

DEATH claimed a member of the family of W. W. Barnard, Chicago, July 29, when an aunt, Alice L. Barnard, passed away at the age of 79 years.

JESSE E. NORTHRUP, who is president of the board of park commissioners at Minneapolis, is down for an address of welcome to the American Association of Park Superintendents when that body opens its annual convention at Minneapolis August 11.

J. F. SINN, secretary of the A. A. Berry Seed Co., Clarinda, Ia., wrote, August 4: "Corn is looking very well, considering the unfavorable spring. The timothy seed crop will not be extra heavy, but there will be considerable seed shipped from this section."

L. H. ARCHIAS, president of the Archias Seed Store, Sedalia, Mo., and J. C. Archias, of Barteldes Seed Co., Denver, were registered this week at the Great Northern hotel, Chicago. They arrived at New York July 31, on the S. S. Lusitania, from a two months' trip in Europe.

PEAS AND BEANS.

Writing under date of August 1, E. M. Parmelee, president of the John H. Allan Seed Co., Sheboygan, Wis., said:

"There is little that can be said at the present time regarding the pea and bean crop. The weather is extremely dry and has been for the last three weeks, and the pea louse has now made its appearance, and damaged some fields, to what extent we are unable to say. Of course, this damage can only apply to the late crops. Many of the early crops have gone into the barns in nice shape, and the condition of these will, in a measure, make up any loss that may come to the later crops."

WATERMELON.

Writing under date of August 1, D. H. Gilbert, of Monticello, Fla., said:

"I have given considerable time and attention to the inspection of the melons, and, as the harvest season is now on, believe I can make a close estimate as to the yield. From present outlook there will be about an average crop. My own crop consists of about 600 acres, from which I am expecting to get about 70,000 pounds, and this is about an average of other crops in this section; however, nearly all late crops of watermelons have practically failed, owing to the continued and heavy rains during the latter part of June and July. Hot sun following the heavy rains scalded the vines so badly that the fruit would not set."

CLOVER IN OREGON.

A correspondent at Hubbard, Ore., sends the following:

"Among the new buildings going up here is a warehouse to be used for cleaning and storing clover seed. The building, for which the foundation is laid and lumber on the ground, is to be 36x60 and is being erected by Hershberger Bros. The building is to contain a specially constructed cleaner of large size, which it is claimed will remove all weed seeds from clover.

"The growing of clover seed has assumed large proportions in this vicinity the last few years. Five or six threshers are kept busy for two months threshing seed, all of which must be recleaned for market. Some of the larger growers have fanning mills suited for cleaning clover seed, but heretofore many have been compelled to market the seed just as it came from the separator. The central cleaning plant and storehouse now being erected will be a boon to the small grower, for here he can, for a few cents a bushel, have the seed cleaned and stored until such time as he sees fit to sell.

"Hershberger Bros. have for several years run a cider mill and also a feed mill at this place, and the new line of business will work well with their established trade."

CLOVER SEED IN CONNECTICUT.

Legitimate seedsmen are much interested in the efforts being made in many states to stamp out the practice of adulterating grass and other seeds, for such effort leads to the general good of the regular seed trade.

The Connecticut Experiment Station is doing much work in testing clover seed. It obtained fifty-one samples of seed sold in Connecticut. These samples were tested for weed seeds, and also to see what per cent of the clover seed would germinate, and the results are set forth in a recent bulletin. Forty-one of the samples had more or less dodder. Of one sample there were 44,522 weed seeds in a pound. In another sample there were 78,604 weed seeds in one pound. Another thing was the low quality of the clover itself. It has been demonstrated that the heaviest seeds give the strongest plants during early growth, and in most cases largest yields. This Connecticut bulletin states that clover seed of average quality should run 302,000 to the pound. While lighter seed may give a greater number of plants, a greater proportion of them would die out or do poorly. In twenty-six out of fifty-one samples the seeds weighed less than the standard. As for vitality, the average of these fifty-one Connecticut samples was 86.6 per cent. One sample was so poor that only 48.1 per cent of the seed was clover, and only eighty-four per cent of that would sprout. Three samples were evidently adulterated with Black medic. Seed of this plant is imported from Germany expressly to adulterate clover seed. In one sample there were 11,615 seeds of dodder in one pound.

The Connecticut authorities inquire: "What are we going to do about it?" They give the following advice:

"Begin now by urging local seedsmen to buy and pay for only such clover and alfalfa seed as the wholesaler will guarantee to be free from dodder, and to have a sprouting power of eighty-five per cent and purity of ninety-five per cent. Such seed will cost more than the mixed or low-grade seed, and will be worth much more than the difference. Do not buy clover seed until you have had its vitality and purity tested by the Experiment Station, and both are found satisfactory. There is some pure seed in the market, and there will be plenty of it when inferior seed finds no buyers."

IMPORTS.

The imports of seed through the port of New York for the week ending July 25 were as follows:

| Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. | Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Caraway | 800 | $7385 | Millet | 200 | $ 523 |
| Cardamom | 16 | 490 | Mustard | 300 | 3420 |
| Clover | 316 | 8642 | Poppy | 1 | 18 |
| Fennel | 19 | 224 | Rape | 50 | 412 |
| Grass | 24 | 319 | Other | .. | 1194 |

In the same period the imports of bulbs, trees and plants were valued at $4,452.

THE STOECKER SEED CO.

Referring to the incorporation of the Stoecker Seed Co., at Peoria, Ill., reported in last week's REVIEW, the Peoria Transcript says:

"A charter petition was filed with the secretary of state yesterday by L. F. Stoecker, president of the Weber Seed Co.; K. and N. W. Stoecker, promoters of industries, and Ernie Nuzicker, live stock dealer, to engage in the raising and selling of all kinds of garden, field and flower seeds, trees, shrubbery and implements, foreign as well as domestic, and to do a general grain, flower and seed business, wholesale and retail.

"June 18, 1863, C. A. Taylor, of this city, opened a seed store in connection with farmers' implements. He sold his seed business to Sery & Rouse in 1865. The firm was changed a few years later to Rouse & Hassat, and in 1897 Andrew Weber & Son bought it, continuing in business until March 5, 1902, when L. F. Stoecker became the head, calling the firm the Weber Seed

WAS IT ON CONSIGNMENT?

A phones to B for some spring bulbs, not stating the quantity, to sell in his store. B ships the bulbs in April. After sixty days B sends a statement marked "Please remit." In reply A sends one-tenth the amount and returns the unsold portion of the bulbs July 1. Can B hold A for the balance of the shipment?

T.

There is little data on which to base an opinion. One wishing to make such an arrangement as is suggested by this inquiry would be expected, and required, to make his wishes unmistakably clear. There is nothing in the inquiry to indicate that there was telephone conversation between A and B on the point of supplying merchandise to sell on consignment, nor is it stated that A had previously had merchandise from B on consignment or to dispose of on commission, nor is it stated that it is the custom of B to so send out merchandise with the privilege of returning the unsold portion. If all the facts have been stated it would appear that A trusted to the discretion of B in the matter of the quantity to be sent, accepted the merchandise without protest and could only return a part of it by the seller's grace after payment became due.

SPECIFIC DUTIES WANTED.

The seed trade is not alone in wishing the new tariff law to provide for specific duties rather than ad valorem duties. From many lines of business the demand for the change is heard and tariff experts regard the present ad valorem duties as the source of much of the current criticism of the tariff, and hold that a large saving in the cost of administration would be made if the specific system could become more general.

Our present rates of duty, while following both the specific and ad valorem system, are predominantly of the latter variety. Most of the work of the Board of General Appraisers has to do either with questions of classification or of valuation, and of these the most important branch is that of valuation for assessment. By putting in specific duties wherever possible, the question of classification would still be left, although that could be simplified as compared with what it is today. The question of valuation would almost entirely disappear. With it would go a large part of the work which now takes up the time of the Board of General Appraisers and is so unsatisfactorily performed, and along with that the larger part of the present appeals to the courts in customs cases.

QUALITY OF SEEDS.

The influence of the character of the seed on the crop that will be produced from it is well known as a general fact. But it is probable that more detailed attention than is often given to the matter would well repay the trouble entailed. It is becoming better understood than formerly that the early life of a plant has an overwhelmingly important influence on its subsequent growth. Thus it is a matter of common experience that some plants rapidly improve, if grown even for a few generations under specially favorable conditions. This is certainly to be attributed, in great part at any rate, to the cumulatively favorable start in early life enjoyed by the plants themselves. The environment thus continues to influence the development through several generations, and in a cumulative fashion. This circumstance has given rise to a certain amount of confusion as to the existence of inheritance of acquired characteristics. Probably what has really occurred is that the accumulated wealth of one generation serves to endow the seeds of the next with more capital in the form of food, and this will produce its effect during the youthful and most important period of growth in the seedling. This view is supported by the ease with which such improved races degenerate when favorable conditions are relaxed. Such considerations, which are borne out by facts, serve to emphasize the desirability of more thoroughly studying the relations that exist between the various properties of the seed and the quality of the progeny that will arise from them. The matter is not new, but the Gardeners' Chronicle thinks it is still worth a careful scientific investigation, and the results certain to be of practical value.

MAMMOTH BUSH PEANUT.

Willis D. Condron, of New Iberia, La., has a new peanut which he calls Mammoth Bush and which compares with ordinary peanuts as do the big hickories with the smaller varieties. Mr. Condron supplies the following description and account of its origin:

"In the spring of 1898 I planted ten kernels from five peanuts that were given me by lady friends who had just returned from Japan. I tried to class them, but could not.

"However, I planted them by the level or bed method, on the spot where the brick mason had prepared the mortar for the pillars of my residence, thereby learning one of their requisites—lime. They came up in due time, growing along nicely, and by the time mid-season was reached they had thrown out laterals, twelve to twenty to one kernel planted, and forty feet in length.

To the Point

"That, of course, did not suit me, for two good reasons: First, nuts would not mature at a distance of more than halfway to the end of the vine. Second, too much ground covered for so little gain.

"It was then that science showed itself. Hunting up other varieties, I procured true seed of the Spanish type for its bush form, using the Japan variety as parent. I did not depend on chance pollenization, but went to work transferring the pollen from one flower to the other, protecting that other until it dropped.

"I continued thus for four seasons, planting and replanting each hybrid until I reached the fourth, which satisfied me that that was established. It was not exactly in true bush form, for the laterals at a certain stage of growth will drop down, sending out spikes at every point, which produces the finest nuts, not being crowded as they are around the roots. Under most favorable condition the plants will not reach over four feet in radiating.

"The plants are very prolific. Three quarts to the one kernel planted is an average yield.

"They require a well prepared soil, six to eight inches deep and not too sandy—a soil that is retentive of moisture. They want lime and potash, which are best given by using acid phosphate in the trench before covering the seed. They must have good, clean cultivation until the laterals drop. Plant three feet apart each way, from March 15 to May. Harvest in October, or after light frost, which checks growth and ripens the nuts.

"They require a longer season to grow than the average peanut, owing to their mammoth size. They are now much larger than the originals."

MIGNONETTE AND SNAPDRAGON.

Could you publish an article on growing mignonette and snapdragon in the greenhouse? A. O. C.

If you want mignonette for a winter crop, the seed can be sown early in August, either in benches or solid beds, the latter being the better. Compost such as you would use for chrysanthemums or carnations, viz., a mixture of good loam and one-fourth of well rotted cow or horse manure, will grow good mignonette. This plant must have its roots cool and moist and needs plenty of fresh air at all times. A night temperature in winter as near 40 degrees as possible is about right. If you grow it warmer, it will lack the size of spike and vigor of the cooler grown stock.

Sow in rows fifteen to eighteen inches apart, dropping a few seeds every foot in the rows. Then thin to two or three of the best plants in each place. Keep the soil constantly stirred and clear of weeds. Watch for and hand-pick the caterpillars hatched from the eggs of the white butterflies, which are usually destructive in September and October.

Support the plants either by running wires at intervals along the beds or by sticking short pieces of birch or some other brush here and there. Reduce the number of shoots on a plant to secure the best spikes. It is better to pinch the first shoot made. This causes several side shoots to appear. Select the best of these. These will in turn need some disbudding. Feed quite liberally with liquid manure when the benches or beds are well filled with roots. Toward spring give a mulch of rotted manure, if you run the crop for a long season.

Be careful in fumigating. Mignonette is easily damaged by tobacco smoke. Better avoid the use of burnt stems. Try one of the liquid extracts, papers or dust, but always let the dose be a mild one. Temperature, soil and other conditions suiting violets will answer well for mignonette, provided the house is a light one. Use the best selected strains for indoor culture.

Snapdragons or antirrhinums are a useful crop to follow chrysanthemums, or if wanted early can be given a bench to themselves. The plants used may be produced either from seed or cuttings. Once you have a first-class strain, the latter method of propagation is to be preferred. In purchasing seed, let it be in separate colors of the tall growing varieties. If you want an early winter crop, the seed should be started at once. Pot off singly when of sufficient size. Grow outdoors until large enough to bench, which could be in September. The tops should be pinched from the seedlings and three to five shoots left to each plant. The resultant shoots should be carefully disbudded and staked up. Plant in rows eighteen inches apart, allowing nine to twelve inches between the plants. Chrysanthemum or rose compost will grow fine antirrhinums. If you follow a crop of mums, give the soil a dressing of rotted manure or bone and spade it in before planting.

A night temperature of 50 degrees in winter will suit antirrhinums, although they will grow in a house kept 5 to 10 degrees cooler. Mark your best plants and take cuttings from these during the winter. Plant a number of these outdoors and take cuttings from them the following July for another season's crop. ### State of Business.

Trade has been good among the florists this summer, in spite of the dullness in other lines of business. Many strangers are in the city at this season of the year, which enlivens trade. Visitors are here from Philadelphia, New York and Boston to seek the cooling breezes of Lake Erie.

Various Notes.

W. O. Baur has returned from a ten days' visit at Toledo, O.

Mrs. Lena Auffinger, sister of Henry A. Niemeyer, died July 30 and was buried Sunday afternoon. Many beautiful floral designs were seen at the funeral. The local florists remembered the family with offerings. Mrs. Auffinger had been employed at Henry Niemeyer's flower store up to a few years ago. She will be missed among the trade.

Vern Schluraff, formerly with Schluraff Floral Co., has built new greenhouses on West Eighth street. He is conducting a wholesale place and reports business good. Floral Park is the name of the new place. B. P.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Without exception, Toledo florists have had a good trade during the last week. A large number of funerals occurred. The opening of the Secor hotel, Toledo's new million-dollar hostelry, showed the best efforts of every florist in the city. The hotel was a bower of flowers, which were a credit to every one of the local florists.

The incoming stock is of exceptional summer quality. Gladioli and asters are largely used and most of these are home-grown.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Suder furnished a beautiful basket at the Secor opening; 200 American Beauties were used, the handle of auratum lilies.

A mammoth horseshoe, designed by Mrs. Freeman, was made by Geo. Heinl, in which 1,500 American Beauties were used, and a lot of foliage.

F. Schoen presented the Secor Hotel Co. with a basket, in which two wooden shoes were placed, surrounded by Killarney roses.

At the Trost-Snyder wedding the bride carried a shower bouquet of stephanotis, and wore flowers of the same sort in her hair. This idea was suggested by E. Suder.

Many local florists have received shipments of roses from the Fostoria Floral Co. and report that they were as good as could be expected at this season.

State of Business.

Summer quietness has been the experience of the last week, with the exception of funeral work, which breaks the spell occasionally, but for all that, business has been fairly good and compares favorably with last year. Weather conditions have been variable, but mostly warm, the humidity being greater than usual for Denver. Flowers are not overplentiful, excepting sweet peas, which are abundant and can be had for $1 per thousand. Asters are also fairly plentiful, and some good ones are seen, especially in white and pink. Carnations are still with us and are good for so late in the season, the ruling price being 1½ cents and 2 cents.

Roses, while they are still to be had, are not of exceptional quality. Beauties are getting better every day and are almost enough for the demand. Dahlias have appeared, and some are good, but there is nothing yet to create much demand.

There is now plenty of green—bunches of asparagus about twice the size of the winter standard with the price about the same.

As yet we hear little talk of the convention, and no great number are talking of attending. J. A. Valentine, however, is one who seldom misses.

Current Comment.

Work on the four new greenhouses being built by D. U. Augspurger & Sons is progressing. M. D. Augspurger, superintendent of the growing department, reports their July business far in excess of that of the same month last year. The firm has just received a large shipment of bay trees and palms.

Frank Jerabek disposed of a large lot of 2-inch Mme. Salleroi and Sprengeri to a local wholesale firm.

Walter Craig, with D. U. Augspurger & Sons, was on the sick list the first part of the week.

M. D. Augspurger was a business caller at Pekin, Ill., Friday. He secured a quantity of stock from Mrs. Schwab, of Cedar Park.

The heat in Peoria and vicinity during the last week has been intense, making work under glass very uncomfortable.

Mr. Miller, of Prospect Heights, a Peoria suburb, will plant nothing but carnations and violets this year. Mr. Miller has achieved a wide reputation as a violet grower. H. C. R.

The will of James Cole, deceased, has been admitted to probate, but the local papers say there is every indication that it will be contested, as one son, Joseph, was cut off without a penny. The estate is valued at many thousands of dollars, the personal property alone being worth $15,000. James Cole, Jr., and Nelson Cole are the sole heirs, the estate being divided equally between them. It is expected that the disinherited son will attempt to break the will.

DRY ROT ON TOMATOES.

I noticed an article on the "Dry Rot on Tomatoes" in the Review of July 23, and should like to add a few suggestions in regard to this disease. I think the writer must refer to the blossom end rot, although he may have some other trouble in mind. He states, however, that the disease is not contagious, although he advises as a remedy that all affected fruit should be removed. This would hardly be necessary if the disease were not contagious, except to relieve the plant of the burden of the affected fruit. It is not at all unlikely that your correspondent's tomatoes are affected with the blossom end rot.

We have been making observations on this disease and carrying on many experiments for a number of years, and have found it to be caused by a bacterial organism which gains entrance to the imperfectly formed tissue at the style end of the tomato plant, causing a rot. Such fungi as fusarium, macrosporium and others often accompany the rot. It is known that it is more common outdoors during dry than wet seasons, showing the relationship between water supply and the rot.

Prof. Selby, of Ohio, has shown that applying water to the soil when the fruit is setting is beneficial in checking the disease, and our experiments, covering a number of years, have demonstrated practically the same thing. In a greenhouse, however, there are other factors which come into play; for instance, excessive transpiration must be checked, as rotting may occur even with considerable water in the soil when this is not done. Proximity to steam pipes also causes rotting. In the ordinary greenhouse, however, where there is a certain degree of saturation and plenty of water in the soil, the dry rot is of minor consequence. We have found that in a house of more or less dry atmosphere the rot occurred rather freely on the front rows, which have good light, but on the shaded rows behind these scarcely any rotting occurred. Sunlight increases transpiration, and when this is active the fruit does not obtain enough water to develop freely.

In growing tomatoes under glass, one has to be careful not to have the air saturated too much with moisture, as cladosporium is likely to be troublesome. It is well, however, to have the atmosphere pretty moist on bright, sunshiny days, and at night let the house run more or less dry. It is not advisable to use commercial fertilizers, such as nitrate of soda, on the soil, as they restrict root absorption and limit the supply of water for transpiration, this indirectly inducing conditions favorable to rot.

We have found the best remedy for the blossom end rot to consist of supplying the soil freely with water at the time the fruit is setting. Keeping the atmosphere more or less moist and planting closely enough so that there will be shade for the plants is also advised. In an ordinary house, with ground beds, there is little difficulty in maintaining proper moisture conditions of the soil and air, which will prevent rot. For outdoor treatment, irrigation is one of the best remedies.

G. E. Stone.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

There is no change in the condition of the wholesale cut flower market. There can be none before September. Principals, lieutenants, gentle stenographers and the rank and file all have been or are away recuperating and preparing for the autumnal revival. With its formed and prospective aggregations of retailers, growers and plantsmen, we may look for a strenuous fall and winter. Fortunately, optimism is rampant. I hear no prophecies of ill. Everybody is expecting to ride on the coming wave of prosperity. Through the panic and depression few florists gave up the fight. Some have held on by their finger tips, some have skated on thin ice, but they are all here and ready for the reaction and the good times, when the great harvests are safely housed and the election turmoil at an end. In the meantime the wise florist will take a hopeful view of the future and make his plans on the sane and safe basis of sure prosperity.

The weather is ideal now and danger of a vegetable famine is past. Stock of the florists in the field is growing rapidly and looking well. Asters are coming now in shoals, and there is not much for the patient grower in the superfluous grades. First-class varieties still yield $2 per hundred. It should be easy to draw the proper lesson from this intimation. It is the best of anything that pays.

There must be nearly a million gladioli coming to New York every day. Every wholesale house is full of them; 50 cents per hundred is bottom, and a few of the new varieties and America bring from 2 cents to 3 cents. Thousands are thrown away every night, so slight is the demand.

There is really no call for anything except the special Beauties. These command 25 cents and up and the stores which use them ask for fifty and receive about twelve as their share of the arrivals. Plenty of lilies continue to come to town. Auratum is especially fine. Cattleyas and oncidiums are in good demand.

Retail windows are pathetic in their simplicity. Sensational displays are postponed until society returns. Weddings seem to be about shelved. One large one is in prospect at Newport, where the season to date has been dull.

The Clam Bake.

The Cut Flower Exchange clam bake August 1 was a fine success. There were seventy present and for a while they all forgot the strenuous season of 1907 and 1908, and enjoyed their outing with a hilarity and harmony that it was inspiring to look upon. As usual, the single men won the honors of the ball game. The shore dinner was up to the Wetzel Point reputation and gave general satisfaction. Especially was the fraternal feeling in evidence and the merchants of the Coogan building are firm believers in the value of brotherly unison and mutual help and sympathy. Many of the wholesalers bought tickets for the occasion and helped to make it a financial success. The committee, Messrs. Dorval, Hahn and Golsner, worked hard and won the approbation of all.

The members of the exchange and guests were: Anton Schultheis, W. H. Siebrecht, John Donaldson, Charles Millang, E. Dorval, V. Dorval, F. Feldscher, H. [illegible]ke, O. Klowmuller, E. Schultheis, J. Bechamps, J. Nocher, L. Cohn, L. Klein, H. Pritchard, A. Beckman, Herman Dreyer, J. Golsner, G. Golsner, W. Hahn, P. Jacoby, C. Ulrich, H. Ulrich, William Amos, J. Meisem, J. Siefert, F. Smith, Phil Haas, Ernest Berger, Charles Beckman, P. Haas, Jr., Joseph Sklenka, William Finger, J. Tindall, Frank Kuhlman, John Lurk, Jasper McMullen, A. Heubner, John Mangin, H. Upton, Harry Miller, A. Haas, N. Rech, B. Brechner, G. Hermann, Peter Burlein, Sr. and Jr., H. Branch, Fred Felscher, Frank Golsner, Charles Arnold and the press representatives. Nearly all were from Whitestone, Woodside, Astoria, College Point and other Long Island florist centers, where these hard-working and patient men have borne the burden and heat of the years and the most of whom, by the rise in land values, will, before many years have passed, find early morning trips to the Coogan building no longer necessary.

Various Notes.

Everybody now is talking convention. In another week we shall be packing our valises, 200 of us, so John Young says. Let him know at once if you are going in the special D., L. & W. train at 10 a. m., foot of Barclay street, Monday, August 17, and do not forget the date or the hour. There will be room and entertainment for all. The New York Florists' Club will maintain its reputation for hospitality and Caterer Will Rickards will do the honors in his usual affable style.

President Traendly is the busiest wholesaler just now; he is writing the annual address.

George Saltford returns Wednesday of this week from his outing in Dutchess county. August 3 all the valuable papers stolen from Mr. Saltford's store were found in the excavation of the Pennsylvania railroad and returned to him, so that the loss is of little account and the burglar has had a lesson as to Twenty-eighth street during July and August that should prevent any further attempts during the wholesalers' moulting season.

Benedict Ford is again on deck and William Ford, of Ford Bros., is enjoying his second outing in the Pennsylvania mountains.

A. J. Langjahr and family are at Lake George.

New York papers devoted some space last week to a denunciation of crepe pullers in Brooklyn and handled these gentry without gloves, calling them human vultures and showing up their diabolical methods unsparingly. The Retail Florists' Association has taken up the grievance officially and will end it by the widest publicity possible. Michel, of Mallon's, gave the World reporter a warm statement of the facts.

James McManus says that from now on there will be a good supply of orchids, including Cattleya gigas, Gaskelliana, Harrisoniæ, Lælia elegans, Phalænopsis amabilis, Dendrobium formosum, Vanda cærulea and Oncidium varicosum.

M. Goldfarb is the only commission man in the old East Thirty-fourth street market and may be found there 365 days a year. He has a good, steady trade and handles everything in the cut flower line.

A. Herrmann is back from a trip on the continent and will have some interesting novelties for the fall trade. He seems most optimistic as to the outlook and predicts a good fall trade. Mr. Herrman has leased the whole upper part of this building for his supply show rooms and storage.

Bowling.

Friday evening of this week the final meeting of the New York Bowling Club will take place at Thum's alleys, when the team will be selected. Some fine scores were made last Friday. Irwin has joined Skidelsky at Philadelphia, after a farewell demonstration that will make the New York team miss him badly. Mr. Pierce, of Boston, was a visitor. Here are the scores:

When Writing Advertisers

PACIFIC COAST.

Hillsboro, Ore.—W. H. Morton, of the Hillsboro Plant & Flower Gardens, has had a busy season. He says he has what is acknowledged to be the "crack" calla lily bed of this western country, for florists and Southern Pacific officials so affirm.

Spokane, Wash.—J. H. Mumm, manager of the Inland Nursery & Floral Co., has gone east to select some late and rare trees and shrubs for the private park of Louis Davenport, as well as to look after the general purchase of such stock for the nursery company. Mr. Mumm is one of the most expert landscape gardeners and florists in the west. He learned the work in Germany. He was formerly city florist and is one of the pioneer nurserymen of Spokane.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business during last week did not show any signs of improvement. The commencing of the city schools has brought many people back to town and there is a possibility that before long things may brighten.

There is quite a scarcity of colored stock in the line of roses, and everything offered that has any merit whatever is quickly bought. Other material, however, moves slowly and the prices are away down. Sweet peas have become scarcer and of somewhat poor quality.

Amaryllis has made its appearance and costs the stores $2 to $4 per hundred. Valley and Japanese lilies of all kinds remain quiet. Carnations are overplentiful and range in price from $1 to $4 per hundred.

Outside grown tuberoses are being sent in from interior places. Asters of some of the earliest sorts have had a limited sale already. Of the later flowered varieties the acreage is about up to that of last year, and all the patches I have seen give evidence of an abundant harvest soon. Chrysanthemums, also, are looking splendid in the fields and may be expected about a couple of weeks earlier than those of last year.

In looking over some of the patches devoted to violet growing last year, I have discovered that a good many growers will not plant for that purpose for the coming season. According to some of the largest Italian growers, the crop was not a well paying proposition and already a considerable acreage has been replanted to other stock.

Cut asparagus and maidenhair fern, after having been among the scarcest articles in the florists' department, have suddenly become plentiful, to the intense delight of those retailers who had difficulty in keeping a sufficient quantity on hand for general purposes.

The weather continues cool in the vicinity of San Francisco, with no signs of a warm spell in the immediate future.

Various Notes.

William J. Graham, the mushroom grower of East Oakland, will double his growing capacity for the coming season. He is one of the few successful growers on the coast.

Several Japanese firms in the neighborhood of Stege, Alameda county, are erecting carnation houses at the present time. This neighborhood seems to be much favored by the Japanese, as over a dozen different parties have located there.

William Hale, for many years owner of the Dwight-Way Nursery, Berkeley, died in San Francisco, July 22. Mr. Hale was 63 years of age and had retired from business for several years. G.

JAPANESE COMPETITION.

As the Japanese growers become more and more numerous in the vicinity of our large Pacific coast towns, the effect on trade in general, and on greenhouse stock in particular, can be gradually figured out. Leaving the handling of Japanese plants out of the question and confining our attention entirely to the cut flower aspect, a few facts must necessarily first force themselves to view. It is practically within the last decade, and principally within the latter half of it, that Japanese growers have forced notice on themselves and have produced enough stock so that comparisons could be drawn between them and other wholesalers.

They have confined their ambitions to roses, carnations, lilies and valley, with a few side issues in the way of poinsettias, ferns and chrysanthemums.

With the growing of roses they have had practically no success, except in isolated instances and then usually at the time of year when prices were low and stock abundant. An effort is being made by some of the larger Japanese growers to supplant their own help with white growers, and in several instances they have succeeded in placing white foremen at the head of their greenhouse crews, in the hope, apparently, that some of the necessary knowledge might be imparted and that the successful growing might continue after the white gardeners had left for other pastures. The latter do not take kindly to the idea of working for Japanese firms, and only a few of them have so engaged and these only for short terms.

It is perfectly safe to sum up the rose growing question by saying that, up to the present time, the Japanese have cut absolutely no figure in it, and unless they have better success in the future than they have had in the past there will be little to fear from their invasion. On the other hand, the question might be asked: Is there any reason why they will not become proficient in the rose growing art after a time, and what then will happen? This is a question that will be answered ten years hence, and it may be that then they will have the upper hand.

With carnations, a handful of Japanese growers are producing quite as much stock as all the white growers, and all this has happened within the last few years. Their nurseries are as well kept, their greenhouses as well built, and, although the quality of the stock produced is not quite up to the standard set by others, there is so much being cut and brought into town that they practically control the trade, so to speak, on second quality flowers. They are at the present time building more houses than are the white growers and not a few of them are investing in large pieces of land, with the intention of building later. Several of our large growing places have, within the last year, been leased to Japanese firms and, if the signs of the times are to be reckoned with, it will only be a few years until they will outnumber in the amount of glass devoted to the business two to one.

I mentioned that the quality of the flowers produced was not up to the standard in most instances, but the Japanese are wily enough to sell just a little below the market price and, by making this a rule, they have gotten quite a hold on the cheaper class of stores and in many places the proprietors buy from them exclusively.

Occasionally one sees a Jap who produces fancy stock, but this is a rare condition and they invariably tend to quantity rather than quality.

With other kinds of stock, such as mums, lilies and valley, the same condition exists and, although they have entered these fields heavily, the stock produced has been, except in a few instances, second quality only.

I have covered practically all the articles in the cut flower line grown by the Japanese, and from what I have noticed, covering a period of several years of careful watching, my summary at the present time is that thus far the growers of fancy stock have not been hurt by the Japanese invasion, but the growers who seek quantity rather than quality have suffered greatly and will continue to do so, from all appearances. Whether the Japanese will sufficiently gain in knowledge by experience to think less of bulk and more of texture, so that they will tread on the toes of the specialists, remains to be seen, and since there is no amalgamation possible between the races, such a condition would be terrible to contemplate.

That they have ambitions along that line there is no doubt, from the fact that they are erecting perfect greenhouses and making an effort to man them with white help until they are sufficiently acquainted with the finer points necessary to compete with their white neighbors, who, as they cannot help but see, are their masters thus far in the game when the consideration is quality.

The Japanese are natural horticulturists and, when they can broaden themselves enough to grasp a few more technicalities in the art of flower growing, they will be formidable adversaries and a foe to be reckoned with by the white growers. G.

DOYLESTOWN, O.—C. A. Musser, of the Chestnut Hill Greenhouses, recently installed a new Kroeschell boiler.

WEST GROVE, PA.—Roney Bros. have finished planting their houses with 10,000 carnations from the field. The weather has been exceedingly dry, but, having planted out early and made frequent use of the hoe and cultivator, they are starting the season with good stock.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND.—While J. W. Krause, an aged florist of this city, was cleaning a beehive of moths, a bee stung him on the thumb. At first he paid no attention to it, but soon he began to feel badly. His lips and tongue swelled. His tongue so enlarged that he could not speak. After the physician had given Krause three hypodermic injections he rallied. This case is unusual, the physician stating that Krause was extraordinarily susceptible to the bee poison.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

THE demise of Justin A. Goodhue, president of the Utah Nursery Co., Salt Lake City, is reported in the obituary column this week.

VICTOR FELTER, having completed his residence and other buildings on his farm recently purchased near Cherokee, Ia., is now busily engaged in planting a large nursery.

NATIONAL FLOWER SHOW.

There will be a meeting of the Committee of Fifty in Niagara Falls, the afternoon of Thursday, August 20, 1908. This call is issued at the direction of Chairman W. F. Kasting, who requests that each member attend and that each committee be ready with a comprehensive report of work done and suggestions to be offered. The work of the show must be pushed from now until November. On receipt of this notice please communicate with the chairman of your subcommittee and assist him in preparing his report.

Publicity.

Chairman George Asmus, of the publicity committee, urges that all intending exhibitors in the National Flower Show who have new varieties of carnations, chrysanthemums, roses or any other flower to enter, or novelties of any nature, provide the publicity committee with photographs of the same at the earliest possible moment, in order that the novelty may be written up for the newspapers to the benefit of the show and the exhibitor. Considerable advantage may be gained by judgment in the choice of names for new varieties. It is suggested that newspapers show greater interest in new varieties that are named for women of social prominence, and by choosing the name of such a woman in his own locality for his novelty, the exhibitor would confer a grateful compliment upon a possible customer and also help along the show. This may seem a small matter, but it is likely to have large effect upon gate receipts. Photographs of the women for whom new varieties are named should be sent to the publicity committee wherever possible. Photographs of flowers for newspaper use should be made as large as possible, showing no background and detail as clear cut as can be made.

J. H. BURDETT, Sec'y.

WORCESTER, MASS.

The Salisbury Greenhouses.

A good deal of indignation has been aroused here by the reported decision of the directors of the Art Museum to abolish the Salisbury greenhouses, with their rare and valuable collection of plants, which are still being cared for by Mr. Salisbury's gardener, John Coulson.

The reason given for dispensing with the greenhouses is the cost of their maintenance, which is said to be about $2,500 per year, including the gardener's salary. But, since the museum has a large income and is much more richly endowed than most other institutions of the kind, the general opinion seems to be that there is no necessity for this reduction of expenses.

Among those who have protested against this proposed action of the directors of the museum is Albert H. Lange. A letter from him, which appears in a local paper, reads in part as follows:

"Not taking into consideration any sentimental reasons, John Coulson can give the Worcester Art Museum value received for any salary that they may pay him. I consider him (and I can give you the names of some of the best plantsmen in the country who think the same) the best authority on begonias in the United States. And that is only one of the many species of plants that Mr. Coulson is thoroughly posted on, both as to nomenclature and growing. By all means save the greenhouses."

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Funeral work has been good, with hard work to get white flowers. Carnations have been thrown out to make room for the young plants. Some of the growers are already planting, while others are getting things into shape. The only flowers to be depended upon just now are the asters. These have not done as well this season, on account of the dry weather, which is still on.

Napoleon Lemay, who recently took in a partner, has left town.

J. H. Cleary had a big run of funeral work August 1.

William P. Peirce is receiving Queen of the Market asters from H. A. Jahn, of Clark's Point.

R. H. Woodhouse is busy these days, making improvements at his place.

E. Y. Peirce has a nice lot of asters.

Peter Murray's Winsor are looking fine in the field. W. L.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year. It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1908, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Do not fail to see our exhibit at the S. A. F. Convention, Niagara Falls

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz., $35 per 100; 4-in. pots, $7.50 per doz., $50.00 per 100; 6-in. pots, $1.50 each, $15.00 per doz.

OWOSSO, MICH.

Miss May E. Jacobs, the florist on West King street, has a remarkable S. A. Nutt geranium, which has been much noticed and admired. Miss Jacobs says of it:

"It is about five years old and stands eleven feet high, growing in the ground at the end of a bench. It was the wonder of the season to all who came into our greenhouse last spring. We cut about seventy-five clusters of blooms for Decoration day and it has been loaded with blossoms ever since. We think it is rather unusual to see so large a geranium in Michigan."

---

NEWPORT, VA.—Samuel Kevans, of New York, has been appointed chief florist at the National Soldiers' Home, to succeed Charles Lindsay, who resigned the position in order to return to his home in Scotland. Mr. Kevans is expected to come here by September 1.

WEEHAWKEN, N. J.—After nearly half a century at the same place, Lorentz Sons will move their retail store about September 1 to Bergenline avenue, at Fourth street. This is an excellent location, next to the Weehawken Trust Co. The greenhouses and wholesale business will remain at the old place.

Horticultural Exhibit.

The executive board of the Maryland State Horticultural Society met July 28 at the mansion at Carroll park, the residence of Charles L. Seybold, the president of the society, and decided to have the summer meeting September 22, at the nurseries of Richard Vincent, at White Marsh. The midwinter exhibition and meeting, the principal one of the year, will be held at the Fifth Regiment Armory December 1 to 3. It was decided to allow persons from other states to compete with Maryland growers in the exhibition, but realizing that it would not do to use any of the state appropriation for prizes to foreign exhibitors, it was decided to award diplomas instead. Maryland exhibitors who are fortunate enough to carry off honors will have option of receiving money, medals or diplomas.

R. Vincent, who, with Mrs. Vincent, attended the meeting by special invitation, invited the society to hold its summer meeting at his place, and the invitation was accepted. Mr. Vincent promised to have on display at the time the finest display of geraniums and dahlias ever seen in Maryland and informed the members that he would afford the society every facility for a successful meeting. It was decided to invite the Maryland Corn Breeders' Association, Maryland State Grange and the Maryland Beekeepers' Association to hold their meetings and exhibitions at the same time in the winter that the Horticultural Society meets. This was done last year.

Those present at the meetings were President C. L. Seybold, Prof. Symmons; J. J. Perry, president of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club; George Morrison, vice-president of that organization, and C. P. Close, of College Park; W. Irving Walker, Chestertown; E. P. Cohill, of Hancock; J. W. Kerr, of Denton. Q.

ALBERT LEA, MINN.

The Lake Shore Greenhouses, owned by P. Clausen & Son, are an excellent example of those enterprises which are begun for pleasure rather than for profit, but which afterward develop into successful commercial institutions, because conducted with that enthusiasm which is born of love of the work.

Peter Clausen and family came to Albert Lea from Grand Meadow, Minn., in the fall of 1878, and Mr. Clausen engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, which he carried on with increasing success until 1885, when he sold the business, probably thinking that he was thus severing his connection with active business life.

In the spring of 1885 he built a small greenhouse upon the property where his present greenhouses are located. He had no intention then, however, of entering the florists' trade, but he cannot remember the time when he did not love flowers, and when he retired from the furniture business nothing was more natural than that he should engage in their cultivation as a pastime.

Before long he discovered that he was growing more flowers and vegetables than his own family could use. Therefore he began giving away a part of the product of his greenhouse to his friends and neighbors, who, after accepting these gifts for a time, then insisted on paying for what they received. Learning thus that his pastime was profitable as well as pleasurable, he enlarged his greenhouse and for the next ten years he did a flourishing business.

In 1897, after returning from a year's visit to his native place in Denmark, he took his son, G. A. Clausen, into partnership with him. The old greenhouse was torn down and a new and more modern one was built in its place. So rapidly has their business grown since then that it has been found necessary to build an additional greenhouse each year, until at the present time they have over 32,000 square feet of glass. Of their ten greenhouses, one is used for violets, two for roses, six for carnations and one for chrysanthemums and other plants. In 1902 the company discontinued the truck gardening business, which until then had been run in connection with the greenhouses.

The greenhouses are situated on the shore of Fountain lake, just opposite the city waterworks. Besides the greenhouses, the firm has about two acres of land, which is used exclusively in the culture of flowers.

CANNAS.

TO THE GROWERS OF CANNAS.

Brethren:

There has been a movement on foot, for several years, among the growers of that "Queen" of summer bedding plants, the canna, among those who are members of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I am only in the business on a large place for the pleasure that there is in it, and do not sell, and for that reason I have not favored a canna organization. I now think the time has come that a National Canna Society should be organized, and I hope that all the growers will be at the convention at the Falls, so there can be an exchange of opinions.

Yours truly,
H. D. Seele, Canna Specialist,
Lawndale, Elkhart, Ind.

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.
Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.
Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.
As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.
Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price, $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

Greenhouse Heating.

TIME TO BUY COAL.

This season it is more than ordinarily worth while for greenhouse owners to fill up the coal sheds during the time of light domestic demand. Coal is cheap today, so cheap that it is not likely to be any cheaper before September, and certainly cheaper than it will be with the advent of cool weather and the revival of general business activity. The reason why the coal market has been so low all summer is that factories closed down or running on part time have not consumed as much as usual. That prices will advance sharply with the approaching reawakening of demand is shown by the fact that the mines have closed as prices have gone down, instead of piling up stocks, and a seasonable increase in activity in the early fall will be reflected as quickly in the coal market as in any other.

A florist's need for coal does not depend on the condition of business, but entirely on the weather. All florists are anticipating that the approaching season will be one of the best on record, but whether these hopes are realized or not will not affect the need for fuel—therefore it is worth while to take advantage of the present market. Many are enlarging their storage facilities in order to be able to put in in the next few weeks the larger part of their season's requirements.

PIPING FOR SMALL HOUSE.

I have a greenhouse which is 10x40 feet, three and one-half feet to the eaves, and six feet to the ridge. There is also a boiler-house about 10x12 feet. This is at the west end of the house. Last year I heated this with two 3-inch flows and two 3-inch returns and found that it did not give satisfactory heat for growing lettuce. This year I wish to grow lettuce and a few carnations and under the benches wish to get a crop of mushrooms. Please advise what piping you think would give the necessary heat. Central New York climate. W. E. J.

The piping you have is just about right for a temperature of 50 degrees, using water at 180 degrees. If you do not get that temperature, it may be the water falls below 180 degrees, in which event additional piping would be required. If the house continually runs cold you might add another 3-inch return. L. C. C.

HOUSE FOR TOMATOES.

I am putting up a greenhouse 29½x163 feet, even span, sides six feet and thirteen feet to ridge, with four rows of iron posts with rafter supports running through the house. I intend to force tomatoes on solid beds and want to fasten the inside piping to the posts. What would you advise as a good arrangement of the pipes? If heated by steam, what should be the size of the pipes and what slant should they have? The location is thirty miles north of Philadelphia and a night temperature of about 60 degrees is required. D. W. A.

While I should not care to attempt to force tomatoes without bottom heat, yet if you feel confident that the plan will

CAPITOL BOILERS

Consider this Fact

In Capitol Boilers the expansion and contraction is taken care of by means of the Divided Sections. Each section is in itself a small boiler, with its own internal circulation. These sections (or small boilers) all connect directly to the header, making the entire boiler a combination of many small boilers, each capable of independent action. Each section makes its own steam, and no matter how much the strain on any one section, such strain does not impart itself to the balance of the boiler, because of the individual section connection.

Quick Repairs are assured by the Divided Section—without interfering with the continuous heating of the greenhouse.

Capitol Boilers will also save you money through smaller fuel consumption. Let us send you the names of florists who will speak to you from their own experience. Write us today.

SYSTEM FOR FIVE HOUSES.

I have a house 17x50 now in operation and propose to build beside it until there are five parallel houses in the range, the present house being No. 2. The end of the range will be covered by a potting shed, with the boiler room at the corner where houses No. 4 and No. 5 will be located. The ground slopes, so that the heater will be located in a pit at the lowest point. I propose to first erect house No. 1, at the farther side of the range from the boiler. No. 2 is already there and I will build No. 3, No. 4 and No. 5 as I need them. When the range is completed I purpose carrying a main flow overhead from the boiler across the ends of the houses, a flow for each house. The flow will go to the far end of each house, the returns being under the benches, and each house having a separate succeed with you, the house can be piped by using a 4-inch main flow, or two 3-inch ones, if desired, to return by twenty-two 1¼-inch pipes arranged along the outside wall and in the walks. If you can get one foot fall in the returns the length of the houses, they should work well if carefully graded and ample provision made for expansion at both ends to prevent buckling. L. C. C.

SYSTEM FOR FIVE HOUSES.

I have a house 17x50 now in operation and propose to build beside it until there are five parallel houses in the range, the present house being No. 2. The end of the range will be covered by a potting shed, with the boiler room at the corner where houses No. 4 and No. 5 will be located. The ground slopes, so that the heater will be located in a pit at the lowest point. I propose to first erect house No. 1, at the farther side of the range from the boiler. No. 2 is already there and I will build No. 3, No. 4 and No. 5 as I need them. When the range is completed I purpose carrying a main flow overhead from the boiler across the ends of the houses, a flow for each house. The flow will go to the far end of each house, the returns being under the benches, and each house having a separate

2-inch return to the boiler. I want to use no pipe larger than 2-inch, as I can do all my own pipe-fitting up to that size.

For the house already in operation, and a breeder house that stands on part of the ground it is proposed to occupy, the expansion tank is at the highest point in the system, the place on the main flow farthest from the boiler. Sometimes the water boils before all the pipes get hot. I had intended to put the tank in the same position in the completed range; that is, at the highest end of No. 1, but can connect to the return near the boiler, if that will stop the trouble, putting the expansion tank about fifteen feet above the boiler and about two feet above the highest point in the system. I can connect all the highest points in my proposed system, having one air valve do the work. Will not this plan give as good results, using 2-inch separate flows, as using one single large flow and return?

The new houses will be built with wood posts and board walls. They will be three-quarter-span and about ten feet high to the ridges, with no glass in the sides. The glass will be 16x24. Would you butt or lap the glass? What is the best material for glazing, putty or Mastica? Would you use brads or staples? What size pipe would you use for supports for the ridge and purlins? Is there any advantage in setting the wood posts or iron-pipe posts in grout? Which are best, locust posts, which are to be had here for about 40 cents each, or cypress posts, for which I must send away? Will ventilators four panes wide be all right if set with two rows of glass between each sash? E. B.

The criticism I would make on your plan is that you are beginning to build at the wrong end. Begin nearest the boiler. If you can first build and use house No. 4 in place of No. 1, provided the boiler is to be placed as suggested, you will save the cost of heating a useless flow pipe as long as from house No. 4 to house No. 1. Heat is expensive in most places.

If you carry a 4-inch pipe from the boiler to the first take-off, reduce there to 3-inch and carry to the third take-off; from that point on 2-inch will answer, and the loss of heat from a single pipe of this character will be less than from four 2-inch pipes, each leading to its respective house. If you wish to carry the return from each house independently to the boiler, this can be done, and it is likely that you will find the independent 2-inch returns quite as satisfactory as one large one built up as the riser suggested. The flow pipes are only objectionable because of the loss of heat; in many other ways they are more desirable than the throttled flow described.

If you wish a tight, dry house, use lapped glass. Do not make the lap more than three-sixteenths of an inch wide. Wide laps are objectionable. Use either putty or Mastica, as you please; the one you can work easiest. I prefer 1½-inch or 2-inch pipe supports under ridge, but 1¼-inch is large enough for most purlin posts. The size of the pipe for purlins must vary according to the wind pressure, the distance between the supporting posts and the size and length of the sashbars. For 2¼-inch sashbars and posts eight feet apart, 1¼-inch purlins are usually heavy enough. I use double pointed glazing staples almost exclusively; brads are next best in my judgment.

My preference is for continuous ventilators, although I believe that for practical purposes those with one row of glass between are equally good and more easily placed. I would not use two rows of glass between the ventilators. There is a decided advantage in setting both wood and iron posts in grout. If the hole is entirely filled and the concrete can entirely surround the post, it is effectively protected from decay, is more substantially anchored and better able to do its work. My preference would be for the well seasoned locust set in grout.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

The inactivity in all branches of the trade is due, without doubt, to the continued hot weather which has been with us of late. The entire lack of rain for over two weeks, with the hot winds, has caused all outdoor stock to suffer, and on every side the call is for rain. With these conditions the quality of asters and sweet peas is poorer than last season, the latter having made a poor showing thus far. White asters are plentiful, while colored ones are just the reverse. As they take the place of carnations, they move well at an average of $1 per hundred. The new crop of roses is beginning to come in and can be used to advantage.

The funeral of Alderman F. J. Stiglbauer, July 27, called for a good lot of work, which in this case was pretty well divided and no one was rushed. Outside of this, all retailers say it was the quietest week thus far.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Baumgarten, of the Baumgarten Floral Co., who had an operation performed a short time ago, is convalescing slowly but surely, and intends to rest up at the Oconomowoc sanitarium after leaving the hospital.

Gust. Pohl is bringing in some fine indoor grown sweet peas, which find ready sale at the Holton & Hunkel Co.'s.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. reports the arrival of Harrisii bulbs. They have a batch of fine mums showing bud.

The Edlefsen-Leidiger Co. has just completed two houses, to be planted with carnations. They were very successful with them last season, hence the addition. With all benches ready, the carnation specialists around Milwaukee are being delayed in planting, for the soil is too dry to permit operations.

The prospects are that the delegation from Milwaukee to the S. A. F. convention will be light.

Visitors: B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; S. Boelter, Appleton, Wis.; John Stamm, Hutchinson, Kan.

Alfred Obermann, Beauty grower at Bassett & Washburn's, Hinsdale, Ill., spent last week here at his home, recuperating.

With great pomp and ceremony, August 1, the cornerstone of our half-million-dollar auditorium was laid, and it will not be long before we will have a fine place to take care of conventions, flower shows and other gatherings.

State of Trade.

Trade has been unusually heavy in funeral work for the last two weeks, with stock scarce and no outlook for a good supply for some time. Outside of funeral work, trade is quiet.

Asters are coming in slowly and are rather small. Carnations are good, what are in market, but they are not plentiful. The new stock, however, is coming in well and it will not be long until we will have a good supply. Roses are much better than they have been and are getting better right along. Brides and Maids are the main ones in the market. Richmond, Killarney, etc., are all looking fine and will soon be in crop.

Gladioli are coming in plentifully. They help to make a showing, but sell rather slowly.

There has been a good demand for ferns, especially Boston and Piersoni.

Mums are looking fine and the outlook is good for some good early blooms.

Various Notes.

I. D. Seibert, O. Munk and their families returned from Buckeye lake and report a fine time, but the fish did not bite for them.

Albert Hills has returned from his fishing trip up in Michigan and reports a fine time but few fish.

James McKellar and wife leave on August 9, with a party of friends, to rough it in camp life down the Muskingum river.

Mr. Gibson, of the Livingston Seed Co., is spending his vacation in and about Philadelphia. J. M.

CLINTON, IA.—George Dallam, on Eighth street north, has had a well drilled, going down eighty feet and securing fifty feet of water. A gasoline engine will be installed, to supply his greenhouses with water.

DANVERS, MASS.—Ettore Tassinari has, as usual each summer, some attractive flower beds and elaborate designs on the Danvers Insane Hospital grounds, in the rear of the main building and near the greenhouses. Among the principal designs are a large sun dial, a life-size lion, a deer with branching antlers and a full-sized Indian with bow and arrow.

Current Comment.

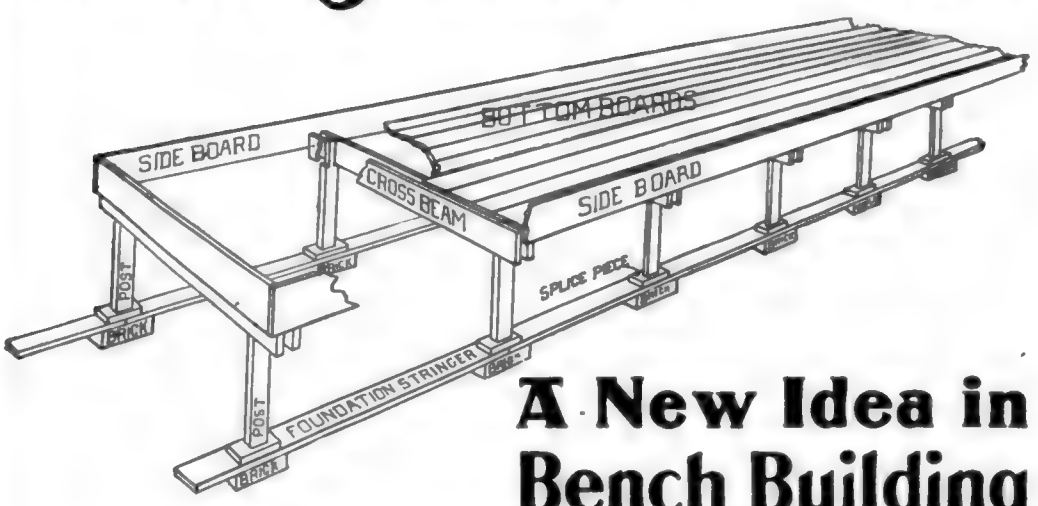
Weather conditions during the last week, for this section, are easily described — hot, hotter, hottest, and dry, drier, driest.

Fred Hukriede is able to be about again, though he has to use a stick to assist him in walking. He got his knee badly wrenched in doing a brilliant fielding stunt in the florists' baseball game.



Charles Pahud has gone to Denver, where he has accepted a position.

The Market.

A continued call for funeral work has kept this market pretty well cleaned up. So far, the supply has not been heavy, but asters are becoming more plentiful and, as is the case every year, considerable stock will be lost during the balance of the summer.

The roses are small, but the stems are good, as is also the color. Brides, Maids, Killarney, La Detroit, Richmond, Kaiserin, etc., are all available. The price runs from 3 cents to 6 cents for the best stuff.

Very few carnations are seen. A few fairly good Enchantress and Lawson arrive daily.

Asters are becoming quite plentiful, with the exception of white, which is still not quite equal to the demand for good stock. The asters are not any too large, but the flowers are clean and free from disease. Gladioli are commencing to arrive, but so far not in large quantities. Some fine sweet peas are arriving at both commission houses, and these are immediately disposed of.

Aside from smilax, all greens are plentiful.

Various Notes.

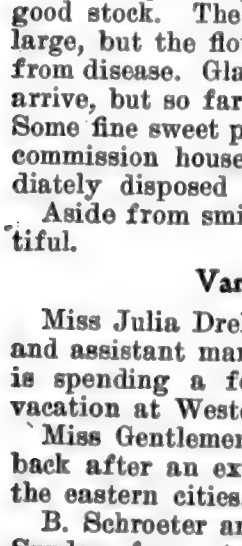
Miss Julia Drehr, bookkeeper, designer and assistant manager for W. B. Brown, is spending a few weeks' well earned vacation at Weston, O., with an uncle.

Miss Gentlemen, of Leadley's store, is back after an extended journey through the eastern cities.

B. Schroeter and his son, Bruno, leave Sunday for a trip up the lakes. Miss May Wright, of Schroeter's, leaves for her vacation August 14.

The Peter Koenig Coal Co., of this city, has started filling up Schroeter's bins. This firm supplied several of our largest growers with coal last season, with most satisfactory results. They handle a semi-bituminous coal, which is practically smokeless and is a money saver.

William Hielscher is expected back in Detroit this week from his western visit. Although there is not much call for wire designs at this season of the year, still we are all pleased to hear that he is homeward bound.



Max Laurisch, of Saginaw, rose grower for Grohman Bros., was a recent visitor.

Other visitors were: W. W. Coles, of Kokomo, Ind.; Harry Bunyard, of New York.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

SPRAY OF ORCHIDS.

The spray of orchids and cycas leaves is one of the series of funeral designs by C. H. Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia, and the illustration displays a form of one of Mr. Fox's favorite ideas for funeral work, a spray composed chiefly of one variety of flowers. The leaves of Cycas revoluta have been used for a background, on which have been fastened blooms of the purple and white Cattleya labiata, giving a rich, harmonious color effect. A cluster of gardenias divided from the orchids by a bow of white ribbon finished off the bunch. PHIL.

THE MASONIC DESIGN.

W. L. Leeka, at Fairmount, Ill., acknowledges to being particular on one point, and as to that he thinks the members of practically every society observe the same thing if it is lacking in a funeral design. Mr. Leeka's hobby is the proportions of the masonic square and compass, which constitute a design almost always seen at the funeral of a member of the Masonic order. Mr. Leeka says the square should be of the proportions of the familiar article of steel used in the building trades and the compass should appear to lie on and above the square. He avers that in his opinion the members of any order hold in esteem the florist who can execute the lodge emblems in flowers without doing violence to them, and that the reverse is true of the florist who has no eye to the eternal fitness of things.

SOME WINDOWS.

Good Taste in Decorating Them.

Having discussed at length the well equipped window, it is next in order to consider the display itself. When we enter this subject, a wide field with many paths at once opens up to us. At first a rough classification of different kinds of window displays will aid us, and then a few remarks applicable to all kinds will preface the description of the different classes. One attractive kind of window display is the landscape, another is the water window, and a third is the special design showing. Each division, with examples, will be considered later.

An Overcrowded Window.

Even a casual thought upon the above classification will show that it gives no place at all for the windows frequently seen, which might be described as the "set in" or box display, usurping the function of the back ice-box, without even the care and thought given to the front ice-box. It is an attempt to fill in every inch of space. A sample lot of every kind of flower in the house is packed in a jardiniere or vase, along with other well filled vases of every style on the premises, all set in as closely as possible to their neighbors, till the window space is suffocatingly full. This is repeated mechanically 365 days in the year. If packed windows like these are to become the rule, then we would better estimate decorations by the cubic foot, and brides' bouquets by the amount of excavations they would displace.

Other Defective Displays.

Another excuse for a window decoration is the foregoing thinned out. Another is of two or three vases or groups of totally different flowers, with no visible reason for their being displayed together, some colors positively fighting. Others have indifferent coloring, neither bad nor particularly good, merely accidental combinations. Others are put together in much the same manner, with a due respect for color, but none for pure design. One has plenty of space, or too much vacancy, but to no purpose. A fairly good center group leaves both corners of the window bare.

Not infrequently there may be seen a window display smacking of the first class mentioned, with one or two good features drowned in a host of storage pieces; for example, a basket of beautiful Killarneys was seen down among jars of gaillardias, sweet peas, phloxes and gladioli.

The Lack of Connection.

Another only half bad arrangement is a number of vases or baskets set in a window with no apparent connection. "One thing at a time" must be a maxim ever in mind. You may use a hundred different objects in your window at once, but see to it that they are employed to one common end or purpose. For instance, suppose you are displaying a little table decoration. Set the table completely and confine yourself to that alone. Do not set a basket or vase off in the corner of the window, no matter how empty that may look, or how tempting the stock is that you wish to show. Make your decoration elaborate and beautiful, but stop short with that feature, not inferring, however, that the decoration shall be of one color and one kind of flowers. It may or may not, but it must be one picture, and every variety or separate flower must be a part of the whole.

Suppose we give each of two people a few hundred carnations, we will say of one color, for a window decoration, and give each the privilege of selecting the receptacles and style of arrangement. One may select ten or a dozen vases, fill each one with carnations and green, and set them indiscriminately in the window. The other may put all of his carnations into a large jardiniere and set it in the window for his decoration. Which is the better? The latter, for he could, with the addition of a good, soft background and a liberal allowance of green, make a simple, elegant window piece.

Straining After Novelty.

Some decorators are a step in advance of those just mentioned. They worry about the window. "What shall I put in next?" They try, but can invent nothing worth while, and their productions betray a straining after novelty, instead of being clear, refreshing, lifelike pictures. For such there is plenty of help in the diligent study of the subject in general—plant life, habits, color and design. It will stimulate a love of the beautiful, and after a while significant ideas will present themselves without effort.

It is no permanent help to a person to have a window to copy from. That is the most undesirable of all aids. Get at the principle which the designer of a good window presents and work out another of its class, or still better, of another class.

The store has a character, like an individual, and the window is its face. Is it an intelligent, thinking face, that welcomes a customer? Is it one that reflects something of the progress of the world and the beauties of nature, or is it a machine face that grinds out pretty things?

Gertrude Blair.

EQUINES' FLORAL TROPHIES.

G. Van Bochove & Bro., Kalamazoo, Mich., send a photograph of a floral horseshoe mounted on a chair draped with smilax, and the following explanation:

We had the Grand and Western Circuit races here last week and as we had the orders for three large floral pieces we thought it might be of some interest to Review readers. On the opening day for the 2:09 trot we made a floral horse-collar, which was presented to the winning horse. On the following day, for the $10,000 stake race, we made a floral horseshoe six feet high, attached to a chair. The winning driver in this race was placed in the chair and the horseshoe above him and carried around, amid great applause, before the grand stand. On the following day, for the 2:13 pace, we made a floral blanket for the winning horse.

The floral pieces were all placed in a down-town window, which was decorated to represent a horse stall. It contained a horse and all necessary equipments and certainly was very attractive and was viewed by thousands.

Cincinnati, O.—Fred G. Blecher has incorporated the Blecher Floral Co. with $6,000 authorized capital stock.

MORE ABOUT PECKY CYPRESS.

They say experience is the best teacher, and the experience of certain growers who bought pecky cypress from the lowest bidder this season serves to give others an opportunity to profit by the expensive experience of the unwary.

It appears that it has been possible for growers to procure cars of this best of all bench lumber at prices considerably below those quoted by the firms which make a specialty of the greenhouse trade, but when the lumber has arrived it has been found that the saving in cost was more than consumed by the fact that the stock was what is known in the lumber trade as random widths.

Random widths are anything from three to sixteen inches wide; also, the board is likely to be three inches wide on one end and five inches wide on the other; and they run from six to sixteen feet long. Such lumber is decidedly expensive in the extra work it makes in building the bench, and the bench is never so good as where the material is a uniform width—six inches in the case of pecky cypress sold by those who know what bench building requires.

The saving of a dollar or two per thousand feet does not justify anyone in buying random widths, and by all means know what you are going to get before you place your order. Buy of someone who makes a specialty of florists' trade.

DISEASED ASTER PLANTS.

By today's mail I will send you a Crego aster plant. Can you tell me what is the trouble with it? I planted some in the old aster bed, and some in a new bed where no asters had ever been grown, but they are all affected the same way. I can see no insect but grasshoppers on them. It seems to me I will be without blossoms this season. The plants were grown from the new Crego aster seed.

A. D.

I am not familiar with the Crego aster, except what I have seen of it growing here this season; therefore I do not know whether it is subject to the trouble you are having with it or not. I suspect that your trouble is not as aggravated as you may fear and I think you may expect to cut a good many good blooms from these plants. They are not affected with the common aster blight, but with a sort of scald or bleach on the young growth. We frequently see this on the Semple and Carlson strains. It ruins the center bud and, in fact, all the top of the plant, but the lower branches come out and produce as fine blooms as the top ones ever would have produced.

I cannot tell you what causes it, nor how you can prevent it, unless it is from the extreme heat we usually encounter at this time of the year. Our Crego plants do not show this trouble here, but we have lost several from the blight. Remember that this is a late flowering variety and that you will not get the best blooms for some time.

It seems to me this aster disease problem is one which is worthy of the closest study by some of our good scientist friends. The growing of asters has become quite an industry and every year a great deal of money is lost to the growers through these diseases. Especially is the blight a most puzzling problem. So far, we have been able to find nothing which will check it after it once shows itself in the field. Many theories have been offered as to its origin, etc., but we have been unable to verify any one of them by experience. The best of culture and closest attention do not seem to keep it away, and sometimes I have wondered whether it could be transmitted from parent to seedling through the seed. Bordeaux mixture and kindred preventives of fungous diseases do not seem to be of any use, as we have found by experience. A sure preventive of this disease would be welcomed by hundreds of growers.

We never plant asters two successive seasons on the same ground, but that does not always prove successful. Nor can we say that certain varieties are more subject to the blight than others. One season it will be one variety and the next season it will be another variety, and maybe they will be growing side by side. We have frequently seen this. We have come to look upon the aster crop as decidedly a lottery. A. F. J. B.

BAR HARBOR, ME.

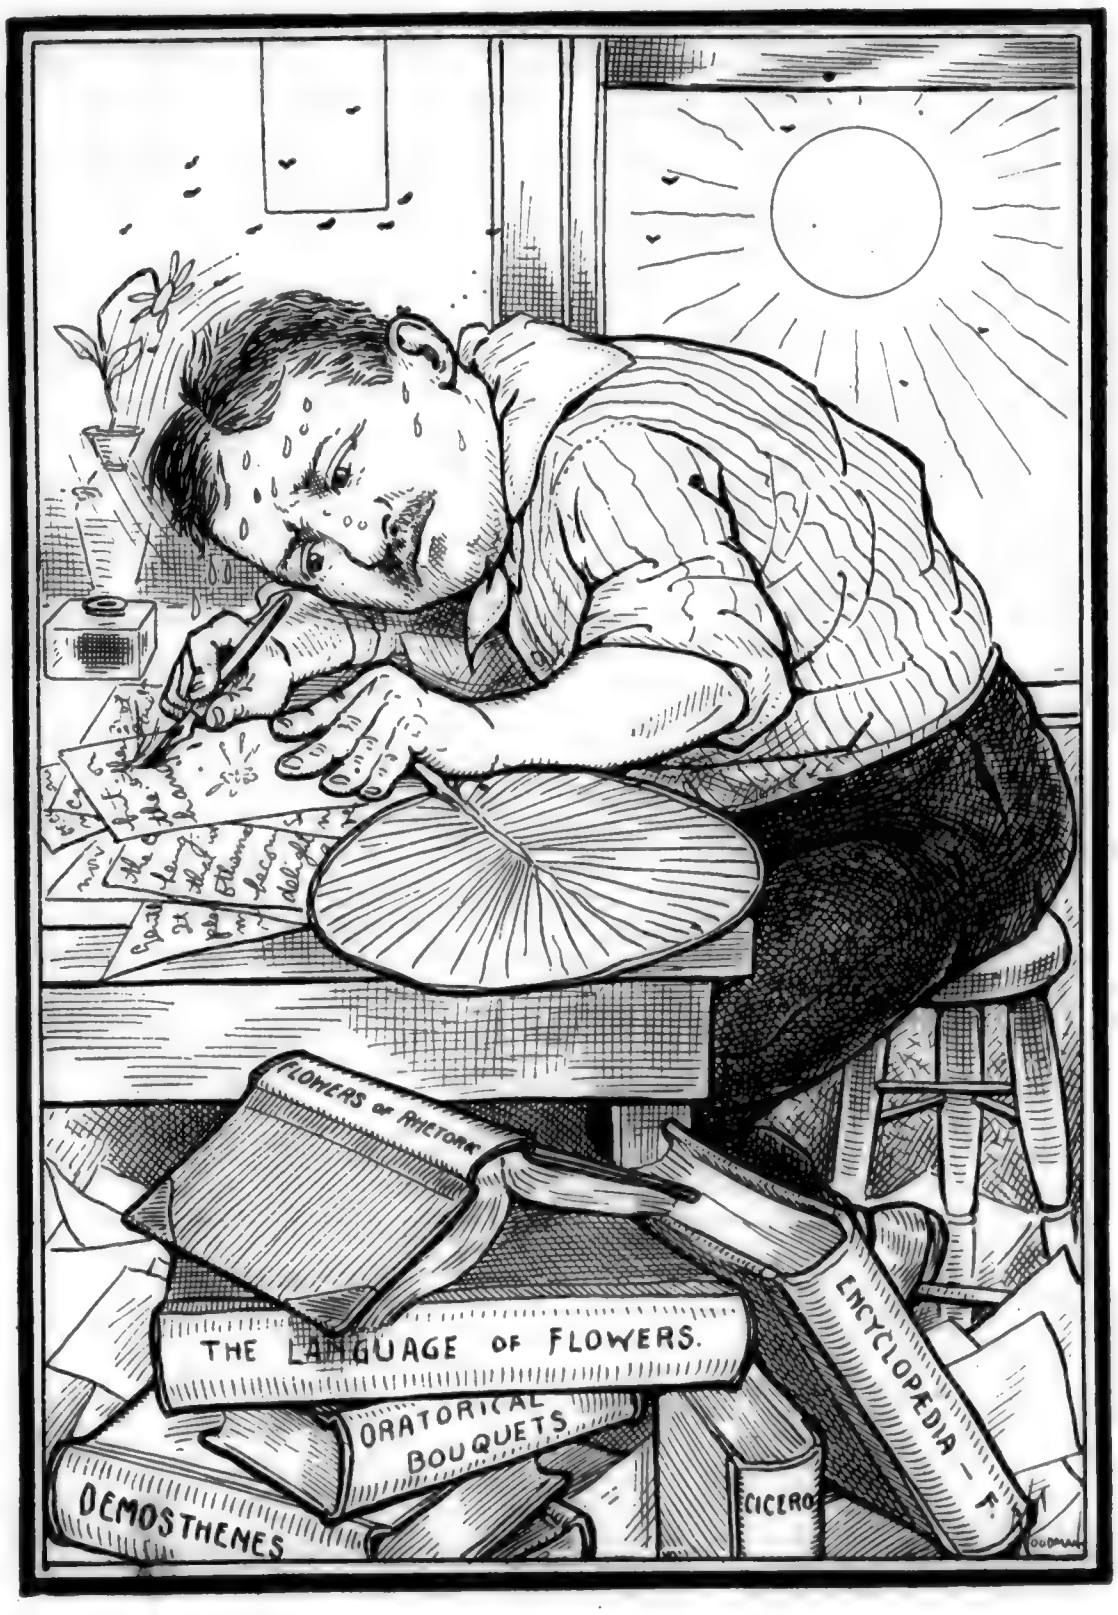
The first flower show on the island of Mount Desert and, we believe, in the state of Maine, was held in the new Building of Arts, Bar Harbor, August 6 and 7 and, although gotten up at two weeks' notice, was a splendid success in every way. The beautiful building but recently erected, standing on a high eminence and commanding an enchanting view of the island's mountain scenery, was an ideal spot in which to hold a florists' exhibition. The interior proved too small to accommodate all the exhibits and collections of vegetables, which were staged in the rear of the building, on verandas, while on the beautiful lawn were dotted numerous specimen hydrangeas in tubs, the steps also being furnished with bay trees, palms and hydrangeas. Much of the credit for the successful launching of a flower show here is due to George B. Dorr, one of the most prominent residents and owner of the Mount Desert Nurseries, who worked indefatigably for its success.

There were five entries for the best group of plants arranged for decorative effect, all being of excellent quality, J. I. Kane, Kenneth McLean gardener, taking first. Palms, adiantums, tuberous begonias and gloxinias were used to good effect. John S. Kennedy, W. T. Burton gardener, was a good second. The class for twelve tuberous begonias brought out some splendid entries from John S. Kennedy, J. E. Bowen and others. Gloxinias were also well shown. Fuchsias, achimines, ferns, Rex begonias and other plants were each exhibited of excellent quality. A certificate of merit was awarded to Joseph Pulitzer, A. W. Ekstrom gardener, for a superb specimen of Allamanda Hendersoni, grown as a standard with an umbrella shaped head. The same exhibitor had a similar award for a fine collection of fittonias and other stove and greenhouse plants, and secured first for specimen fern with a well grown specimen of Nephrolepis Whitmani.



The Mount Desert Nurseries, William Miller manager, had an interesting collection of nephrolepis, including Todeaoides, Whitmani and Amerpohlii. Milleri, a new dwarf sport, was awarded honorable mention, and another unnamed sport was shown, in character intermediate between Bostoniensis and Scottii, with divided fronds. They also showed Begonia corallina and, from their Northeast Harbor branch nursery, a fine display of sweet peas. H. A. Dreer had a display of aquatics. George S. Bondoin, Bernard Morris gardener, received a certificate of merit for a fine lot of hydrangeas in large tubs. Joseph Pulitzer also had several well flowered tubs of these. E. C. Cushman, John Renwick gardener, had an immense begonia in the way of fuchsioides, eight feet high and of proportionate width.

Although the island of Mount Desert suffered from a six weeks' drought this summer, the display of cut flowers was of a higher quality than could be found at this season at any other horticultural show in the east; both perennials and annuals were splendid. The pentstemons, phlox, collections of garden annuals, aconitums, sweet peas and gladioli were of splendid quality.

For the best basket of cut flowers arranged for effect there were no less than sixteen entries. Joseph Pulitzer, A. W. Ekstrom gardener, won with a beautiful arrangement of Shirley poppies and Gypsophila elegans. J. E. Bowen, A. E. Chilman gardener, who was second, used lavender flowers in variety, which produced a pleasing effect. The model flower garden, from the Miller boys at Mount Desert Nurseries, attracted much favorable notice and received a certificate of merit.

There was a good display of fruits. G. W. Vanderbilt, Edward Kirk gardener, was first for white grapes with splendid Muscats, awarded a cultural certificate. Miss Morrill, Charles Heath gardener, received a similar award for a fine bunch of Black Hambros weighing six pounds and fourteen ounces. Melons from G. W. Vanderbilt, A. C. Gurnee, Charles Shand gardener, and J. S. Kennedy were handsome. There was an excellent display of vegetables, collections of twenty, fifteen and ten varieties, each being well competed for, the collection of peas comprising Alderman, Peerless, Duke of Albany, Sharpe's Queen and others from J. S. Kennedy being noteworthy. The state entomologist had a large and well scrutinized display of insect pests. Other exhibitors, in addition to those already named, included David B. Ogden, Angus Gray gardener; John Harrison, Vernon H. Grant gardener; Mrs. Edward Coles, William McGravaghan gardener; Edgar Scott, A. Mitchell gardener; Mrs. Markoe, James Crawford gardener; Alfred M. Coats, John Brown gardener, and Louis B. McCagg.

Robert Cameron had charge of the arrangement of the exhibits. K. Finlayson and W. N. Craig were judges.

There were no medals, cups or prize money awarded at the show; this being considered, the splendid show was all the more remarkable. With some of these added as incentives for another, a magnificent show will be assured. The attendance of prominent cottagers and others at the show was large, and it is probable that the Bar Harbor flower show will now become one of the recognized events of the season in the beautiful Maine watering resort.

A banquet, generously furnished by the Mount Desert Nurseries, was tendered to the gardeners and others interested in floriculture in the island at the Mount Kebo Valley clubhouse, on the evening of August 7. There were about fifty present. At the close of the banquet short addresses were delivered by William Miller, who presided; Charles Shand, Kenneth Finlayson and W. N. Craig, and hopes were expressed for the formation of a horticultural society or a gardeners and florists' club as a result of the first successful exhibition. These sentiments seemed to find general approval. W. N. C.

Primulas.

The plants of the several primroses, more especially the Sinensis class, should go into their blooming pots during the present month, if wanted in bloom for Christmas. At this holiday there is always a good sale for nicely flowered primulas, more particularly the crimson and scarlet varieties. In potting, avoid a heavy soil for the Chinese section. Use a good proportion of leaf-mold, some sand, well decayed cow manure and loam. You want the compost fairly porous to keep it sweet, so do not ram it hard, as you would the soil for an azalea or erica. P. obconica and the pleasing new Kewensis do better with a rather heavier soil. They also should be in their flowering pots not later than September 1.

As a rule, 5-inch and 6-inch pots are as large sized as there is much call for commercially. Late sown stock can be flowered in 4-inch pots, but for these the demand will not be so good. Keep the plants shaded from bright sun. Remove the sashes on dull days and evenings, but avoid drenching rains, which will sodden the earth in the pots badly. Keep all flowers removed as they appear.

Cyclamens.

As the nights grow cooler cyclamens grow faster. Let them have the night dews and spray overhead early in the afternoon of warm days. Stir the surface soil. Remove weeds, and water carefully. Keep tobacco stems renewed about the plants, so that thrips and aphis cannot secure a foothold. If thrips has appeared, smoke on two successive evenings, avoiding heavy doses, which may injure the plants at this warm season.

If you want your plants for Christmas blooming, it is well to have them rooting freely around the sides of the pots before housing time. If, on the other hand, you prefer to have them in late winter or early spring, there is no rush about getting them into flowering pots for a month yet.

Smilax.

If you have not yet found time to plant a bed or bench of smilax, do so as soon as possible. There is still time for the production of nice strings before the holidays. Stock from 2-inch to 3-inch pots will be found all right. Get your strings in position before the young growths have had time to become entangled. Look over plants set out some time ago and see that the shoots are clinging to the strings. Old beds, which have been rested, should now be started up, cleaning away some of the old surface soil and giving them a good top-dressing first.

Rambler Roses.

Pot grown plants of Crimson Rambler roses kept under glass until early in July will now have their growths almost completed. Give them a sunny spot and use the hose on them once a day, so that spider can get no foothold. The shoots of all ramblers should be securely tied up to secure their proper ripening. This is especially necessary in the case of the pink varieties, which, with their Wichuraiana blood, have a natural tendency to run over the ground. A temporary fence to which the plants can be tied is sometimes used and it has much to recommend it, as strong winds cannot then blow the plants around.

Eucharis Amazonica.

Eucharis Amazonica is a useful Christmas flower. If properly rested and started up six weeks before the holidays, it should be in season in a night temperature of 65 to 70 degrees. Many fail to flower this plant, owing to keeping it in too dark a house. It needs but little shade at any time, just sufficient to prevent burning of the foliage. To time a good crop for Christmas, the plants should be rested after September 1. They will need syringing to keep mealy bug in check. This should provide all the root moisture the plants require. If in pots, the resting can be done in any house where the temperature does not go below 50 degrees at night.

Abutilon Savitzii.

Cuttings of that useful colored-leaved bedding abutilon, Savitzii, if inserted now will soon root, and if grown along through the winter will make nice little stock plants to propagate from in spring. Souvenir de Bonn or any others of the variegated class may also be propagated now.

Brief Reminders.

If you have forgotten to sow pansies, do so without delay. Remove any coverings from seedlings as soon as they appear.

Chrysanthemums will now need lots of attention in disbudding and tying. It will not pay to neglect this. Do not forget a spraying with nicotine extract or kerosene emulsion once a week for aphis.

Keep antirrhinums headed back where intended for bench planting later. Grow them cool and avoid getting them pot-bound.

Watch the little seedling cinerarias carefully. Transplant them before they crowd each other.

Scratch the soil over on the early mignonette bench. Keep abundant ventilation on all the time.

If stevias are planted out it will pay to put a stake to each. Pinching is still in order for these.

Trim genistas into shape from time to time to keep them shapely.

Put in a batch of marguerite cuttings as soon as you can secure suitable wood.

Prepare the loam pile for bulbs and get an adequate supply of flats, pots and pans in readiness.

It is better to cut gladioli with two or three flowers expanded only. The balance open just as well in water as on the plant.

Spray dahlias with kerosene emulsion where the bug which stings the shoots is troublesome.

Avoid putting on heavy shading after this date. The sun's power will soon be on the wane and plants are better grown without dense shade.

CHEMICAL FERTILIZERS.

Can chemical fertilizers, such as phosphates, ammonia and nitrate of soda, be used on pink or yellow mums up to the time when the flowers show color, or can they be used at all to advantage and without changing the color? A. W.

Chemical fertilizers, such as nitrate of soda, phosphates and ammonia, can be used with advantage up to the time the buds show color. It is, however, very easy by an overdose to destroy the colors of pinks and reds, and care should be taken to reduce the strength and also the quantity as we come closer to the flowering period. Ribes.

TO DESTROY SNAILS.

Will you kindly tell us what to do about the snails in our houses? Can we do anything to get rid of them?

W. G. M.

There are a number of ways to destroy snails. The most common one is to lay baits of leaves of cabbage and lettuce or slices of potatoes, examining these every day and laying fresh baits as the old ones shrivel. If you are growing pot plants on benches, remove these and give the bench a dressing of air-slaked lime, or water it with boiling water applied through an ordinary watering pot. Under the benches scatter some lime or fine salt. If you are growing maidenhair- ferns or other plants to which snails are partial, it will pay to look over them with a lantern, as the pests work most at night. They hide frequently in the holes at the bottom of the pots, as well as among the young growths. By using baits and lime you will speedily lessen their ravages materially. C. W.

The World of Plants in a Public Park at St. Louis, Mo.

SUNBURNT RUBBER PLANT.

May I ask what is the trouble with my rubber plant? It had become so large that this summer I removed it from the pot and planted it in my garden, where it had good, rich soil. In about a week most of the leaves turned an ugly shade of brown and they still remain in that condition, with no signs of growth. Will you tell me what I had better do? Shall I repot it and put it in the house again? E. E. M.

From the description given, it seems most probable that this is a case of sunburn, owing to the soft condition of the foliage at the time the plant was put outdoors. I would not bring it in before cool weather—in the latter part of September, for example, or at any time there might be danger of frost.

If the foliage is badly disfigured it would be best to cut back the shoots, in order to encourage some fresh growth, giving the plant a mulching of manure and leaving it out in the full sun. W. H. T.

THE GLOBE IN FLOWERS.

The accompanying illustration shows a bedding design which is attracting an unusual amount of public attention at St. Louis. It is located at Bissell's Point park, the old city pumping station, and W. E. Robinson, who was standing in the scene when the photograph was taken, is not only the general superintendent of all the parks under the water department in St. Louis, but he is the originator of this design.

It will be readily understood that the globe represents the earth, the picture showing the side with the western hemisphere. The globe revolves, but not automatically, the employees taking the place of nature's force in this instance in order to give the plants on all sides their share of the sun. The flower bed upon which the globe stands is sixty feet in diameter and the globe itself contains 32,000 plants. The globe was made of wood and it took a carload of soil to fill it, and then they covered it with a wire netting and sea weed. The continents are made of alternantheras in four colors. The oceans and the desert of Sahara are made of Santolina incana and sedums. In the design which forms the base of the globe there are 16,000 plants of Salvia splendens St. Louis and many thousands of coleus, Ageratum Stella Gurney, santolina, alternanthera, echeveria and sedum.

Thousands of people visit the park each Sunday to admire this design.

GROWER AND WHOLESALER

THE GROWER'S STORY.

He Also Has His Troubles.

I have been much interested in the discussion which has recently appeared in the Review on the attitude of the retailers toward the wholesalers, and how each could help the trade in general by doing, or not doing, certain things. As Mr. Niessen says, coöperation would be a grand thing, and let us hope he gets it, and we all of us get it—it will help us all. But what Mr. Niessen says about overproduction brings another thought to my mind, and one I have not seen mentioned in this discussion. If a grower may be permitted to butt in on a debate between the selling ends of the business, I should like to call attention to a situation now existing in which the wholesalers could do a little coöperating with the growers to, I think, mutual advantage.

As Mr. Niessen says, the storekeeper sometimes complains that he does not get the same chance as the faker. Of course it would be much better for the florists if the storekeepers would have their bargain days, as Mr. Niessen suggests, to sell more flowers, and so help the florist-grower. There would not be so much stuff thrown away and no doubt it would keep the faker off the streets a good bit.

Consignments From Amateurs.

But here is where my idea comes in. Mr. Commission-man, listen! How many of you handle flowers for amateurs? By that I mean people who are holding good positions, not in the florist trade, but in banks, or on the railroad, or in some other trade. No doubt many of you have summer shippers such as these. People who are not in the trade, who do not have to depend on the trade, and who just raise flowers to make a few extra dollars; which means a few dollars less for the florist-grower each week. Why should a grower be made to compete with these people? We all know that the commission-man is never short of outdoor flowers, so why should he accept flowers from these folks, and help along the overproduction when it is not necessary? And not alone that; the amateur encourages his neighbor, and that neighbor encourages another, and where will the trade be if this keeps up?

No doubt there is many a florist who does not know about this, and perhaps many a commission-man, too. But those who do, do you think it is right? When a florist raises a thing he doesn't grow it for the few extra dollars, or for a pastime. He did not learn the trade for that. He learned it to make his living, support his family, and he must depend on the commission-man to a certain extent if he is a wholesale grower.

Seedsmen's Wholesale Lists.

Here is another thing: Why is it that the seedsman has his wholesale and his retail catalogue? Just for the same reason. He knows it would not do if the stock was sold to the amateur for the same price as to the florist; not alone for his own sake, but for the florist's, too. What if seeds, etc., were sold at wholesale to all? Where would the trade be?

Of course, if an amateur was to buy out a florist, or start for himself and spend his time at it entirely, and make it his business, that's another thing. We all would like to help him along, encourage him, tell him the ins and outs of how to grow a thing, etc. This, of course, is a certain duty to mankind.

Neither does it apply to the amateur who employs a florist or two to run the houses and garden for pleasure. They will at times have an oversupply of flowers and we cannot blame them if they make a shipment here and there, as they do not like to see them go to waste. So why shouldn't they try to turn them into cash, where they are paying for skilled help? Also, they are not making a regular practice of it.

Some years ago I left my position in a large flower establishment. I bought a piece of land, got my sash ready to start in for myself and depend on the Philadelphia market. Well, in the first place I had to send for a wholesale price-list, which I did. Two days later I received a postal from one seed house, saying that if I wanted a wholesale price-list I must either show by my printed letterheads that I was a florist, or give proper references to prove it. They did right, so far, and I give them credit. But now is where I was stuck. I gave them the name of my former place, where I was employed for the last five years. Certainly I thought I would have the trade list in a day or two, as any one knows I was entitled to same. But it never came!

Now, had I already shipped flowers to a commission house in their city, and given the wholesaler as reference, to be sure I would have had the price-list, and how would they know whether I was in the trade or not? Of course, I had no trouble in getting trade lists elsewhere.

Mr. Commission-men, from Philadelphia, Chicago, New York and elsewhere, what have you to say about this? Don't you think that the trade belongs to the florist? Hugo Kind.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Surplus Outdoor Plants.

After you have planted your carnation beds, you may have some plants left in the field. If you planted out as many as you should have done in order to be able to select your plants carefully, you will likely have a good many left outside. Do not neglect these and allow them to go to ruin for want of attention. They are too valuable for that, and there are too many growers who are only too anxious to take off your hands at a profitable price good plants of any good variety you may be growing, if you wish to sell them.

Choose Either of Two Courses.

There are two courses open to you, either of which will prove profitable to you. You must choose at once, however, between the two, according to the nature of your business, as they require different treatment. One plan would be to keep the plants topped and shapely, to be dug as ordered and disposed of as field-grown plants for benching. In this case you will handle them just as though you were going to house them later yourself. Place an advertisement in the Review, stating what varieties you have and the price.

The other method would be to let the plants run up to bud, disbud them as you do inside in winter, and sell the blooms. In some cases this latter method can be made even more profitable than selling the field-grown plants. The retailer, particularly, can use these blooms to good advantage, especially if they are principally light colors, which is likely to be the case. Many of the pink varieties come quite light outside. There is always a scarcity of flowers about the time the asters begin to let up, and every carnation you can cut, inside or out, will bring you good money.

In either case you must, of course, keep down the weeds and cultivate regularly. If you could water the plants in case you let them bloom, it would help them considerably, but you must determine for yourself whether you would be warranted in going to that much expense. The plants will likely be scattered out considerably, on account of having half or more taken out.

Avoid the Other Course.

Do not do as do some growers, who allow the plants to take care of themselves after they have finished planting what they need. The plants are perhaps kept free from weeds and cultivated, but are allowed to bloom. The blooms are cut and sold and the plants are advertised and sold for benching. This may be more profitable than the methods suggested above, but it would not be treating your customers right, unless you let it be known that the plants have been allowed to bloom in the field. You would not want to plant such stock yourself; neither do your customers. Say in your advertisement just what you have for sale, and deliver what you sell. That is the way to build business. You may wish to sell more next year, and besides, it is right—"'nuff sed." A. F. J. Baur.

USING LAST YEAR'S SOIL.

Enclosed you will find a sample of soil that was taken from our carnation benches. We would like to know if we can use it for another season with good success. The carnations did well last season in this soil, with little or no feeding.

It is hard for us to get soil, for we are in the heart of the city, and we thought that perhaps, with the aid of cow manure and bone meal, the soil would do for another year. E. M.

As a general thing we do not approve of using soil for carnations more than one season. We have tried it as an experiment a few times, but could never get as good results as we could from new soil. I have talked with growers, however, who claimed to have used the same soil two seasons or more with good success. In fact, I know of one grower who claimed to have used one lot of soil five consecutive seasons, and at the time of our conversation he expected to keep on using it as long as it gave as good satisfaction as it had up to that time. I know of another firm who used a batch of soil one season, then spread it thinly outside for two or three years, and then used it again. This firm grew good carnations, but they grew much better carnations after they purchased a tract of land and began using new soil. So, you see, there are different degrees of success, and what would seem gratifying to one grower would not satisfy another at all.

We consider good soil for filling the benches of the greatest importance, and a few extra dollars spent in securing the best you can find, and in getting it in good condition, are as good an investment as you can possibly make. It does not take many blooms to buy the difference between good soil and bad, and the handling costs you just the same. And if you figure up the difference in the price you will get between high-grade blooms and those of a lower grade, you will see that you will soon pay for the good soil. A half cent added to each bloom you cut during the season will make a remarkable difference in your bank account, even if the good soil did not produce any more blooms than the other.

So I would not advise you to use the old soil if you can possibly get new soil and have it in proper condition for planting in. Your letter would indicate that you have not secured the soil as yet, and it will be almost impossible now, except by chance, to get soil that is properly prepared. The benches ought to be filled at once if it is not already done, and no time should be lost, if you do not want to wait until winter for your carnation blooms.

The sample you forwarded seems to be in good mechanical condition, and does not have the appearance of having been used a season. Fair success may be had with it, if properly enriched—far better than with most soil taken from the benches. It might be better than what you would be able to procure in new soil. I would add cow manure, sheep manure and bone meal to it and let it lie a couple of weeks before planting. Keep it fairly moist and turn it over once each week before planting. Put on an inch of cow manure and add 100 pounds of bone meal and 300 pounds of sheep manure to 1,000 square feet of bench space, and mix thoroughly. A few top-dressings of lime during the season will be beneficial. In conclusion I would warn you not to use this soil under any conditions if you had any stem-rot last season, as it will surely give you trouble, and plenty of it. A. F. J. B.

W. B. BROWN.

In the election of W. B. Brown as their chief executive, the members of the Detroit Florists' Club have bestowed quite an honor upon him, inasmuch as he is the youngest man by far who has ever held this position. Still the votes cast were not marked "Brown" just because he is a nice fellow, but because he has earned a standing in the trade.

Mr. Brown was born in Detroit in 1875. His thirty-three years on earth have been more or less of a struggle for existence, until finally he has his head above water. For sixteen years he was with the Detroit Floral Co., under the training of Robert Flowerday. He worked himself up from errand boy to driver, and from driver to head clerk. About five years ago he bought out what was left of a somewhat run down retail business at 308 Woodward avenue. Here began another struggle, but with the assistance of Mrs. Brown he soon became master of the situation and now is the owner of a prosperous retail business and father of a nice fat boy of 14 months.

With the support of the members, there is no reason why we should not have a banner club year. H. S.

W. B. Brown.

DAHLIAS STUNTED AND YELLOW.

Can you tell me what ails my dahlias? They are stunted, shriveled up and yellowish. I will not be able to cut a flower. I have twelve different varieties. The ground was used for the first time last year, and the dahlias in the same spot did well. The other plants in the same ground are doing well. Is it greenfly or gases from factories near-by? C. U.

The attacks of green aphis should not cause your plants to present such a stunted and yellow appearance. Of course, it is a mistake to allow this pest to get a foothold on any plants. If your plants really have it, give them a syringing of some tobacco extract, diluted, at once. Very often a cinch bug bites the leading shoots and causes them to become stunted. Possibly you may have this. Factory gases are not good for any plants, but, if your other plants are doing well, this can hardly be the trouble with the dahlias. C. W.

ALLAMANDAS FROM SEED.

Will you kindly inform me through your columns whether Allamanda Williamsi is often grown from seed and how long it takes the seedlings to bloom? I have a quantity of young plants thus grown and seeds without number on a specimen plant. M. R. D.

Although I have never tried allamandas from seed, there is no reason why they should not be successfully propagated in this way. Sow the seed as soon as ripe in a brisk heat. The seedlings should bloom within a year. Propagation from growing wood is simple. These cuttings will root in three to four weeks and make excellent plants in a year. They should have a good bottom heat in winter, but in summer will root freely without it. C. W.

TO CARRY OVER SWAINSONA.

Can swainsona planted in solid beds a year ago last spring remain another season? C. U.

The swainsona is a rank growing plant and we prefer to plant it annually. You can, however, prune your plants back well, remove some of the old surface soil, give a liberal top-dressing and carry them over another season. C. W.

NEW ROSES AT PARIS.

Nature of the Competition.

So many inquiries have reached me as to the judging of the new roses at Paris, and so many reports have been published which need restating in order to put the matter correctly before Americans interested, that I deem it best to briefly state the case.

The city of Paris, France, is anxious to do everything possible to make the city attractive to visitors. With this in view, and in order to give an additional attraction, the municipality at the instigation of M. Jules Gravereaux has established in the great park known as the Bois de Bolougne, the Garden Bagatelle, which is given over to roses, the garden being under the able management of M. Forestier.

The call was issued last autumn and winter, asking the originators of new roses to send four plants of each of their new varieties for planting in the Garden Bagatelle. These rose plants are set out in beds, each variety being grouped together. There were eighty-seven rose varieties submitted and planted, making a total of 348 plants. The prizes were:

The Grand Prize of Bagatelle, a large gold medal given by the city of Paris.

Two Premier prizes, the first given by the Minister of Agriculture, the second given by the National Horticultural Society of France.

Two second prizes, the first by the Rose Section of the National Horticultural Society, the second given by the French National Rose Society.

The Jury.

The competition was most interesting and unique in character. The jury was composed of:

M. A. Chenoux, president of the Municipal Council of Paris, who was chairman; Arthur Paul, of England; Peter Lambert, Germany; Constant Soupert, Luxembourg; E. G. Hill, United States; MM. Jules Gravereaux, Pernet, Leveque and Chatenay, representing the National Horticultural and the National Rose Societies of France.

The jury, forming themselves into a committee, decided that a second judging of these roses should take place in September next, when the final awards will be made. The committee was led to this conclusion by the fact that a few of the roses were past their best estate so far as bloom was concerned, a number not being in bloom at all. It was concluded, in the interest of all who had submitted and sent their roses to be judged that strict equity demanded a second judgment.

All the judges agreed to return at the call of M. Gravereaux at such time in September as he deemed best, excepting of course the representative from the United States.

The Awards.

The awards so far as made, and which are subject to revision September 1, were as follows, ten points being the maximum:

Points.
10—Lyon-Rose (H. T.), de M. Pernet-Ducher, a Venissieux les-Lyon.
9—Jean Note (H. T.), de M. Pernet-Ducher, a Venissieux les-Lyon.
9—Hector Mackensie (H. T.), de M. Guillot, a Lyon-Monplaisir.
8—Mlle. Louise Leroy (T.), de M. L. Leroy, d'Angers.
8—Chateau de Clos Vougeot (H. T.), de M. Pernet-Ducher, a Venissieux.
8—Admiral Evans (H. T.), de M. E. G. Hill, a Richmond (Amerique).
8—Rhea Reid (H. T.), de M. E. G. Hill, a Richmond (Amerique).
8—Mrs. Isabelle Milner (H. T.), de MM. W. Paul et Son, Waltham (Angleterre).
8—Mme. Segond Weber (H. T.), de M. Soupert, Luxembourg.
7—Comtesse Cecile Luram (H. T.), de M. Brauer, a San Remo.
7—Mrs. Dudley Cross (T.), de MM. W. Paul & Son, a Waltham (Angleterre).
7—Indiana (H. T.), de M. E. G. Hill, a Richmond (Amerique).
7—Madonna (H. T.), de M. J. Cook, a Baltimore (Amerique).
7—Altmarker (H. T.), de M. J. C. Schmidt, Erfurt (Allemagne).
6—Mme. Pierre Laffite (Beng. sarm.), de M. Gravereaux, Al'Hay.
6—Mrs. R. A. Waddell (H. T.), de Pernet-Ducher, a Venissieux.
6—Frau Satitatsrat D'Staub (H. T.), de M. Lambert, a Trier.

A Personal View.

Lyon-Rose, from its unique color, seemed to take the lead and was voted the maximum number of points. All the varieties scoring from five points up certainly possessed qualities that should make them permanent additions to our list of good roses. I was sorry that John Cook's rose, My Maryland, did not have a flower or bud showing; I look for this variety, and others, to make their mark at the second judging. In the event of a number of varieties receiving the maximum number of ten points, then the judges will vote as to their respective positions and the prizes will be awarded accordingly.

At the conclusion of the judging one of the most elegant dinners was served that it has been my pleasure to enjoy. We were further shown every nice attention possible to think of. The exhibit, as planned and carried out at the Garden Bagatelle, is certainly an innovation on all previous methods employed of arriving at the good qualities of new roses and the experiment is certainly worthy of careful study and thought. My own opinion is this: The roses submitted should be established the previous summer or season, so that they might show their possibilities under good root action; second, as the varieties of roses vary a few days in their time of flowering, it would seem important that the jury have several inspections, so as to see the varieties at their best when passing upon them.

I believe that to M. Jules Gravereaux belongs the credit for the inception of this novel method of exhibiting roses. M. Gravereaux is certainly one of the most enthusiastic as well as one of the most practical rosarians living, as a visit to his wonderful rose garden will attest.

OBITUARY.

Warren W. Rawson.

W. W. Rawson, the largest market gardener in New England and a prominent seed merchant at Boston for many years, died Sunday afternoon, August 9, at 3 o'clock, as the result of an operation performed August 4. He had only been ill since August 1 and the news of his death will come as a shock to his multitudes of friends.

Mr. Rawson was born in Arlington, Mass., January 23, 1847. He went from the grammar school there to Cotting Academy, from which he graduated in 1864. In 1867 he was graduated from a commercial college and subsequently studied music for five years and spent two years at a school of oratory and devoted a year to the study of parliamentary law.

The growing of plants and flowers caught his fancy while he was quite a youth. Having passed his twenty-first birthday, he began to work for his father. Soon after he married, and then went into business with his father. From 1867 to 1872 he sold the farm products at Faneuil Hall market, Boston.

In 1872, desiring to increase and extend his business, he bought out his father's interests, giving a large mortgage for same. This mortgage was soon paid off, for his business prospered exceedingly in every branch, so much so that after seven years at the old place he bought a new tract of land and erected his first greenhouses, three in number. From that time his business continually increased, so that at the time of his death he had five farms, twenty large greenhouses and kept thirty horses and fifty to seventy-five men constantly employed. A book written by the deceased is considered one of the best handbooks on market gardening.

His great specialties under glass were cucumbers and lettuce. He was one of the pioneer growers of these on a vast scale. On his seed farms were produced many of the Arlington seed specialties well known throughout the country. He was one of the first to use electric light for forwarding crops and by this means managed to get lettuce and other crops in ahead of his competitors.

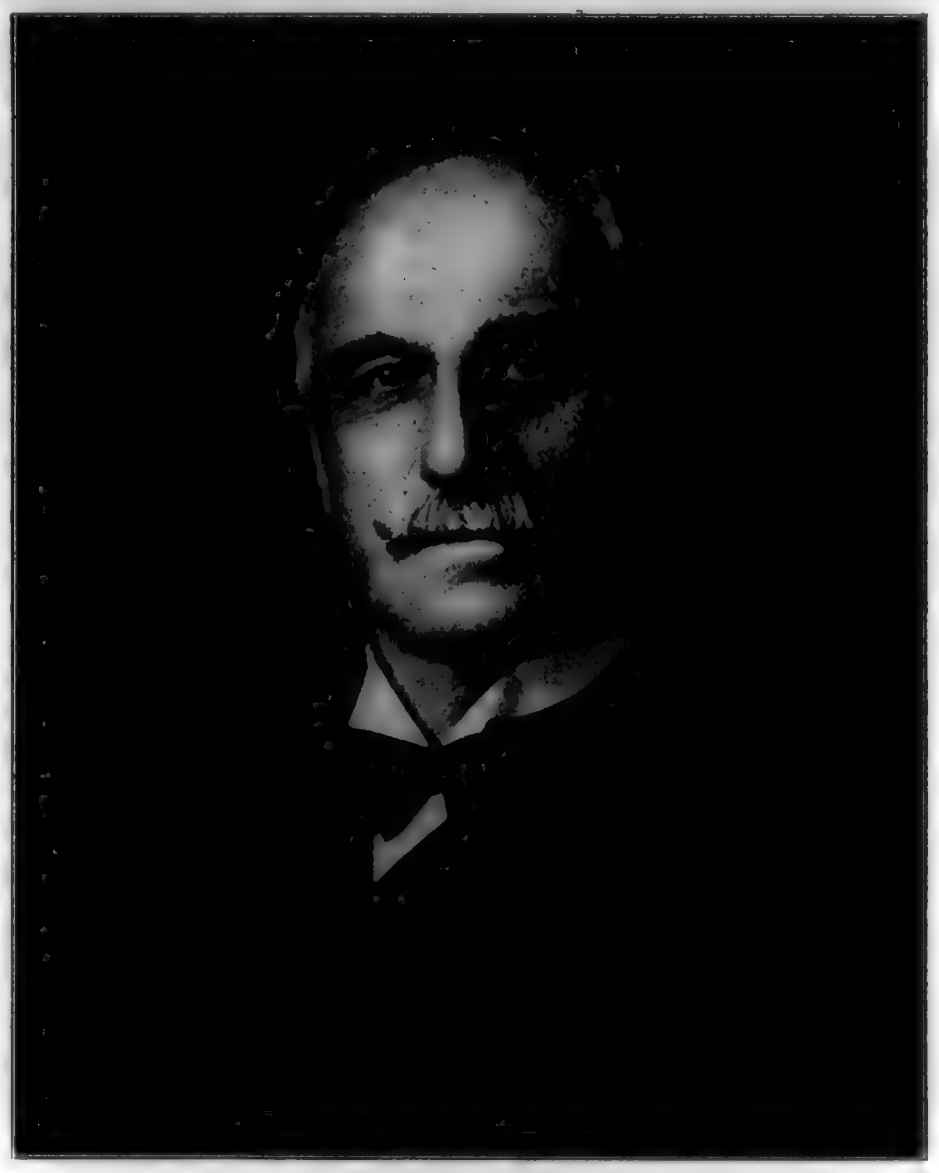
Besides owning the several seed farms, Mr. Rawson had many houses in Arlington and was its heaviest taxpayer. His seed stores were formerly at 12 Faneuil Hall square, but after a disastrous fire there in 1906 he removed to 5 Union street, where seeds, bulbs and sundries are sold in large quantities. Recently he secured a farm in Marblehead, where he had made specialties of dahlias, sweet peas, annuals, perennials and bulbous plants in variety.

Mr. Rawson was identified with about thirty different organizations. Among others he was mainly instrumental in forming the powerful Boston Market Gardeners' Association and was for years its president. He had for many years belonged to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, having been a trustee and being a candidate for president a few years ago. He served as chairman of the vegetable committee for several years and had often delivered lectures on vegetable culture. He was a member of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, before which he had lectured. The club held field days only last year at his Marblehead farm to see the displays of dahlias and sweet peas.



In banking circles the deceased was widely known. He belonged to the Masonic, Odd Fellows and many other fraternities. He also belonged to the Middlesex, Home Market and other prominent clubs. He was prominently mentioned for Secretary of Agriculture under President McKinley's administration. In politics he was republican, being for several years a member of the governor's council, and he was frequently mentioned as a good candidate for the highest offices in the state.

In his native town of Arlington, Mr. Rawson had served on the school board, board of selectmen and in about every other office of importance. He was popular with every class and there were few more familiar faces in Boston than that of W. W. Rawson. Mr. Rawson's son, Herbert W., will continue the business, for which he is well fitted by business training.

The funeral services were held Wednesday, August 12, at Mount Pleasant cemetery, Arlington. The officiating clergymen were: Rev. Dr. W. H. Ryder, of Gloucester, assisted by Rev. B. H. Spaulding, of Cambridge, and Rev. Frederick Gill, of Arlington. There was an immense concourse of mourners, testifying to the universal respect in which the deceased was held. The Knights Templar of Cambridge Commandery had charge of the funeral services. There were large delegations from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Gardeners' and Florists' Club, Boston Market Gardeners' Association and numerous other bodies. The floral tributes were among the finest and most numerous ever seen at a funeral in New England. The designs from the Boston seed trade and other bodies were magnificent. W. N. C.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

A rewritten report of last week's business and market conditions would be just about right for this issue, for everything is much the same, with the exception that outdoor stock which has not been artificially watered is gradually showing the effects of lack of rain. Several growers report asters drying up entirely, while others are compelled to stop housing carnations because the work cannot be properly done.

Various Notes.

Although there was nothing special on the program, the club meeting, August 6, was well attended. The main topic discussed was the basket picnic, by the Milwaukee Florists' Club, to be held Sunday, September 6, at Crystal Spring park. Everyone present took a good number of tickets and everything points to a grand success. Everybody is invited and no one should fail.

G. Hunkel, of Hunkel's Seed Store, Fourth and Chestnut streets, reports a greater demand for auto-spray pumps for July than in former years—due, no doubt, to the lack of rain.

A baby boy has brightened the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Manke, of North Milwaukee, since August 5. There is great rejoicing, as it is their first-born. Mother and child are doing well.

On August 7, William Edlefsen, senior partner of the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co., left for St. Louis, to attend the funeral of his mother, who died at the ripe age of 94 years. Up to a few years ago she made frequent visits to Milwaukee, and was known by many of the older members of the craft. She also was grandmother of Mrs. H. V. Hunkel, of this city.

Among the visitors were E. Amerpohl, of Janesville, Wis., and J. D. Thompson, of Joliet.

The list of incorporations in Madison, Wis., August 6, includes the following: Fox Point Floral Co., Milwaukee; capital stock, $10,000. Incorporators: August H. Kellner, Hans Schulze and Paul H. Schulze. Mr. Kellner is a local man, with a life experience as a florist, but of late years he has devoted his time to decorating and landscape work.

The C. C. Pollworth Co. is now cutting some very fine Golden Glow chrysanthemums. This variety is coming in exceptionally early and they have stems about three feet long and flowers of large size. This is exceptionally early for mums in this market, but it is hardly believed that mums coming in as early as this find much favor with the flower buyers. There is too much outdoor stock in the market and the best class of the flower buyers are all in the country, although for an early variety this Golden Glow beats them all. These were propagated so as to come in at various times and the cut on these will continue for the next four or six weeks.

C. Pollworth, state vice-president of the S. A. F. for Wisconsin, has sent a circular letter to the trade reminding them that "a vacation with pleasure and business combined can be had by attending the convention at Niagara Falls August 18 to 21. Special low rates to this scenic resort. Come and see what the other fellows are doing. See what new things are coming in the market," etc.

The Weekly Florists' Review

is printed Wednesday evening and mailed early Thursday morning. It is earnestly requested that all advertisers and correspondents mail their "copy" to reach us by Monday or Tuesday at latest, instead of Wednesday morning, as many have done in the past.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.
Incorporated by Act of Congress March 4, '01
Officers for 1908: President, F. Herendly, New York; vice-president, George W. McClure, Buffalo; secretary, Willis N. Rudd, Morgan Park, Ill.; treasurer, H. B. Beatty, Pittsburg.
Annual convention, Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.
First National Flower Show, Chicago, November 9 to 15, 1908; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, chairman.

Results bring advertising.
The Review brings results.

Why don't you get those printed letter-heads before you order your fall stock?

Joseph Heacock has named the rose-pink carnation exhibited at Washington as No. 100, calling it Dorothy Gordon.

J. Rowland Cloudsley, secretary of the Buffalo Florists' Club, says the Buffalo boys will furnish suits for a ball game at Niagara Falls; visitors intending to play need bring only the balance of the outfit.

TO CLEAN SMOKY GLASS.

Give us a good recipe or formula for taking dirt off smoky glass. C. U.

If the glass will not clean when wetted over with the hose and scrubbed with a brush, mix a little potash or lye in warm water and damp the glass with it. This will loosen the dirt so that it can be easily removed. As this also removes paint, do not damp the woodwork with the potash water any more than is absolutely necessary. C. W.

ILLINOIS MEETING.

There will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Illinois State Florists' Association at Niagara Falls during the S. A. F. convention. The day and hour will be announced later.
Albert T. Hey, President.

HOTELS AT NIAGARA FALLS.

It has been brought to our attention that some hotels are making a strife to land certain delegations. There has been so much said about people getting "done" at Niagara Falls that we take this opportunity to warn the convention attenders not to be led astray and the best advice we can give them is to make arrangements to stop at the Cataract or International hotels. The rates are from $3 to $5 a day, American plan, and we are sure anybody can afford to put up $3 a day for his room and three good meals such as they are serving; $5 per day means a room with a bath.

Never before has an opportunity been offered where the trade exhibit, meeting hall and accommodations for members were all under one roof, like this year, and we urge everybody to correspond with the International Hotel Co. to secure quarters. They will have room for all comers.
William F. Kasting.
George McClure,
Charles Keitsch.

LADIES' AUXILIARY.

The Ladies' Society of American Florists will meet Wednesday and Thursday mornings, August 19 and 20, at 10 a. m. at the Shredded Wheat Auditorium, Niagara Falls. A meeting of the board of directors and officers is called at 9:30 a. m. Wednesday, August 19, at the same place, and, members, do not forget your badge pin. Those who have not paid their dues will find the secretary in the trade exhibit.

By order of the president, Mrs. W. J. Vesey. Mrs. C. H. Maynard, Sec'y.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Judges of the Trade Exhibition.

President Traendly has appointed the following as judges of the trade's exhibit, at the coming convention at Niagara Falls: Chas. J. Graham, Cleveland; Joseph A. Manda, West Orange, N. J.; Fred H. Meinhardt, St. Louis.

Hotels at Niagara Falls.

It seems fair that it should be made known to the members of the S. A. F. that exhibition hall, meeting hall, business office, space for outside display, and music and refreshments for the president's reception have all been furnished to the society by Mr. Isaacs free of charge. These accommodations which he has furnished us, the writer believes, cost over $1,000 last year, and have cost very large sums in almost every place where the society has met before. The amount of profit of the society from the trade exhibition last year was only a little over $100, but through the generosity of Mr. Isaacs this year it will be at least $1,000 more than that.

Mr. Isaacs is the manager of the Prospect House, Cataract House and the International Hotel.

Mr. McClure and Mr. Cutler assure us of fair treatment and reasonable rates, and the writer feels it his duty to urge upon the members of the society to give these houses the preference, so far as they can do so without inconvenience to themselves.

All indications point to a large attendance, one of the largest trade exhibitions ever held, and a most successful convention in all respects.

August 7, 1908. W. N. Rudd, Sec'y.

CROPS UNDER 10-YEAR AVERAGE.

That crop conditions in the United States were in the aggregate better (two per cent) on August 1 last than they were a year ago, but slightly (one per cent) below a ten-year average condition on that date, is the opinion expressed by the crop reporting board of the Department of Agriculture in a supplementary report issued August 10. The report mentions the crops that are above the average, including winter wheat, hay, cotton and tobacco. Corn, barley, rye, buckwheat, apples and flax are slightly below the average, potatoes being about five per cent and oats nearly ten per cent below.

Fancy Asters

BEAUTIES

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

The Chicago market is sadly in need of rain, for the production of indoor flowers is at about the lowest of the year, there being practically no carnations, and the drought has cut down the supplies of outdoor stock, while at the same time causing the moderate quantities which are being received to be of poorer quality than is desirable.

Because the drought has been so general throughout the middle west, the same conditions prevail in other markets as in Chicago, and the shipping demand is greater than it usually is at this season. If Chicago had the stock, a nice business could be done. As it is, the day's receipts are so quickly picked up that it is frequently impossible to fill late orders, if more than moderate quantities are wanted or if there is a limit on prices.

Those who have been cutting Beauties have been reaping a harvest, for the supply is short of the demand and Beauties are realizing big prices. The out-of-town demand is so good that local buyers are not permitted to question prices; the only issue is whether or not they are to be given the stock. There are not many good Maids or Brides, but the cut of short stock from young plants is gradually increasing. The two roses which are most in demand are Killarney and Kaiserin. It is interesting to note that almost every buyer wants Killarney, and as a result it is commanding first-class prices, compared to the values of other roses. Killarney certainly has gained a leading place in this market as a summer rose.

Last week there was an abundance of asters, but this week the market is short and prices strong. How long this will maintain it is impossible to say, but the plants are suffering for water, and there is no immediate prospect of an increase in the supply. The dry weather has practically finished the sweet peas, only an occasional box being seen. Gladioli continue to be the most abundant flower and America is about the only one that sells satisfactorily, although there is some call for Augusta. The common sorts in mixed colors are poor property.

There are not so many auratum lilies, but it is now possible to supply Easter lilies in any quantity, if ordered a day in advance. There also are good supplies of album and rubrum, especially the latter. Valley is not overabundant.

The market for greens is not good. There is little call for strings of asparagus or smilax, and for almost the first time this season there now is an abundance of asparagus in bunches. Ferns are selling about as usual in summer. The wholesalers are interested in advices that a new crop of green galax is available; many of them have large quantities of last year's crop still in storage, and are wondering if it will have to go with the boxwood.

Will Disseminate Field.

Peter Reinberg has determined to disseminate the Mrs. Marshall Field rose in the trade in the spring of 1909. The variety has given him splendid results this season, and especially during the summer. He thinks it the most profitable rose on his place and a particularly good summer variety. He therefore anticipates a large sale for the stock.

A Golden Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Gottfried Amling will celebrate their golden wedding August 14. There will be a service at St. John's Lutheran church, at Forest Park, at 4 p. m., followed by a reception at the home, 36 Elgin street.

The event will be an occasion of a family gathering. There are nine surviving children, and thirty-four grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The family would make a little colony by itself, for nearly every profession and trade is represented, hardly any two of the sons or grandsons having pursued the same walk in life, except that there is a preponderance of florists—three sons are engaged in this line, Albert and William at Maywood, and E. C. Amling, in the wholesale department.

Reserve Your Berths.

F. F. Benthey, 35 Randolph street, is anxious to hear from those who want accommodations on the Florists' Club's special train to Niagara Falls, leaving at 6 p. m., August 17, via the Wabash.

Mr. Benthey understands that there will be a large attendance, but few have as yet spoken for berths and it is specially desirable that he know how many cars will be required for the trip, else it may be found that the train is crowded. Write him or call him on the phone.

George H. Blackman, of Evansville, Ind., has written for a berth on the Chicago train.

The Welcome Rain.

The two months' drought in Chicago and vicinity was broken on the evening of Tuesday, August 11, by the heaviest rainfall of the summer. In the first half hour more rain fell than in the previous two and a half months. Since May 28 there had been only traces of precipitation, the heaviest being July 17, with 1-34 of an inch. This time the total was about two inches.

Some damage was done, but great good will result, especially to the aster crop, and larger supplies and better quality, with lower prices, may now be looked for.

Various Notes.

Joseph Molck, of Jeffersonville, Ind., is in town, visiting the various sources of supply and stocking up for the big trade he expects this fall.

Kidwell & Ellsworth, at Belmont, are planting their houses with carnations grown in the field by Wietor Bros., nearly 10,000 plants having been bought of this firm.

H. N. Bruns is building another greenhouse, 25x105, for the growing of valley. The new house adjoins the east side of his store and is of Moninger construction. It will be ready for use about September 1. The south end of it will be fitted with a handsome plate glass show window, which will thus form an extension of the already large frontage which is used for the display of stock. At the rear end of the new house a boiler-shed is being erected, where a Kroeschell boiler will be installed, of sufficient capacity to heat the entire establishment. It is also reported that a part of the structure in the rear will be used for the housing of one or two automobiles, which will be purchased before long, but Mr. Bruns himself, being a modest sort of man, refuses to confirm this report until the machines are actually in his possession.

E. T. Wanzer, the carnation grower at Wheaton, is superintendent of the floricultural department of the country fair, to be held August 25 to 29. He has induced the management to add a special list of premiums to those offered for plants and cut flowers in the original premium list, and is working for a good display. Emil Buettner, of Park Ridge, is one of the judges.

Bassett & Washburn are preparing for the dissemination of their new red carnation, Orland P. Bassett, by planting 40,000 plants. They contemplate sending it out at a moderate price, and count on a very large demand.

Charles Balluff has returned from an outing with his wife, spent in Wisconsin.

task to find that quantity, but it required some hustling to get that many this week.

Kennicott Bros. Co., which for many years has kept close account of the cost of wire work, says that large users should buy generously at present—competition has brought the prices down to where the wire department is an advertisement and nothing else.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. says the use of corrugated pasteboard boxes for growers' shipments will become much more general. They find that a box will make several trips between Morton Grove and the store, and on each trip will save in express charges nearly the original cost of the box.

Phil Schupp, at Budlong's, says business is excellent compared with other Augusts; the only difficulty is to find the stock.

Vandas are now in crop, and C. W. McKellar says they are selling first rate at 25 cents per flower, where good work is to be done.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is receiving gladioli by the wagon-load and finds good sale for the special varieties, but not much demand for the common stuff.

Zech & Mann report that the present summer is considerably better than last with them. John Zech says they are specially fortunate in having quite a few roses at present, when the local trade will take anything that can be spared from the shipping orders.

W. E. Lynch, of E. H. Hunt's, leaves for Massachusetts Thursday, August 13, to join his family, who already are visiting at the old home there.

Vaughan & Sperry say they do quite a retail business with boxes, both corrugated and otherwise. A great many buyers who visit the market find it worth while to assemble all their purchases in one place and pack them in a box to save breakage.

Peter Reinberg and Leonard Kill, with their wives, motored to Salem, Wis., Saturday afternoon, returning Monday morning.

The George Wittbold Co. is preparing to tear down its two oldest greenhouses, on the Halsted street side of the place, and rebuild in one wide, high structure.

Miss Martha Gunterberg returned August 10 from her six weeks' outing in Minnesota.

J. B. Deamud is on his farm at Cairo, Mich., and expects to go from there to the convention.

Fred Lautenschlager, as state vice-president of the S. A. F., has sent out a neatly printed announcement of the Florists' Club's special train to Niagara Falls, August 17, urging a large attendance and soliciting new members.

Among the week's visitors were: Adam Heim, of the Heim Support Co., Connersville, Ind.; W. J. Pilcher, of Kirkwood, Mo., who is building a new range of houses; Miss H. B. Whittet, of Minneapolis.

CANFIELD, O.—August 6, lightning struck the greenhouses of the Altimo Culture Co., but no serious damage was done.

CHATHAM, N. Y.—The Chatham Floral Co. has been building an extensive addition to its greenhouses. Meanwhile a part of the force has been engaged in transplanting 20,000 carnation plants.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There is no change in conditions, as far as business is concerned. The general trade is in a kind of comatose state. There are quantities of fine flowers of all kinds in the wholesale houses. Only the best will tempt buyers, and a little of that goes a long way.

Various Notes.

For a long time, rumors of a new wholesale house have been going the rounds. Sometimes it was a growers' market that was predicted, but developments during the last week indicate that several old employees of the older house have gotten their heads together and propose opening for themselves. They have not, up to the present, officially announced their new business, but as the "hen has been on" for several months, it will more than likely hatch out by the time this is in print.

A special meeting of the Pittsburg Florists' Club was called Saturday afternoon in the office of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., to consider an invitation of the Chamber of Commerce to be represented in the sesquicentennial parade, which will occur in September. A committee was appointed, consisting of Samuel McClements, W. Breitenstein, A. W. Smith, Jr., H. L. Blind, J. W. Ludwig and T. P. Langhans, to confer with the Chamber of Commerce and arrange for a large float to represent the Pittsburg florists.

Carnegie, Pa., will have an old home week, and have a trades parade, in which C. H. Puhlman, of that town, expects to have a floral float. It will be an original design, and he invites all in this vicinity to come out and get ideas for Pittsburg's big demonstration.

Hoo-Hoo.

The Guardian Trust Co., trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Lincoln L. Neff, will offer the Neff greenhouse at Cheswick for sale at auction, Tuesday, August 18.

GRAND RAPIDS.

The damage done by the hot spell is serious. Carnation plants on heavy soil have suffered, particularly by red spider, but from now on they will grow fast. Business is dull, nothing doing except occasional funeral work. All are planting carnations, and hurrying the work along as fast as possible. Asters are in, but of poor quality as yet. Those grown inside are fine and are practically all the flowers there are now, as carnations are over. Of course, there are plenty of lilies to be had.

At the Soldiers' Home they are making cement benches, very similar to those at Wittbold's, all in one piece, but thicker and heavier than the Chicago bench. Charles Bowdich, the florist in charge, intends to put in at least two benches of the Wittbold pattern, to see which is the most desirable.

The Grand Rapids Floral Co. has just completed a 70-foot brick chimney, inside dimensions about three feet square.

There is some talk of going to the convention, but at present it looks like about six strong. G. F. C.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Reports regarding the flower market for the week of August 3 to 8 are not encouraging in either wholesale or retail circles. The flower receipts were large enough, but little of the stock could be classed as first grade, especially of roses and carnations. Quite a lot of extra good white and pink Cochet are coming in, which sell well, also good asters, fine valley and a few fairly good carnations. There are large quantities of tuberose stalks of the single variety.

The retail trade has suffered somewhat by the hot weather during the week and nothing much was worked up except for funerals.

Various Notes.

W. J. Pilcher, of Kirkwood, left Sunday night for a week's visit to Chicago, where he has many friends in the trade.

J. F. Ammann was one of the speakers at the Shaw banquet August 12. His topic was "The Florist" and he represented the St. Louis Florists' Club at the speakers' table.

The Plant Seed Co., now located at 802 North Main, has one of the most complete seed establishments in the city, doing a strictly wholesale business. Fred Plant, known to all seedsmen, is head of the firm. They had a most excellent season.

A. J. Bentzen, head of the Bentzen Floral Co., says that the two men who were recently hurt by a lime explosion have recovered and are at work again. They have a fine field of carnations, which they expect to house the latter part of the month. Their retail store on North Grand avenue is doing a nice summer business.

A call at the St. Louis Seed Co. found things running as usual and Walter Retzer in his usual happy frame of mind. He says everything will soon be on a sound basis.

Mrs. Max L. Pelletier, who runs a retail store at 1903 South Twelfth street, says she has been blessed with a great deal of funeral work of late, which helps out greatly during the summer months.

Mrs. Margaret Castens, mother of Mrs. C. Smith, Wm. Edlefsen, of Milwaukee, and Louis Edlefsen, of Los Angeles, Cal., and grandmother of W. C. Smith and Mrs. H. V. Hunkel, of Milwaukee, died Thursday, August 6, at 5 p. m., aged 94 years. The funeral took place Saturday from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. Smith, 1716 North Grand avenue. A great many in the trade were in attendance and extended their sympathy, and many beautiful floral designs were seen.

C. Young & Sons Co. will soon have to have a new set of young ladies in the cut flower department, as Cupid's dart has pierced three hearts. Among them are Miss Clara Holtzmann, who is to marry Otto Bruning, manager at H. G. Berning's; Miss Adle Dammann, whom Henry Bettengin will lead to the altar

Fred C. Weber, Jr., was at Yellowstone park last week. From there he will take a trip to Alaska. He will return early in September.

George Angermueller and Charles Schoenle are off on a fishing trip this week.

As convention time draws near, quite a few in the trade are talking of making the trip. More, as to who is going, will be made known at the club meeting this week. J. J. B.

LACONIA, N. H.—A fire early in the morning of July 27 caused a loss of about $150 to the greenhouses of James S. Powers, on Avery street.

QUINCY, ILL.—F. J. Kroner is erecting a large greenhouse. He had more business during the last year than ever before and was much troubled by lack of house room.

DAYTON, OHIO.

Business Conditions.

Local trade among the florists was quiet last week, and what little business was done was due to funeral work. Shipping trade was somewhat better, but nothing to brag about. But even if business is dull, our local florists find plenty to do, getting ready for the cooler season, when business is more brisk. There are plenty of roses to be had, and they are good. Carnations are a luxury. Asters are quite plentiful and take well, while longiflorums are in full splendor at the present time, and the demand for them could not be better, as the people always appreciate a change from roses, etc.

The weather is extremely hot and dry, and a good rain is badly needed.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Elizabeth Young reports an improvement in business within the last two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. William Ritter are enjoying a summer's outing in Michigan, at the lakes.

Walter G. Matthews has recently returned from Chicago, where he spent a few weeks' vacation. He says that, although the weather was warm, he had a fine time.

The Miami Floral Co. has just completed the planting of its carnation range of 50,000 carnations. The stock is in fine condition, and gives bright prospects for a good supply during the coming season.

George Bartholomew, John Boehner, Herman H. Ritter, Warren G. Matthews and Mrs. Bertha Hendrichs are some of our florists who intend to take in the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls.

Prosperity seems to have smiled upon some of our local florists in the last few weeks. Warren G. Matthews recently installed a fine new ice-box, put in by the Orr & Lockett Hardware Co., of Chicago. A swell new delivery wagon, the property of the Advance Floral Co., is making its daily appearance on the streets. John Boehner has just completed a fine new greenhouse and cold storage cellar. R. H. B.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

A severe hail storm visited Warwick, N. Y., August 6, and did much damage to crops. At Bonny Brae, the fine plant of James Bonnyman, a loss of $1,000 was caused by broken glass.

At Newburgh, N. Y., the craft are not experiencing a rushing time, funeral work being slow. Cut flowers are scarce, owing to the long continued drought. Asters and similar stock are poor. Carnations are being planted and look well, considering the unusual conditions. The Yuess Gardens Co. has received its shipment of Harrisii bulbs; no shortage reported.

A. M. Gilbert, of Middletown, N. Y., has overhauled his plant and is prepar-to have a floral float. It will be an original design, and he invites all in this vicinity to come out and get ideas for Pittsburg's big demonstration.

Hoo-Hoo.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Current Comment.

Two or three heavy showers during the week have helped everything outdoors wonderfully, and the knowledge that the backbone of the drought is broken is a great relief to the growers. Business for this time of the year keeps fairly good.

Some of the local florists who will go to Niagara are: Harry Rieman and Herman Piel, who will start August 15 and go with the Cincinnati delegation; William Billingsly, Irwin Bertermann, John Grande, A. Wiegand and others, who will start about August 18 and go by way of Cleveland.

Mr. Farney, of Chicago, was a visitor this week.

B. F. Hensley, of Knightstown, is cutting nice roses and carnations. Both he and his wife expect to attend the S. A. F. convention and will visit points farther east afterwards.

Some fine asters are being shipped in from Chicago, the local supply being short, on account of dry weather and disease.

The State Fair premium list is out. There is a considerable increase in the prizes for flowers, plants and designs, though, according to the rules, the entries will be very limited. S.

INDIANA STATE FAIR.

The Indiana State Board of Agriculture has authorized me to announce the following change in the rules governing the floral exhibits at the Indiana State Fair to be held September 7 to 11: Rule 5, which read, "Professional florists shall mean those who own or lease greenhouses," has been amended so as to read, "Professional florists shall mean those who are regularly engaged in the raising or handling of plants or flowers for financial gain." Entries close August 27. A. F. J. Baur, Secretary State Florists' Association of Indiana.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business did not open up Monday in a very satisfactory manner. The last week things were quite lively for summer and we were all in hopes that this would keep up. Still, a quiet Monday does not necessarily indicate that the whole week will be quiet.

Stock is plentiful now, in all the different varieties.

Club Meeting.

A well attended meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held at the club room the evening of August 5.

The room was filled to the brim. Convention matters were discussed for some time. It was learned that the Detroit delegation will comprise about forty. Secretary Sullivan was instructed to issue invitations to Toledo, Grand Rapids and, in fact, all the brother florists who pass this way, to join with us. State Vice-president Pochelon has completed all arrangements with the D. & B. line for accommodations. There will also be ample room for any party which may decide to join the Detroit crowd. The Detroit party leaves here Monday, August 17, at 5 p. m., on the D. & B. boat.

The annual election of officers was the drawing card of the evening. Things were pretty lively for a time, the final result of the election being: President, W. B. Brown; vice-president, M. Bloy; secretary, J. F. Sullivan, reëlected; treasurer, Walter Taepke, reëlected.

The members have given up keeping track of the number of years Mr. Sullivan has held the office of secretary, but as long as he is willing it will be Sullivan. His records of the minutes are always complete, and he is always on the job.

Walter Taepke will be in his third term as treasurer, and he has filled the office in a most thorough manner. The treasury has considerable funds at present and some thought it would be advisable to ask the treasurer to furnish bonds, but Mr. Taepke promised not to abscond.

B. Eschner was a visitor at the meeting and, when called upon for a speech, he complimented the members on the large attendance and the activity of the florists.

Before the meeting adjourned, the president instructed Albert Pochelon to order a large quantity of campaign buttons, bearing the inscription, "For Secretary of the S. A. F.—J. F. Sullivan." This goes to show the sentiment of the members of the Detroit Florists' Club, each one of whom is heart and soul for Mr. Sullivan, not because he is from their home town, but because he is a splendid man for the office.

After adjournment the whole party were guests of W. B. Brown at Alt Heidelburg café.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Meinhardt and several other lady florists from St. Louis were the guests of Mrs. Maynard, of Detroit, this week. After several days here they traveled on to Chicago, from whence they intend to retrace their steps and go to the convention city with the Chicago people.

William Hielscher has returned from the west, about fifteen pounds to the good. He visited Portland, Seattle, Spokane, St. Paul, Minneapolis and many smaller cities, and is much taken up with the west.

The writer is in receipt of a postal from Carlsbad, Germany, from Henry Fruck, and was pleased to note that Mr. Fruck's health is rapidly improving.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., passed through Detroit en route for Philadelphia, after being away eight weeks. He reports business as having been very satisfactory.

George Peters, of the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House, has been having a two weeks' resting spell, which has done him much good, after a season of close confinement to business. This firm is receiving some exceptionally fine asters from its Pontiac place. They are a new variety, long in stem, beautiful shell pink, and are readily disposed of at 4 cents, so you can judge for yourself.

The reopening of one of our large dry goods houses, which met with a big fire last spring, created quite a flurry among the trade. Most of the florists had some of the work, but the bulk was turned out by one firm.

M. Bloy, vice-president-elect of the Detroit Florists' Club, is a newcomer in these parts. Although still a young man, Mr. Bloy has seen considerable of the various phases of the florists' business. His first experience was with William Scott, of Buffalo, where he put in thirteen years. He then became assistant superintendent of Forest Lawn cemetery, of the same city, where he put in four years. This cemetery comprises about 260 acres of land, and from fifty to seventy-five men are employed. In 1902 he went to Cleveland, where he was with the Ohio Floral Co. and J. M. Gasser Co.; then to New Castle, Ind., where one year was put in with Weiland & Olinger. He now has the Rackham place, in this city, having purchased it some time ago. Mr. Bloy took an active interest in the club's welfare immediately upon his becoming a member and will, no doubt, make a splendid vice-president.

Any member of the club wishing one of the club pins can obtain it from Albert Pochelon. The first lot has been nearly disposed of.

C. A. Woodman, of Cleveland, was a recent visitor. H. S.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The cut flower market keeps on the even tenor of its way, as placid as a summer sea. Stagnation rules, and the tide has not set in, but the change for the better is close at hand, and soon the thrill of growing confidence and prosperity will usher in the strenuous season. Immense quantities of asters and gladioli literally flood the market. These, with the Hydrangea paniculata and the lilies, comprise ninety per cent of the arrivals. Roses lack stem and quality. Few good ones are found in the shipments, and the lower grades are hardly salable at any price. Before we return from the convention the outlook will be more cheering and the growers will take heart. Few carnations worthy of the name are received. The water lily supply is undiminished. The greatest inspiration now is the future and the general faith in the revival of business and an era of universal prosperity.

Various Notes.

Everybody is talking convention. Already over 100 acceptances of the New York Florists' Club's invitation have reached Secretary Young. If you are going, and have not sent in your name, phone or telegraph John Young without fail on Saturday and be at the D., L. & W. depot, Barclay street, before 10 a. m., Monday. Do not miss the special train. It will hold the largest crowd that has ever attended a florists' convention from New York. A few will leave Saturday, some by boat to Albany, but ninety-five per cent will join the crowd on the special train and participate in the festivities of the happy gathering. President Traendly was busy August 10 signing life membership certificates, thirty-three new members for the last week being the fruit of his efforts. He prophesies the biggest crowd of New Yorkers ever seen at a convention. He also advises all to locate at the International and Cataract hotels, the manager of which has given personal assurance of the best care and comfort for all members of the S. A. F. William Dilger, assistant commissioner of parks at Detroit, has been appointed sergeant-at-arms by the president, so that perfect order and harmony are assured.

James McManus, with Mrs. McManus and child, will visit the convention via the river to Albany. A great many New Yorkers announce their coming in double harness.

D. J. Mackintosh, the retail florist, has again distinguished himself. On Sunday, at Long Branch, he rescued four people from drowning. The city papers give him great credit for strength and bravery. He has been doing this every year for a long time, and is known as the life-saving florist.

James Hart, the veteran, has moved to 111 West Thirtieth street, close to his old store of thirty-five years ago.

Alex. J. Guttman celebrates his thirty-first birthday Saturday, August 15.

A combination of growers, retailers and supply men has been formed in Brooklyn. The experiment will be watched with widespread interest.

Alexander McConnell has been in poor health for some time, and at present is confined to his room with neuritis.

Some idea of the enormous fern shipments from New York and vicinity may be gathered from the fact that one house, McHutchison & Co., forwarded to their customers over 2,000 flats in the month of July. Their special packing department closed this month, and on Friday of this week Mr. Knickman left for Europe via Steamship Blucher. Orlando Harrison, of Berlin, Md., ex-president of the American Association of Nurserymen, was also a passenger.

The sympathy of the trade is extended James McManus in the loss of his mother. The funeral services took place Wednesday, August 5, and many beautiful floral tributes attested the regret of his friends in his bereavement.

Harry Bunyard returned August 7 from a successful western trip, and is preparing for a large exhibit of the firm's specialties at the convention.

Wertheimber & Co. have a novelty in papier-mache work that will appeal to florists and which they will put on the market this fall in all sizes, forms and designs for holding flowers, plants and for window decorative purposes.

Mr. Walter, of the Stumpp & Walter Co., is enjoying a holiday with his family on the Maine coast, where he has a summer home. Mr. Stumpp and wife will be at the convention, going by way of the Hudson river and returning via the St. Lawrence, Quebec, Montreal and Boston.

Ambrose Cleary, of Cleary's Horticultural Co., is now in Europe and arranging for large importations of nursery stock for the fall auctions, which will begin early in September. He will visit France, Germany, Holland, England and Ireland while away. John P. Cleary, of the Fruit Auction Co., who expected to take the ocean voyage over a month ago, is still in the city.

Anton Schultheis, of College Point, is busily engaged removing several of his

The Market.

Outdoor flowers, of which gladioli and asters are in heavy supply, are dominating features in the market at present. There are few carnations, these latter being of poor quality. A good supply of roses is still forthcoming, the small blooms being hard to dispose of. Lilium speciosum album is in good supply, and proves popular for funeral work. The colored forms are also meeting with a fair call. Lilium longiflorum is of good quality for the season and L. auratum comes from one or two growers. A few tuberoses are seen, but these are not in favor now. Sweet peas are of poor quality and evidently nearing the end. For asparagus and adiantum there is a fairly steady demand. Quiet conditions will probably prevail for some weeks, but the glut period is over and a slow but steady improvement is likely from now onwards.

The Exhibition.

Although there were only ten classes for cut flowers on August 8, at Horticultural hall, the main hall was well filled with many interesting exhibits. Owing to the early season, the perennial phloxes were hardly up to the average. For twelve named varieties first prize went to William Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener; George Hollis, second; T. C. Thurlow & Co., third; Bellevue Greenhouses, fourth. There was a fine display of annuals. For display of not less than thirty species, filling not less than 100 bottles, the winners were William Whitman, Mrs. J. L. Gardner and Mrs. E. M. Gill.

There were a number of miscellaneous displays, including fine collections of herbaceous plants, from Bellevue Greenhouses, F. J. Rea, Blue Hill Nurseries and R. & J. Farquhar & Co. The latter firm had a large collection of dahlias, receiving honorable mention for Charles Lanier and Queen Wilhelmina. They also had a splendid display of Lilium auratum.

B. Hammond Tracy received honorable mention for seedling gladioli and F. J. Rea a similar award for Delphinium hybridum Persimmon. Blue Hill Nurseries had a large collection of phloxes and William Whitman and Mrs. A. W. Blake, J. L. Smith gardener, general displays.

gust 7, to inspect Mr. Gaethley's melon patch, which quite excited the wonder of the visitors. Fruit of Montreal Market weighed twelve to fourteen pounds each.

Remember the field day of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, at Amherst, August 15. A good delegation seems probable. Train leaves at 8:23 a. m., arriving at Amherst at 11:34.

James Wheeler and not Duncan Finlayson should have been credited with the captaining of the winning tug of war team at the late club picnic.

Interest in the coming Niagara convention is increasing and, while quite a number of our prominent members who usually attend will not be present, a fair delegation seems probable.

Boston got a record rainfall August 7, nearly two inches of rain falling in forty minutes, one inch falling in ten minutes while the deluge was at its height.

Henry M. Robinson & Co. look for a considerable improvement in flower trade the coming fall and are preparing themselves for a larger volume of business. Their summer shipping trade is quite good. American Beauties are of excellent quality for August.

Robert Cameron leaves August 14 for a fortnight's trip to Nova Scotia. He visited a few days ago, in company with Professor Goodale, of Harvard College, the Scotch heather colony, six acres in extent, at Townsend, Mass.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

Business is quiet, so quiet that the wholesalers find the volume below the average for the first two weeks in August. Asters are plentiful, and many of them poor quality. A comparison with last year shows that good asters today are not bringing as much money as the medium and sometimes poor grade asters brought a year ago. These conditions may be reversed by a turn in the market any day.

Beauties continue the most popular roses. Eastern grown stock is still fine and fairly plentiful. Locally grown flowers are increasing in number and in size, but have not always the color when the sun is fierce. Kaiserins are also excellent, and plentiful. Gladioli have been reinforced by the appearance of America, which is in demand at a high figure. Tuberoses are abundant. The best shops rarely take them. Greens sell slowly.

The main party of members of the Florists' Club and their friends will leave Broad Street station, as announced last week, at 8:25 a. m. on Monday, August 17, for Niagara Falls. The route taken will be over the Pennsylvania railroad, the destination being reached at 9:05 p. m. The hotel committee recommends the Hotel Imperial, $3 a day, and Temperance Hotel, $2 a day. All florists desiring to join the party are cordially invited. Tickets at $14.80 can be purchased on the certificate plan, full fare, $9.25, being paid going; three-fifths fare, $5.55, being paid returning, the purchaser of a single ticket securing his agent's certificate, which is countersigned by the secretary of the society at Niagara Falls, when the three-fifths rate will be granted by the ticket agent there.

Improvements at Holmesburg.

The street has been aware for some time that Charles D. Ball was devoting his whole attention to rejuvenating certain of his houses at Holmesburg. It is a recognized fact that a grower who can go through the growing season successfully, and at the same time carry on building operations, displays ability. When, in addition to this, force of circumstances compels a change in his lieutenant, it requires more than ordinary ability to prevent the place from suffering.

The palms and ferns in the houses of Charles D. Ball are finer today than I have ever seen them. Clean, sturdy, vigorous plants, in perfect condition, ready to do him credit under almost any conditions to which plants are likely to be subjected. You will not be surprised, therefore, that I formed an even higher opinion of Charles D. Ball's ability than I have held in the past. His place shows that no detail, no matter how trifling, has been overlooked. In medium sized kentias he is especially strong. Large and small kentias are well represented. But the 6-inch size, perhaps the most favored in commerce, is stronger in proportion to the others than one usually sees. Latania Borbonica, the old standby, is exceptionally well done, mainly in medium sizes. Of the remaining plants, the impression created is that of the grower who selects the best and grows them to perfection. Charles D. Ball typifies what is best in Philadelphia floriculture. Cultural skill, sound judgment, and conservative business methods are here combined to the best advantage.

will have an exhibit of croton and pandurata of great excellence at Niagara.

Two convention souvenirs have been shown me; one a pansy seed tape measure cleverly devised by the Henry F. Michell Co.; the other a pretty watch fob from the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co.

The street asserts that a new flower shop will be opened on Broad street, near the Grand opera house. The name of the proprietor has not yet been made public.

John A. Meyers has rented the Steele place of four houses at Wissinoming. Mr. Meyers, who has had a practical training in the florists' business, will grow carnations and sweet peas.

Fred Gear and his father, and Mr. Steinley, of Cincinnati, are spending a short time in this city.

George McLean and Mrs. McLean, of Youngstown, are here this week.

Ernest J. Bush, formerly of North Carolina, is operating some 10,000 feet of glass near Hatboro, under the name of the Ellenwood Nurseries. Mr. Bush's specialties are carnations and sweet peas.

W. E. McKissick received 12,000 choice asters in one shipment this week. He is getting nice locally grown Beauties from William Munro, of Garrettsford, Pa.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., who has just returned from a successful western trip, reports that most of the florists he visited have had a pretty good season, and look forward to a good fall season, as business all over is on the mend.

D. Mish and Mrs. Mish, of Lebanon, Pa., were visitors in this city recently.

J. H. Hobbs, of Mann & Brown, Richmond, Va., was in Philadelphia a few days ago.

Joseph Pennypacker, of Phoenixville, Pa., visited this city recently.

Ernst Zieger and Mrs. Zieger, of Pittsburg, were recent visitors here.

Alfred M. Campbell is enjoying the sea breezes of Asbury Park.

Smith, Lineaweaver & Co. believe that at current prices buckwheat coal is cheaper than bituminous. They anticipate an advance in the price of buckwheat next month, but do not expect any change in soft coal before October.

J. G. Whilldin, manager of the pottery company that bears his name, states that their year showed an advance over the preceding year, but that they had to work harder to secure this result. Mr. Whilldin believes that business will slowly but steadily improve.

Berger Bros. are receiving choice Lilium Harrisii and Lilium longiflorum giganteum. They expect a steady crop until next winter.

August Muller, Sixty-sixth and Elmwood avenue, was the principal sufferer in a remarkable hail storm that occurred August 7. His loss in glass and in plants was considerable. George Anderson and William Diddin were also sufferers. The storm was the fiercest seen here in years. Fortunately it was confined to a small area.

A. P. Irwin, brother-in-law of William Graham, has decided to reopen the greenhouses at Logan operated until recently by the Hugh Graham Co. Mr. Irwin has engaged John Hobson, formerly second in command under Mr. Grochens, to take charge of the place.

Arthur H. Lanser has sold his place at Wayne, Pa., to Reginald Pratt, and purchased a new place of fifty-four acres near Devon, Pa. Mr. Pratt has been renting the Wayne place since January 1.

Michell Co., says that early orders for bulbs and orders for late seed, such as turnip, corn and spinach, are making them so busy as to resemble a small-sized spring rush.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have received large importations on the steamer Pisa recently. They have 260 cases on the steamer Marquette, due August 17. Among their latest novelties are pillow doves, the birds being beautifully stuffed, nestling on the pillow. Their electrically prepared fern leaves arranged in baskets and jardinieres are pleasing.

Vegetable Forcing.

THE leader in vegetable growing under glass, W. W. Rawson, of Arlington, Mass., is dead. A portrait and brief account of his career appear on another page of this issue.

GROWERS WILL CO-OPERATE.

A meeting of greenhouse men and other persons interested in the growing of vegetables under glass at Grand Rapids, Mich., will be held in the farmers' club rooms in the courthouse at 2 o'clock Saturday, August 15. It is the intention of the greenhouse men to form an organization for the purpose of keeping in touch with the markets of the country. At the meeting officers will be chosen and a permanent organization will be effected. Other matters in connection with the business will be discussed.

NEW TYPES OF LETTUCE.

Preferences of the Markets.

The growing of lettuce under glass is an important industry, especially in the eastern United States, says B. T. Galloway in an account of the work of the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture. The large winter plantings of lettuce in Florida and other southern sections have to some extent curtailed the output of the glass-grown crop; still, the quantity of lettuce grown in greenhouses for special markets is great. While a considerable number of types of lettuce specially adapted for culture under glass have been developed in the last fifteen or twenty years, none of them is entirely satisfactory. This may be said, of course, of almost any crop. In other words, there is opportunity for improvement in almost every crop that the farmer or gardener may grow.

The eastern markets demand a head lettuce, while those of the west require a lettuce of loose type, that is, a lettuce without a head, but a good, vigorous grower. The shape, color and size of the plants have much to do with their marketable qualities and their successful production. The eastern markets demand a medium-sized plant, that is, ranging from ten to twelve inches across, with a good, firm, light-colored head. The outer leaves of the lettuce should also be light in color, tender, and preferably curled or puffed. This gives a type of lettuce in which the head can be used for salad and the outer leaves for dressing. Still more important, it is essential that the plant shall be hardy, quick to mature, not liable to run to seed early, and able to resist certain troubles that affect the plant under glass, such as top-burn, a physiological disturbance, and stem-rot, a fungous disease.

For the more western sections of the country, as already indicated, the type of lettuce demanded is quite different from that in the east. A loose head, light in color and of considerable weight, is demanded by the markets. This type of lettuce is more easily grown than the head lettuce, not being so subject to disease, maturing more quickly, and being more uniform in growth. The Boston Market and Grand Rapids varieties represent the two types, the first being a head lettuce, the second a loose one.

Efforts at Improvement.

Various efforts have been made by those interested in lettuce to improve existing types through selection. This was found to be a slow process, however, and very little progress was made. Four years ago the plan of hybridizing lettuces was conceived, and although the difficulties in the way were recognized an outline of the work was placed in George W. Oliver's hands and numerous crosses were made. The ideal type of lettuce desired was formulated, and with a view of securing this it was planned to cross the Grand Rapids lettuce with a small-heading type known as the Golden Queen, believing that by so doing strains could be secured which would give what was wanted both for the east and for the west. The Golden Queen lettuce is small in size, with a firm head and bright golden color; it is hardy, but lacks adaptability to a wide range of conditions, and, moreover, lacks size and weight.

The resultant crosses gave, as usual, many variations. Rigid selection of these crosses, however, has resulted in the securing of two types of lettuce which are different from any of those now grown and which, so far as conditions here are concerned, fulfill the requirements as originally formulated.

New Heading Variety.

The first, which we shall call for the present No. 39-2, is a head lettuce, the result of a cross between Golden Queen and Grand Rapids. The original cross resulted in the production of several thousand seedlings, from which this parent was selected. Continuous selection under glass has resulted in practically fixing the type as desired. The plant is a rapid grower with a large-sized head; the outer leaves are a bright golden yellow, while the inner leaves and head are a bright yellow, shading off to whitish toward the center of the head. The head is firm and exceedingly tender and sweet. The plants under test here have been more resistant to top-burn and the damping-off disease than the parents.

Altogether, this new lettuce seems to be a promising type, and it is hoped within the next year or two to be able to distribute quantities of seed to those who are interested in the production of this crop. This variety is adapted especially for cultivation under glass through the eastern United States. It has not been tested thoroughly out of doors, and no claims can therefore be made for its growth under these conditions.

Eclipses Grand Rapids.

The second type of lettuce which has been secured, and which is especially adapted to regions where the Grand Rapids variety is now grown, is known as No. 44B. This plant was raised in 1904 from seed secured by crossing the Golden Queen with the Grand Rapids during the summer of 1903. The variety is almost intermediate between the parents. At first glance it seems to favor the Grand Rapids more than the Golden Queen. The leaves, however, are more crinkled and less fringed than in the Grand Rapids. When fully grown the heart leaves come close together, as if making an effort to form a head. It may be said to be more compact than the Grand Rapids, of a decided yellowish-green color, forms more rapidly, and is not quite so tall, but weighs more and comes to maturity quicker than its pollen-bearing parent. The flavor is said by some to be an improvement over that of the Grand Rapids. So far no disease has been seen, but it has not been grown in large quantities nor under varied conditions up to the present time. It sets seeds very finely even during the winter from autumn-raised plants. The original plant was one occurring in a house containing 2,500 second-generation hybrid plants in which more than thirty distinct forms occurred. No. 44B is the only one among the selections made at that time which came true in subsequent generations. The seed we now have is from fourth-generation plants. As a garnishing lettuce and as an edible form, No. 44B, we believe, is superior to Grand Rapids.

TIMOTHY seed was easier at Chicago August 10. September sold at $3.75 and October was offered at $3.75; country lots, $3.25@4. Clover seed declined 50c, October closing at $13.75 and cash lots $8@17.

THE government crop report made public August 7 was better than general news had led to expect, especially as to corn, the condition of the general crop being also much better than reports as to western crops of seed corn would seem to indicate. The government gives the condition of corn August 1 as 82.5, as against 82.8 a year ago, and 83.1 as the ten-year average, and 82.8 July 1. Wheat does not make so good a showing in the government report, its condition having declined from 89.4 July 1 to 80.7 August 1; ten-year average, 82.7.

Announcement

To our Friends and Patrons, and to the Trade in General:

We, the undersigned, do hereby beg to announce that we have consolidated our interests, and that, commencing on the 15th day of August, we will open our place at 144 N. Seventh St., Philadelphia, Pa., for the purpose of conducting a wholesale seed, plant and bulb business. It would be needless to supplement this brief announcement with numerous promises of what we intend doing, in order to insure our own success—a consummation devoutly to be wished under all circumstances. Suffice it to say that we are no novices in the business, and that our twenty years of hard experience on the road has convinced us beyond the shadow of a doubt that one "cannot fool the people all the time," nor indeed "part of the time," and come out on top—that, in order to win the confidence of the people (the shortest route to success), one must be sure to give a square deal in return. It is, therefore, our aim to give a SQUARE DEAL in return for confidence. Thanking you all for past favors, and sincerely hoping for a continuance of same in the future. Respectfully yours, had years of experience in that trade, they are qualified to make a first-class success.

D. J. Tamminga, who is a grower of onion sets in the territory south of Chicago, says that from the progress already made in the harvesting of sets, he is of the opinion that the yield of yellows will be fair, but not the bumper crop some are counting on. Red and white will be scarce.

The firm of W. A. Miller & Son has been incorporated at Lynchburg, Va., for the purpose of dealing in field and garden seeds. The maximum capital stock is $30,000; the minimum, $10,000. The officers are: President, W. P. Miller; vice-president, W. J. Pettit; secretary and treasurer, H. R. Miller, all of Lynchburg.

W. Maxwell Green, United States consul at Bermuda, takes an optimistic view of the Harrisii situation. He says: "The director of the botanical station, with the help of many growers, has practically eliminated hybrid stock, and also the disease with which the Easter lily bulb has been affected. The Bermuda bulbs that go forward this season may be depended upon as being of a high grade."

IMPORTS.

The imports of seed through the port of New York for the week ending August 1 were as follows:

| Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. | Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Annatto | 2 | $ 20 | Grass | 427 | $ 7,682 |
| Anise | 1 | 10 | Hemp | 150 | 689 |

| Cummin | 10 | 135 | Other | | 3,915 |
| Fenugreek | 400 | 1,100 | | | |

In the same period the imports of bulbs, trees and plants were valued at $8,192.

THE MIXSON SEED CO.

The seed business which has for some time been conducted as a department of the Southern Fruit Co., at Charleston, S. C., has been made a separate business, operating under the name of W. H. Mixson Seed Co. Started eight years ago, the growth of the business necessitated this change. There will be no change in management, W. H. Mixson, president and treasurer of the Southern Fruit Co., being the proprietor of the new business. L. Harry Mixson is also connected with the business, and represented the house at the convention of the American Seed Trade Association in Detroit. Mr. Mixson visited the Michigan pea and bean growers at that time and before returning home he also saw the cabbage and other seed then growing on Long Island. Frank D. Stansell, who has been with the seed business of this house since its beginning, will continue his relations with the W. H. Mixson Seed Co.

The trial ground which was established last spring will be operated on a larger plan this fall, as its value was shown.

The selling agency of the Charleston Basket & Veneer Manufacturing Co. will also be held by this concern. Most of the empty packages used by the farmers in this and other sections are supplied by this factory.

tion in his seed-growing territory. He writes as follows:

"Regarding the present condition of crops in this vicinity, I would say that we consider both the seed corn and vine seed crops in a critical condition. At the time of the seedsmen's convention at Detroit we were of the opinion that the rainy season was at an end, as we had had a series of storms and floods throughout June and it seemed as though they must, or should, end sometime. But on June 28 and July 5 we had the worst storms of the season, putting the Elkhorn and Platte rivers out of their banks and inundating much of the low lands.

"Since the heavy storm of July 5 we have had no rain and the ground has become very hard. Corn planted on shallow soil is already firing and unless we have good rains very soon all corn will be cut short.

"A large percentage of the late varieties of sweet corn, which are grown on bottom land, were drowned out and considerable of the earlier varieties, which were being grown on rolling land, were washed out. Worms are working in the ears of the early sweet corn very badly and from present appearances will be quite a factor in reducing the yield.

"The vine seed crop, especially cucumbers and melons, was weakened by the continuous wet, cold weather of June and early July and the green aphis has done considerable damage, although they are not spreading as in 1902. Squashes are doing much better than other vine crops, although the storms damaged the crop to quite an extent.

"The onion set crop is now being harvested and many fields are a great disappointment, although a few pieces are yielding very heavily.

"Taking the season as a whole, it has been the most unfavorable we have ever experienced in seed growing."

REAPPRAISEMENTS.

The following reappraisements of stock have been announced by the customs authorities:

LILY BULBS.

R. M. Ward & Co., New York, have the following to say about lily bulb crops and the demand for bulbs:

"The crop in Bermuda this year is reported short in large sizes, and especially in sizes 9x11 and 11x13. The bulbs planted for 7x9's have matured short of the size, making mostly size 6x7's, owing to the extremely dry weather which has prevailed throughout the spring. The quality of the selected stock, however,

COLD STORAGE

LILIUM SPECIOSUMS and AURATUMS

Potted in August, will flower for the Holidays. This is not a seedsman's theory but practiced by leading plant growers in the United States and Canada, also Europe.

Our stock of cold storage Lilies are not surplus or left over bulbs, but bulbs put into cold storage on arrival, packed especially for this purpose. We offer them till sold, as follows:—

promises to be very good, whereas the hybrids are doubtful.

"The Japan crop, according to last advice, is normal, with the exception of the so-called Formosas from the island of Oshima, which are reported short in large sizes. Formosas have suffered owing principally to dry weather. The giganteum crop promises to be good in some sections. There are large quantities sold and a shortage would not come unexpected. Longiflorum and multiflorum are expected to show a decided improvement over last season, and the demand is steadily increasing. Rubrum, Melpomene, roseum and magnificum are all very good lilies for florists' use and they have practically no disease."

"Speciosum magnificum is one of the finest of lilies, good for cold storage, and the demand is increasing."

FIRE AT RICHMOND, VA.

Starting shortly after midnight, August 6, fire destroyed the extra warehouse of T. W. Wood & Sons, at 13 South Fourteenth street, Richmond, Va., and for a time threatened the safety of the city.

Starting in the second story of the Wood place, the blaze crept gradually up, steadily gaining headway, until the entire second and third floors were a mass of seething flames and smoke. The flames spread to the third floor of the building just to the south of the warehouse, occupied by Christian Winifree & Co., wholesale dealers in fancy groceries, but they were entirely confined to the third story, and were extinguished before any great amount of damage had been done there. In the building to the north of the warehouse, which is occupied by Stokes & Grimes, wholesale dealers in heavy groceries, the damage done by the fire was slight, but the loss caused by the water will amount to a considerable sum.

Altogether the damage, according to rough estimate, will be between $40,000 and $50,000.

H. W. Wood, a member of the firm of T. W. Wood & Sons, stated that stored in the building was between $8,000 and

THE GRAND NEW FREESIA, PURITY

A grand acquisition to the Freesia, and for the florist as a cut-flower or pot-plant, and no one should be without a few bulbs of this delightful novelty. F owers, which are snowy white, of large size, are borne in great profusion on long stems which grow upright and stiff: are excellent for cut-flower purposes. First size, $2 50 per 100; $22.00 per 1000. Second size, $2.25 per 100, $20 per 1000.

$10,000 worth of field seed, which was probably fully covered by insurance. The building, which is practically a wreck, is gutted from the second story up, and the damage to this alone will amount to many thousands.

Mr. Wood left the next day for a trip abroad. "If the fire had been on the other side of the street," he said, referring to his place diagonally opposite the burned warehouse, "I possibly would at least have had to postpone my voyage."

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

Business keeps as dull as last month, and the weather, also, shows no change. It is raining every day. Chrysanthemums are none the worse from it, outside ones having more vigor and better foliage than those under glass. The three consecutive months at 100 degrees or more of heat were rather more than the latter could stand, and it takes any amount of ventilation and dampness to keep them healthy. Chrysanthemums grown here in a sash house, that can be opened or closed at will, give, no doubt, the best satisfaction in our climate. The tuberose, an important flower for summer cutting, is poor this year.

Various Notes.

M. Cook's Sons have been building a new house, 15x78, for general flowering stock. They have also let a contract for another one, 21x110, and sixteen feet high. This will be a palm house. Among their other houses, they have one planted in bouvardia, in solid beds. Their azaleas from last year, plunged under lath protection, are in perfect condition. The larger part of their chrysanthemums are grown under glass. One of the kinds they grow outside is Silver Thimble. Mr. Cook claims to be the introducer of this flower, having received it in 1883, with different varieties, from England. It has certainly proved to be a good acquisition and should be planted more extensively. It makes a fine, light bunch of flowers, not being so clumpy and stiff as many other sorts. The large patch he has planted looks fine—better than any other that I have seen this year. He has, also, a new seedling of his own—Maybel, which is promising.

Mr. Cook, wife and daughter, are going to the Niagara Falls convention, and will tour, at the same time, Canada and some northern cities for over a month.

P. Worner, of Worner Bros., has for the present in his charge the establishment of Mrs. Rehm, on St. Charles and Napoleon avenues.

The Avenue Floral Co., with R. C. Eichling as manager, looks fine, with a new coat of paint and its miniature park in front.

Many beds at the City park are planted out with such a great variety of crotons as can only be grown in a southern locality, such as New Orleans. They attract much attention and do credit to their grower, Frank Brocker, the gardener.

Joseph Steckler had his family increased by a boy. This completes, if we count right, the first half dozen.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

L. A. Guilluame, the carnation grower, is becoming quite a farmer as well as florist. He has a four-acre patch of melons in fine shape, which promise some delicious eating. Traveling representatives coming this way, please note.

G. Bartholme believes in early planting. This week he is housing his carnations. The plants look fine, and so does all his other stock.

W. E. Day, store manager for R. R. Quinlan, is spending his vacation at Redwood, on the St. Lawrence river, with his family.

Bannister Bros. are at work on the walls of a new fern house, 10x100. Their stock of ferns is looking fine.

Vice-Commodore Mann, of the H. D. Mann Co., is attending the races of the Interlake Yacht Racing Association, on Cayuga Lake, and reports fine sport and interesting races.

B.

NEW CANAAN, CONN.

It is unusually dry weather around this vicinity, damaging many plants and small trees.

W. E. Marshall, seedsman of New York city, called on J. T. Burns, gardener for Miss C. A. Bliss, the other day.

The Misses Childs have had a new Burnham boiler installed for their conservatory.

Edmund P. Lawrence, florist for Miss C. A. Bliss, is getting along nicely at his new position.

Roses, numbering about 500 plants, are doing nicely at the Lindenfield greenhouses, Richmond and Killarney being mostly grown.

Frederick Fuhrmann, gardener to Dr. J. W. McLain, was badly bruised while trying to assist one of his helpers from an ugly bull that belongs on the estate.

ERIE, PA.

State of Trade.

Trade is fair, but flowers are scarce. Asters and sweet peas are the best flowers grown here at present. Carnations are pretty good, considering the season of the year. Tea roses are shipped in from Oil City and Beauties from Buffalo.

Various Notes.

G. H. Baur has returned from the University of Pennsylvania, where he has taken up the study of law. He will spend his vacation in Erie.

J. V. Laver had some good hardy phlox in his gardens this year.

Wm. F. Kasting and family, of Buffalo, N. Y., are spending the summer in Erie. Mr. Kasting is proprietor of the Erie Floral Co.

E. C. Hill bought out the Corry Greenhouses, at Corry, Pa. His son, Ora Hill, has gone there to take charge of the place. G. W. P.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.—B. B. Blair says that plant trade here was a record-breaker during the last season. His peonies were never before so good as this year. Sweet peas are looking fine and all summer flowers are growing fast, though later than usual. Everybody in the resort region, he says, is doing a good business this year.

LAWRENCE, MASS.—Early in May, Thornton Bros. offered a $25 gold watch for the best 200 sweet peas grown from seeds purchased at their store, the flowers to be brought to the store Saturday, August 1. On that date, accordingly, the prize was awarded, and the public was invited to call during the day and inspect the specimens offered in competition.

PACIFIC COAST.

VANCOUVER, WASH.—Eugene Zimmer has leased his establishment to John Reuter, who will continue the business.

COAST DAHLIA GROWERS.

The cactus dahlia was recently selected as the official flower of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition and soon afterwards followed the organization of the Seattle Dahlia Club, with Chas. S. Gleason, 232 Burke building, Seattle, as president, and B. D. Chesnut, Foster, King county, as secretary, who would be pleased to correspond with dahlia growers, admirers and enthusiasts in the Pacific northwest with the end in view of organizing local clubs in each community and later a Pacific Coast Dahlia Association.

B. D. CHESNUT.

SALEM, ORE.

Last December Frank W. Power disposed of his remaining interest in the Oregon Nursery Co., the Capital City Nursery Co., the Albany Nurseries and the Portland Wholesale Nursery Co., to M. McDonald. Previous to this time, in May, 1907, Mr. Power had sold a part of his interests, the Chico Nursery Co., to Bouillard & Wightman and the deal of last December left him without any financial interest in the above properties.

At the request of Mr. McDonald, who was obliged to be absent in California on account of the sickness of his wife, Mr. Power consented to remain as general manager of the Oregon Nursery Co. until after the spring packing this year.

Mr. Power commenced work for McGill & McDonald, proprietors of the Oregon Wholesale Nursery Co., nine years ago, after it had been under the control of the above firm about five or six years and the business by hard work had been built up to about $33,000 to $35,000 per year. The first year that Mr. Power was with the company the sales were about $75,000 and have made rapid advances ever since, until now they are probably the largest of any nursery west of the Rocky mountains. In 1900 the company was reorganized as the Oregon Nursery Co., Ltd., and about five years ago Mr. Power became a stockholder and vice-president of the company, holding this position in the corporation until his retirement.

About four years ago Mr. Power purchased a large interest in the Chico Nursery Co., and shortly afterward moved to Chico, Cal., to manage the business. He was successful in building up a large business in California. The sales last year amounted to over half those of the old company in this city. However, owing to the climate being unfavorable to the health of himself and family, Mr. Power sold out his interests at Chico in May, 1907, to Bouillard & Wightman, and returned to Salem, where he again took up active work with the Oregon Nursery Co. He may now organize a new company.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The opening of the city schools during the present week has brought quite a number of town people back, and business shows a slight increase over that of the last few weeks. There is a noticeable scarcity of roses of all varieties, with the possible exception of whites, and good prices are the rule for this class of stock at present.

Carnations are in heavy supply. But few of the growers have commenced to change their houses, and until they do, owing to the favorable weather, there will be a quantity of stock offered. There is but little thrips to be seen this season. The cold weather has kept it backward and never has the quality of stock been better in San Francisco than that seen here now.

Of outside stock, sweet peas are still the best sellers and many growers are bringing in stock from new patches sown early in the spring. Lilium rubrum and L. album are coming into market rapidly. They are principally grown under lath houses. They cost the stores from $1 to $1.50 per dozen stems. Amaryllises are now at their height. They sell wholesale at from $2.50 to $4 per hundred. Sweet sultan, coreopsis, gaillardias and other flowers of this kind are very plentiful and can be had at any price.

Various Notes.

Word comes from San Diego, Cal., of the death of Walter Cooke, the landscape architect, August 6, at the Willows, a summer resort in the mountains near Alpine. Mr. Cooke, as chief engineer of the San Diego City and County Boulevard Commission, was driving through the country viewing roads, with the idea of their adornment with shade trees at the proper season, when an accident to the harness resulted in dropping the wagon pole and frightening the horses. Mr. Cooke was thrown out of the wagon and fell down the side of the road, a distance of about fifty feet, breaking five ribs and dislocating a shoulder. He lay where he fell for several hours before being discovered. One of the broken ribs had punctured the lung tissue, and that, with the exposure, resulted in his death. He was a partner of Samuel B. Parsons, of New York, the authority on landscape culture, and with him came to plan park and boulevard improvements in San Diego. Mr. Cooke was 55 years of age and unmarried.

The Floral establishment of Clarke Bros., on Clay street, Oakland, was burglarized during the night of August 1, and a considerable sum of money was taken from the cash drawer.

L. A. Barrett, of the Fairview Nursery Co., Berkeley, Cal., is at present on a trip to South America. G.

FAIRMOUNT, IND.—The greenhouse operated by Miss Addie Dare, in the south part of town, has been moved to the west side of Mill street. It has been doubled in size and a steam heating plant will be installed.

PORTLAND, ME.—The firm of J. W. Minott & Son has now been incorporated, under the name of the J. W. Minott Co., with a capital stock of $50,000. The officers are: President, Eliza D. Minott; treasurer, Frank L. Minott, both of South Portland.

EVANSVILLE, IND.

The Market.

There is little doing in the cut flower line. A number of funerals lately have caused considerable work for the retailers, and that is about all. Asters are almost a failure here this year.

Various Notes.

K. Zeidler bought Ben Kramer's old houses, tore them down and put up two houses out at his place. One has been planted to roses and the other to carnations.

Nellie Goodge has a tent near her greenhouses, under which they do their repotting, etc. It is raised high enough to give a good circulation of air, and is quite a comfort to her help.

Joe Elspermann was married in the morning of August 5. He has the best wishes of all.

H. Seymour has the best asters seen about here. His newly planted carnations are looking well.

Royston & Fenton have been cutting lots of short roses, as the first crop on carried-over stock. L.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

This summer's business continues to average up well and we have every reason to be satisfied with the total sales. Now and then comes a day when there is nothing doing, and then, again, there is an oversupply in some line of flowers, but the average is good. At present asters are scarce, and many more, especially of the better quality, could be used to advantage. Roses are about equal to the demand. Carnations are scarce. Gladioli are in heavy supply and only those of the best quality sell at a paying figure. A few lilies are coming in and they sell at sight. In green goods we are well supplied.

The severe hot spell, which lasted for such a long time, has at last been broken and we are having delightful weather. The hot spell was broken by a heavy rain, but, as luck would have it, it was only local. The country around here is suffering greatly for water and the reports from up the state show considerable loss from this cause. The local aster crop has been damaged a great deal. There is also a report of considerable damage being done by a little bug which bores into the bud, causing the flowers to be deformed.

Various Notes.

The scheduled meeting of the Florists' Club was held at R. Witterstaetter's last Saturday. It was called to order at 3 o'clock, with seventeen members present. The resignation of the present secretary, C. J. Ohmer, being accepted, the first business was the nomination of a new secretary. George Murphy and Albert Sunderbruch being nominated, a ballot was taken and Mr. Sunderbruch was declared elected. The names of five persons were offered as candidates for membership. The coming convention at Niagara Falls was talked over and the final arrangements were made for our delegation. Everything is in readiness now to extend our invitation for the national society to meet here in 1909, and we feel assured, from the many favorable and encouraging letters we have received from the leaders among the florists of the country, that our invitation will be accepted. Nevertheless, we will not relax our efforts until the final vote is taken.

J. A. Peterson, of Westwood, president of the Cincinnati Florists' Society, called on Mayor Markbreit July 31, with the request that the mayor invite the S. A. F. to hold its convention next year in Cincinnati. As already mentioned in the Cincinnati correspondence, the national society was organized in this city twenty-five years ago, but has never held a convention here. The mayor will send the invitation.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

ORLANDO HARRISON, Berlin, Md., sailed for Europe August 13.

BENJAMIN E. GAGE, of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, is spending a week in Milwaukee and vicinity.

THE county fair at Wheaton, Ill., August 25 to 29, offers premiums for the best exhibits of nursery stock.

AN interesting bit of history of Pacific coast nurseries will be found under the head of Salem, Ore., on the Pacific Coast page of this issue.

THE 1907 Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture, just issued, contains much data of value to nurserymen, including two excellent articles: "The Codling Moth or Apple Worm," by A. L. Quaintance, and "Diseases of Ornamental Trees," by Haven Metcalf.

THE Southern Nurserymen's Association will hold its annual meeting at Atlanta August 19 and 20. Charles T. Smith, of Concord, Ga., is president. A long program of 5-minute talks has been prepared as usual. If only those assigned subjects are present it will mean a good attendance.

APPLE GROWERS' CONGRESS.

The annual Apple Growers' congress was held at St. Louis this week, August 11 and 12, with a large attendance, including many nurserymen. The program was as follows:

"Spraying Mixtures," J. C. Blair, Urbana, Ill.; W. M. Scott, Washington, D. C.
"Shall We Spray in Off Years?" U. T. Cox, Rockwood, O.; J. W. Stanton, Richview, Ill.
"Shipping Apples to Market in Bulk," L. A. Goodman, Kansas City; H. A. Aldrich, Neoga, Ill.; Louis Erb, Cedar Gap, Mo.
"Exporting Apples," William M. French, New York; W. S. Perrine, Centralia, Ill.; C. H. Williamson, Quincy, Ill.
"From Grower to Consumer," Henry W. Collingwood, New York; George T. Tippin, Nichols, Mo.
"Packages and Packing," Wm. L. Wagner, Chicago; S. G. Palmer, Minneapolis; Alec McNeil, Ottawa, Canada.
"Effects on the Crop of Cross Pollination," Prof. A. D. Selby, Wooster, O.; Paul Evans, Mountain Grove, Mo.; J. C. Whitten, Columbia, Mo.
"Off Grade Apples as Affected by Pure Food Laws," M. H. Lamb, Kansas City; H. L. Prussing, Flora, Ill.; J. P. Logan, Springdale, Ark.
"Legislation Affecting Orchards and the Distribution of Nursery Stock," Prof. S. A. Forbes, Urbana, Ill.; Prof. Jas. Troop, Lafayette, Ind.
"Benefits of Co-operation and Organization," E. H. Shepherd, Hood River, Ore.; N. H. Hoover, Pierce City, Mo.; C. E. Bassett, Fennville, Mich.
"Pruning for Fruit," Capt. George T. Lincoln, Bentonville, Ark.; M. L. Dean, Pontiac, Mich.

The congress concluded on the evening of August 12 with the annual banquet to horticulturists provided for in the will of the late Henry Shaw, founder of the Missouri Botanical Garden.

PARK MEN MEET.

The annual convention of the American Association of Park Superintendents is on this week, having begun at 9:30 Tuesday morning, with a meeting of the executive committee. The program was as follows:

10:00 a. m.—Annual Meeting, President J. F. Cowell presiding.
Address of Welcome, His Honor the Mayor, James C. Haynes; Hon. Jesse E. Northrup, President Board of Park Commissioners.
Response by Prof. J. F. Cowell, President American Association of Park Superintendents.
Reading of minutes, balloting for members, reports of officers and committees, unfinished business.
New business: Proposed changes of Constitution; place of next meeting; appointment of nominating committee for officers.
12:15 p. m.—Ride to Minikahda Club, Lake Calhoun.
12:45 p. m.—Luncheon at Club House as guests of the Minneapolis Commercial Club.
2:00 p. m.—Reading of essays and discussions at the Club House:
1. "Concessions," J. F. Foster, superintendent of south parks, Chicago, Ill.
2. "Oiling and Dust Laying," M. H. West, superintendent of Lincoln Park, Chicago, Ill.
3. "Park Commissions and Administration," J. A. Pettigrew, superintendent of parks, Boston, Mass.
4. "Concrete Construction in Relation to Park Work," Jens Jensen, superintendent of west parks, Chicago, Ill.
5:00 p. m.—Adjournment and return to headquarters.
7:30 p. m.—Leave headquarters by trolley car for Lake Harriet.
8:15 p. m.—Concert, Lake Harriet pavilion. Sail on lake.
Second day, Wednesday, August 12, a thirty-five mile automobile trip around the park system. Guests of the Minneapolis Automobile Club.
8:00 p. m.—Business meeting at headquarters, and election of officers.
Thursday, August 13, a trip to Minnesota's finest lake, beautiful Lake Minnetonka.

Current Comment.

J. Nelson, successor to Nelson & Klopfer, will install a new fifty horse-power boiler. His chrysanthemums, of which he has nearly 10,000 plants, are among the finest in the city.

Mr. Miller has a convenient and at the same time unique cold storage room. It is in the shape of a cave dug into a hillside next to his greenhouses. The walls and floor are of concrete, making an economical as well as a delightfully cool room.

D. U. Augspurger & Sons will give a fishing party to their employees and friends this coming week. D. U. Augspurger met with a painful accident last Saturday. He was assisting in shipping a large box of ferns, when in some unaccountable manner his right foot was caught between the case and the wagon. It will be some time before the foot will be entirely well.

William Wrigley, with D. U. Augspurger & Sons, treated the greenhouse employees to a lot of pears which were sent him from his old farm home near Hanna City, Ill.

Paul, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Loveridge, passed away at the family residence, 723 Arcadia avenue, at the age of three months and eighteen days. Mr. Loveridge has the sympathy of a wide circle of florists. H. C. R.

---

LANCASTER, PA.—Walter A. Hammond, formerly with Geo. W. Schroyer, is making arrangements to open a store of his own a little later in the season.

FORT WAYNE, IND.—E. A. Kunderd, formerly of Kendallville, who recently formed a partnership with M. E. Rice, has planted upwards of two million gladiolus bulbs on the Rice farm here. August 1 they placed a big display of cut blooms in the lobby of the Majestic theater.

OUR EXHIBIT AT THE CONVENTION

During the Convention we will have on exhibition at Niagara Falls, N. Y., a full line of samples. Our entire staff of travelers will be in attendance and will be pleased to show samples and give any information desired. Delegates attending the Convention are cordially invited to stop off at Philadelphia (either going or returning), and inspect our Nurseries at Riverton, N. J., where you will always find something to interest you.

For the most complete list of seasonable stock that can be offered at this season of the year, see our current Wholesale List. If you have not received a copy it will be mailed to you on application.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year. It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1908, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held on Friday evening, July 31, with President Angus in the chair. The following gentlemen were elected active members: William McIntosh, Tarrytown, N. Y.; Albert Hopper, Tarrytown; Alfred L. Squire, White Plains, N. Y.; Matthew J. Murtha, Tarrytown; Albert Pettit, Hastings, N. Y.

The prize for the evening was for the four best vases of hardy phlox, awarded to Thomas Lee, gardener to Mrs. Sands, Irvington, N. Y. Claude Wilson, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., received honorable mention for Stanhopea maculosa. On motion, it was decided to hold no meeting in August.

Annual Outing.

The annual outing of the society, held at Rye Beach, N. Y., August 4, is on record as one of the best that this society has ever held. The weather was almost perfect, though possibly a little too warm for some of the boys. About 115 members and friends were present, and a most jolly and agreeable time was had by everyone. The games were well contested and every winner earned his prize. Dinner was excellent and well served, and everyone did credit to the food.

The games and winners are as follows:

One-hundred-yard dash — Sam Burns first, Frank Shaw second.

Running broad jump—James Craig first, Albert Hopper second.

Running high jump—George Begg first, James Craig second.

Potato race—George Begg first, Thomas Atkinson second.

Obstacle race—Ernest Behrens first, Thomas Lee second.

Three-legged race—Thomas Atkinson first, Sam Burns second.

Stone throwing—Sam Burns first, Arthur Lynch second.

Hammer throwing—George McIntosh first, Sam Burns second.

Bowling match game, between married and single men, best two games out of three—Married men won by two pins. Very close.

Current Comment.

We have had plenty of rain as well as the hot weather lately, and everything looks fresh and green. The fall flowers are now in bloom—asters, golden glow, dahlias, etc.

The picnic of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Highgate Springs, July 29, was not very well attended, but a pleasant time was spent.

A number of our boys are going to the convention, among whom are Messrs. W. Hall, J. Bennett, Hopton, G. Robinson, McKenna, and others. Some of the members' wives are also going, and a good time is expected.

Miss Gibb, of Hall & Robinson, has returned from her vacation.

Miss Campbell reports business as good, with plenty of good stock to fill orders. Campbell's had the decoration of the tables at the banquet given in honor of Earl Roberts, as well as numerous other orders connected with his visit here.

J. Bennett is shipping to Montreal some splendid asters, etc.

McKenna & Son are rearranging the interior of their west end store. The large stairway has been pulled down and the greenhouse moved farther back. Miss Marnell, the lady in charge, leaves next month to be married.

The annual flower show of the Lachine Horticultural Association will be held in the Town Hall about August 19 and 20.

TOMMY.

CLEVELAND, O.—Charles Bramley, of the firm of Charles Bramley & Son, has retired from the business, and his interest in it has been purchased by his partner, W. A. Bramley. The business will be carried on as heretofore, under the name of Bramley & Son, at the same location, 1181 East Seventy-first street.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.—As a result of the negotiations recently referred to in the REVIEW, the property of the Idlewild Floral Co., embracing nineteen acres, was sold August 1 to Dr. E. W. Grove, who will use the tract as part of a beautiful residential park. The deed was signed by Mrs. C. T. C. Deake and J. W. C. Deake. The price was $15,500.

NOTICE TO OUR CUSTOMERS GOING TO THE CONVENTION:

TOO WELL KNOWN

We cordially invite our customers and delegates going to or returning from the convention to stop off at Philadelphia (our place is right in the heart of the city) and pay us a visit and see our large stock of araucarias, etc., grown on the spot, and inspect them thoroughly. I consider this the best way to make an exhibit.

Araucarias Our Specialty

WE LEAD THE COUNTRY IN ARAUCARIAS

ARAUCARIAS! ARAUCARIAS!! ARAUCARIAS!!!

Over the sea together we go,
Aschmann and I, with plenty of dough.
I'll play the fiddle to make some fun,
He seeks the best plants under the sun;
Palms and azaleas, many a score,
Araucarias better than ever before.
In Belgium my music will make people dance,
While he'll buy to give his patrons a chance
To pile up the dollars the people will pay
With gladness to take such beauties away.

Houses full of them whichever way you look. Why? Because the everlasting evergreen foliage of this beautiful decorative plant gives it such a striking and charming appearance that everybody falls in love with it and buys a plant for their parlor, summer porch, office, store or shop and it is selected freely for gifts.

The song of the frog is "Croak, croak, croak," but the "froggie" here is happy, plays the fiddle, and his tune is, "Prosperity! Don't croak, don't croak, don't croak; be happy, make business, make money."

Sit down a few minutes and write out an order to Godfrey Aschmann

for his Araucarias—Excelsa, Glauca or Robusta Compacta. This kind of speculation is safe, never fails, but will yield you 200 per cent profit while you are asleep. Our reputation for the last 12 years, as propagators, wholesale growers and shippers of Araucarias, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is sufficient proof of our business ability. Every child in the trade knows our araucarias. Many thousands, of all sizes and varieties, can be seen growing in our greenhouses ready for shipment.

Araucaria Excelsa, 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 tiers, 8 to 10 inches high, 40c; 5-in. pots, 2 years old, 3 to 4 tiers, 10 to 13 inches high, 50c; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 3 to 4 years old, 4, 5 to 6 tiers, 14, 15 to 20 inches high, $1.00 each.

Araucaria Robusta Compacta, 6-in. pots, 3 years old, 3 tiers, fine, beautiful plants, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, specimen plants; spring, 1907, importation; suitable for lawns or porches, 5 to 6 years old, 7-in. pots, 5 tiers, 25, 30, 35 to 40 inches high, same in width, beautiful plants, $1.50, $1.75, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 to $4.00 each.

Kentia Belmoreana, 5¼ to 5½-in. pots, 22 to 25 inches high, 50c to 60c; 4-in., 20 inches high, 35c to 40c.

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.

Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.

Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.

As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.

Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price, $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Funeral work is still plentiful, with a little more stock to work with than a few weeks ago. A few carnations are still to be seen on the market, but asters are more freely used. Most of the growers are now benching their young carnation plants. This has been a fairly good season for their growth, although the middle part of the season was dry. Still, the plants are of good size, just right for housing. The last two or three weeks we have had some good rains in this section, which have helped out the asters and other outdoor stuff splendidly. The uptown stores still continue to close on Wednesday afternoons and at 6 p. m. every night except Friday and Saturday.

Napoleon Lemay, who it was rumored had left town, has returned and is busy at his Hillman street place.

Fred Reynolds, formerly with R. E. Nofftz, on William street, has entered the employ of S. S. Peckham, at Fairhaven.

H. V. Sowle has finished housing his carnations. He has among his other varieties benched a number of H. A. Jahn's new white, Lloyd. William Livesey has about 1,000 of these which have been planted indoors all summer.

Greenhouse Heating.

FOUR CONNECTED HOUSES.

I have four houses, connected. Each house is 21x110 and seven feet to the gutter, with two feet of side glass on the outside houses. All the houses have raised benches. The south gables are glass and the north gables are protected by service buildings. How many lines of 1¼-inch pipe will be needed and how should they be arranged to heat these houses to 60 degrees in zero weather, in this Wisconsin climate? What size of boiler should be installed? The boiler will be located on the level of the greenhouse floor. What device should be installed to return condensation to the boiler? Kindly state what size of pipe should leave the dome of the boiler and what size the risers should be.

E. H. O.

The bank of houses in question can be heated by using a 2½-inch flow under the ridge of each house, with thirteen 1¼-inch returns in each of the exposed houses, placing the odd pipe under the bench nearest the outside wall, and with twelve 1¼-inch pipes in each of the two center houses. If the boiler is tapped for a 4-inch flow it will be adequate and the main return need be only 1½-inch or 2-inch, which, under the construction, will have to be discharged into a hot well or receiving tank, from which the condensed water can be returned to the boiler by a return steam trap or by a pump driven by electricity, gas or steam power.

L. C. C.

TWENTY-THREE-FOOT HOUSE.

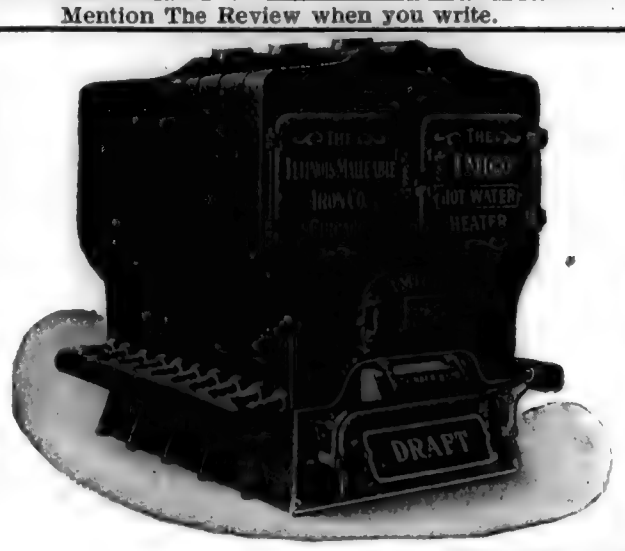
I wish to heat a house 23x100 with hot water to 50 degrees when the temperature drops to 20 degrees below zero. One side and end are exposed. The boiler is in a pit in one end of the house. I have 1½-inch and 2-inch pipe. Will four 2-inch flows and sixteen 1½-inch returns on the side walls be enough, or would it be better to run two flows of 2½-inch or 3-inch pipe instead of the 2-inch?

J. O. G.

The sixteen 1½-inch returns should be ample with a boiler temperature of 180 degrees. Two 2½-inch flows will be sufficient to supply these returns, and in my judgment will be more desirable than four 2-inch flows.



L. C. C.

ONE CARNATION HOUSE.

I have placed my order with the Moninger Co. for a new house, 27x100, for carnation growing, running east and west, but I do not know how many 2-inch pipes will be required to heat this house. I will have five raised benches. My boiler is an Ideal No. 62 hot water boiler. My present house is 9x80, and I use it for chrysanthemums and bedding plants. It is also connected with the same boiler, as it extends along the north side of my lot. The greenhouse to be built will be on the south side. My lot is 80x100, and I must bring the heat from the boiler at the northwest corner. Please give me information as to how to pipe this house, using some 2-inch pipe which I have on hand. My location is Utah.

B. V. D. S.

It is rather difficult to answer your question, as the location of the new house is not clearly stated. While this will have no bearing on the piping of the house, it will have a decided influence on the efficiency derived from the fuel used. The boiler should be as close as possible to the house, as the length of the house is the maximum length for a gravity hot water system.

The piping in the house may consist of a 3-inch riser carried under the ridge to the far end of the house, where it should divide to supply fifteen 2-inch returns, three under each of the five benches. With this arrangement you will need an elevated expansion tank, connected directly with the main return close to the boiler. I do not have the rating of your boiler at hand, but to handle your plant your boiler should be rated for 1,500 to 1,600 feet of radiation. L. C. C.

INTERCHANGEABLE SYSTEM.

I am rebuilding my place and when finished it will be as follows: House No. 1 will be 20x80, north side exposed, side walls seven feet six inches high, made three feet six inches of hollow concrete, the upper four feet glass, also the east end. No. 2 will be 20x80, open to No. 1. The south wall will be six feet high. No. 3 will be 20x70, with a closed partition between it and No. 2. The south wall will be four feet six inches high, double boarded, the east end glass. No. 1 and

No. 2 are for carnations and miscellaneous plants that require 50 to 54 degrees; No. 3 for roses and smilax, requiring 56 to 60 degrees in Ohio climate. The boiler-shed is at the west end and the water level of the boiler is below all returns.

My plan of piping is as follows: No. 1, 20x80, is to have a 3-inch flow overhead from the boiler to the east end of the house, branching in a coil of four pipes on the north side, three pipes in the middle and two on the south side. No. 2, 20x80, is to have a similar 3-inch flow, two pipes on the north side, three in the middle and two on the south side. No. 3, 20x70, will have the 3-inch flow and three returns on the north side, four in the middle and three on the south side. All the returns are to be 1½-inch pipe.

I wish to use hot water in mild weather and steam when it is cold. Will the piping be sufficient and will the 1½-inch pipe serve the purpose? C. F. K.

The plan you propose is a good one and is worthy of much more universal use than it now has. The connected houses can be handled by using a 2½-inch flow under the ridge of each and placing four, three, and two 1½-inch returns under each of the benches in house No. 1. For house No. 2 use the 2½-inch flow and two, three, and three 1½-inch returns. The largest number of returns in each case should be under the most exposed benches. House No. 3 had, I believe, better be provided with four, three and four pipes under the three benches. Arrange the expansion tank so as to give good pressure and connect it with the main return near the boiler. Provide valves and pressure gauge, so as to allow quick conversion to the steam system when desired. L. C. C.

WINDMILL EXPANSION TANK.

I have a Wilks hot water heater 30x48. Should the boiler and pipes be left full during the summer, or should the water be drawn out?

I have a windmill about 180 feet from my boiler, with a water tank thirty feet high. If I connect with it, would it answer for an expansion tank without any other expansion? M. A. B.

Yes, leave the boiler and pipes full of water during the period they are not in use. The whole plant should be flooded, after having been thoroughly flushed out at the close of the season.

The windmill tank will make an admirable expansion tank and should increase the efficiency of your hot water plant considerably over a low expansion tank. L. C. C.

FROM STEAM TO HOT WATER.

I have two Furman boilers with which I am heating my place of about 10,000 feet of glass, by steam. Can I change to hot water and would it be economical to do so? My boilers are about five feet from the top to the highest point in the steam line. I am using 2-inch flows and 1¼-inch returns. Could I still use the 1¼-inch returns and 2-inch flows, by increasing the number? W. S. K.

The information that W. S. K. has supplied, relative to the system itself, is rather meager and we have no knowledge as to the exact methods of making connections. We can see no reason, however, should the steam pipes be run on a down-hill plan, why the same piping cannot be used for hot water, provided the returns leading from the several coils are made the same size as the flow connections. In addition to this, we would advise that a Honeywell heat generator be installed on the system, to insure rapid circulation of the water for supply connection to the individual coils. The venting of all coils should be at the high point for water instead of the low point, as is the case with steam.

If W. S. K. is using the Furman sectional boilers, it will be a simple matter for him to change their construction. However, should he happen to have one brick-set boiler, it would be a rather difficult matter, as well as expensive, for him to make the change. It would mean that the long side tubes surrounding either side of the fire-box would have to be cut down and new tubes supplied having bottom connections for connecting to the return header. On the Furman steam boilers the domes are all connected together near the top of the boiler and the return connections are directly at the rear, and this arrangement would, of course, be impossible to use in connection with water.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

Stock was plentiful the first part of the week. Roses, Killarney, Kaiserin and Richmond, were good, with long stems and with foliage free from mildew in all cases. Carnations were on the wane, but asters took their place. The stores are flooded with speciosum, but the great demand occasioned by four funerals of prominent business men helped to keep them moving. The latter part of the week roses and carnations got scarce again. Everyone, unfortunately, seems out of crop at the same time. The weather cooled off, and on the whole is better for the stock.

Various Notes.

Miss Whitted left August 9 for a trip east, taking in the convention before she returns.

James Souden had the bulk of decorations for one of the big funerals, and put out some artistic pieces of work. A blanket of lilies was among them.

The L. S. Donaldson Co. made up a blanket of purple asters which was very effective.

O. C. Swanson had a lot of funeral work all the week. The store is attractive, with its baskets and jars of outdoor flowers, poppies, sweet peas, gladioli, etc.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. is among the heaviest in the cutting of speciosum.

Among the visitors was B. Eschner, of Philadelphia. M. E. M.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

The Fairview Floral Co., Beattytown, went into the hands of a receiver August 4. A. H. Hahn and other prominent Springfielders are stockholders. The action was the result of a petition of two of the heavy stockholders, Dr. Clarence H. Kay and Mary S. Kirkpatrick.

S. F. McGrew was appointed receiver. The assets were given at $23,600, and the liabilities at $13,350.

Dr. Kay and Mrs. Kirkpatrick own 3,960 shares of the stock, the par value of which is $1. The company is capitalized at $10,000. The assets consist of apparatus, valued at $200; plants, valued at $3,000; business, valued at $5,000; and real estate, valued at over $15,000. Of the $13,350 indebtedness, $150 are accounts payable, $7,000 bills payable, $6,000 mortgaged notes and $200 labor.

The receiver will proceed with the business with a competent man in charge and dispose of as much of the stock as possible.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Kirkpatrick desired to carry on the business he had started, and with this end in view, a company was organized. The business was conducted on a paying basis for two years and then began to lose money.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Preparatory to making a large increase in equipment and in scope of trade, the business of Sawyer & Payne has been incorporated, under the name of the Jacksonville Floral Co. The capital stock is $15,000. The officers of the new organization are: President, James H. Payne; vice-president, H. L. Sawyer; secretary, A. N. Duncan; treasurer, C. E. Heston.

The designing and decorating will be under the charge of Mr. Sawyer, who has already an established reputation in that class of work. Mr. Duncan is an expert landscape gardener and grower of trees and plants. Mr. Heston, the treasurer, is an experienced financier.

Mr. Payne, whose entire time will be devoted to the developing and upbuilding of the business, says: "It is our intention to rapidly add to the number of greenhouses now in course of construction, and materially increase the acreage of our already extensive nursery at Evergreen cemetery." The company will open a store at 20 Laura street.

WINONA, MINN.—Plans are being carried into effect for the rebuilding and enlarging of the greenhouses at Woodlawn cemetery. Part of the work is being done this year and part will be undertaken a year from now.

YOUR paper reaches everywhere, and everyone who is in any way connected with the flower business reads the REVIEW. This is evidenced by the great variety of letters I have received through my advertisement. Your paper did its part.—CHARLES SCHNEIDER, Chicago, Ill.

ALLOW me to say that the REVIEW is a very welcome guest and its coming is always awaited with interest. I cannot understand how anyone in the trade can do business without it. To those who are in doubt I would recommend, "Try the REVIEW."—A. D. ZIMMERMAN, Ottawa, Kan.

American "Everblooming" Hydrangea

Botanically, Hydrangea Arborescens Sterilis

Called also "Snowball Hydrangea," "Hills of Snow," "Grandiflora Alba," etc. We use the name under which it has been known in one considerable locality for fifteen years, as both descriptive and appropriate:

American "Everblooming" Hydrangea

This is believed to be the most beautiful hardy flowering shrub introduced during the last twenty years. It was found growing wild on the rocky hills of Western Pennsylvania several years ago, and finally was introduced into Central Ohio by Mrs. Mary Kelley when she removed from Pittsburg many years ago. From this introduction numerous plants have been grown and planted in that locality, so that many plants are now growing, three to eight years old, and blooming profusely from early June till toward Autumn frosts.

The old and well-known Hydrangea Paniculata Grandiflora, which, up to the introduction of the new form, has been one of the most popular flowering shrubs, blooms only in this latitude during August, while the new sort blooms continuously from early June until the end of the growing season. The size of the flower is one of the striking features of this shrub. Blooms twelve inches across are frequent in young plants, while the average size on mature plants is usually six inches or more. The color of the flower is a pure, dazzling white, without the creamy, and later pink, tints of the old H. Paniculata Grandiflora. The length of time this whiteness is retained depends somewhat on local conditions, but usually from four to five weeks, when the flowers begin to change gradually to a light green color, and by October the flowers and foliage are of a similar shade of green.

The flowers, when cut, possess remarkable keeping qualities, remaining in good form and color many days. This feature renders it specially valuable for florists' use.

This Hydrangea is also one of the very best shrubs for forcing under glass, equal to any other used for that purpose; easily brought into bloom for Easter sales, as well as for later events. Our 8 to 12-inch plants can be brought into bloom along with Geraniums and other bedding plants, when their large, showy blooms will attract general attention.

This Hydrangea gives every promise of becoming even more popular than the well-known H. Paniculata Grandiflora, as it lacks the coarseness and stiffness of that variety; it is refined in tone and effect, and with its abundant and handsome foliage it lends itself readily to landscape effects. It is a comely, handsome shrub at all times. It reaches a height of five to six feet, and when in full bloom is one of the most striking as well as the most beautiful shrubs of its season. It is at least as hardy as H. Paniculata Grandiflora. We have sold many of them to our customers in Maine, Minnesota and other Northern States, and in Canada as far north as Winnipeg.

We have one of the largest stocks of nursery-grown plants of American "Everblooming" Hydrangea in America, and offer to the trade for fall of 1908: Strong, one-year-old plants, 15 inches and up, $2.50 per doz.; $15.00 per 100; $140.00 per 1000. One-year, nursery-grown, 8 to 12 inches, $1.50 per doz.; $10.00 per 100; $90.00 per 1000. We usually begin to ship plants about Oct. 25.

We are Chicago's Mail Order Supply House. We have a complete stock of all Staple Supplies, and one of the largest lines of novelties in the United States. We manufacture, import, or buy in largest quantities for spot cash, so that we are in a position to meet all competition on prices on the same quality of goods. Call on us for anything you need in Supplies as well as Cut Flowers, and you will find we mean just what we say when we tell you we are able and anxious to serve you promptly and well. Write us about something you need.

MADE-UP VIOLET BOXES

BASKETS

Our line of Baskets is one of the largest in the United States. Besides all the staple shapes in all sizes, we have a great variety of Novelties, such as you may want only on special occasions. A telegram will bring you any Basket or other item you need and do not have in stock. Write us about your basket needs.

NOVELTIES

We shall have a grand lot of Novelties for the fall trade. New catalogue out soon—but the best way to do is to visit us the next time you come to Chicago—it is worth a special trip—and make your own selection. Where selection is left to us we guarantee good value or you can return the goods. Write us about your needs.

Cut Flower and Design Boxes

We want you to give us at least a part of your order for boxes this season—do it now, and we have enough confidence in our box to feel sure you will re-order. Our box is the heaviest on the market, but it doesn't cost any more than many inferior lines. We have a nice stock of halftone cuts for printing boxes—no charge for printing on orders for 1000 or more boxes.

VIOLET BOXES

You will soon be needing these again, and we want your order. Our line of Violet Boxes includes all prices.

Common Sense Carnation Support

A close application of economy in the growing of his products, by a successful Carnation Grower, has resulted in the invention of our support.

It has an open ring with positive lock and will hold from one to four rings. A simple twist of the wire locks and unlocks the rings (see cut) which encircle the plant, enclosing all shoots and stems without bending or breaking. This support is adjustable and can be used for supporting potted plants, peonies, chrysanthemums, tomatoes, etc. Sample and booklet upon request.

Extra large; averages three and one-half inches. Color, pure bright red, neither too dark nor too light. Free bloomer, commencing to flower in October, and by Christmas is in full crop and continues steady until the end of the season. Calyx never bursts. Stems, long and stiff. By Christmas eighteen to twenty-four inches long. Splendid shipper and entirely free of disease. Easy as Lawson to grow.

The O. P. BASSETT has won first prize wherever exhibited except at the National Carnation Society meeting at Toronto, where it took the second prize, being beaten by Alma Ward in the contest for best vase of 100 any variety or color. This record speaks for itself. We grew this from a seed of Prosperity X Crane five years ago, and have gradually increased the stock until today we have (48,000) forty-eight thousand plants now benched, besides about (20,000) twenty thousand more in the field. This enables us to easily produce (300,000) three hundred thousand cuttings, ready by January and February, and in order to sell such a large quantity of cuttings, we have put the price down low, as follows:

WYNCOTE - - PENNA.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year.

It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1908, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100. 4-in. pots, $7.00 per doz.; $50.00 per 100. 6-in. pots, $1.50 each; $15.00 per doz.

THE NIAGARA FALLS CONVENTION

TWENTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS

THE NEXT MEETING WILL BE HELD AT CINCINNATI.

OFFICERS FOR 1909:

President, J. A. VALENTINE, Denver, Colo.
Vice-president, E. G. GILLETT, Cincinnati, Ohio.
Secretary, WILLIS N. RUDD, Morgan Park, Ill.
Treasurer, H. B. BEATTY, Oil City, Pa.

The twenty-fourth annual convention, which opened at Niagara Falls, N. Y., on Tuesday, August 18, proved as great a success as had been expected by the most enthusiastic, save that the facilities did not come up to the promises of Mr. Cutler, the eloquent gentleman who, at Dayton and Philadelphia, told us so convincingly of the pleasures and profit to be derived from a convention at the Falls.

But the fact that the accommodations were inadequate was no fault of the hospitable gentlemen who backed up Mr. Cutler's promises with the utmost that they had. The Cataract-International Hotel Co. gave up the entire first floor of the Cataract House to the purposes of the convention. They permitted C. H. Keitsch, superintendent of the trades' display, to take possession of parlors, ball-room, dining-room and every available space he could find and do with it as he would. They permitted without protest the roughest treatment of carpets and woodwork, such as is incidental to installing a great trades' display; they never winked an eye when thousands of feet of lumber were dragged into their parlors for staging, and they did not appear to hear the sounds of hammer and saw resounding in one of the world's famous hostelries (for the oldest part of the Cataract was put up in 1822 and has housed presidents and princes), and they did not say a word until they saw the plantsmen spilling water over the ball-room's hardwood floor, with warping threatened—then they asked for "saucers" under the pots, and Supt. Keitsch supplied pie-plates.

All this the hotel company's officers endured with a smile, for they had offered the space without charge to secure the convention for their city, and they were too good sports to spoil the game—but it is dollars to doughnuts they never would have let the trade exhibits in if they had any idea of the carload after carload of stuff that was to come down upon them. They probably thought florists' exhibits would be flowers.

The trades' display was the greatest on record. It overcrowded the many large rooms given over to it and flowed out upon veranda and lawn, and even at that Supt. Keitsch was obliged to turn down applications for over 2,000 square feet of space. Twice as much room might easily have been used. Supt. Keitsch's troubles were multiplied by the inadequacy of the space, but he handled his task with a minimum of friction. The boilers, building materials and heaviest exhibits were placed in a floored tent on the lawn.

The exhibits as a whole served to give a new idea of the way our trade has broadened and the multiplicity of articles now necessary in the conduct of a florist's establishment doing a general business. Individually the exhibits were more elaborate than ever, more attractively staged and notable for the number of novelties shown. It proved that as the trade broadens bright minds are attracted to the problems of meeting its needs, and instead of having approached the highest development, we are in reality only at a beginning, for as rewards increase so will creative endeavor.

Niagara Falls is a splendid convention town and ideal weather favored the gathering of a big crowd. And there certainly was a large attendance, but just how large it would be hard to say. There was no one room large enough to hold at one time all who were there, and no record was kept for purposes of issuing entertainment tickets. Not all registered. Suffice it to say that the attendance was so large that the aisles in the trades' exhibit were pretty well congested most of the time, and there was an especially large proportion of ladies.

First Business Session.

Vice-president George W. McClure called the convention to order promptly at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. He believes brevity is the soul of wit and applied the theory in his introductions. E. T. Williams, editor of the Cataract Journal, extended the usual welcome as the representative of the mayor. He paid his respects to floriculture in due form and, among many other things, offered assurances that the future of Niagara Falls would have been safe even without outside interference, as the citizens feel too keenly the importance of the cataract as a means of attracting visitors to permit of encroachment on the flow of water by the power plants.

P. O'Mara, of Jersey City, replied to Mr. Williams and in characteristic style thanked him for the things he had said, and for some left unsaid, but he warned him that, while we are willing to leave the falls in the hands of the local people, should we see signs of overlooking public interests the society will take up the quest of an accounting.

At the conclusion of Mr. O'Mara's address President F. H. Traendly was introduced and received an ovation. After brief words of thanks he took up routine business and put it through with dispatch. His address was as follows:

President's Address.

In preparing my address to you, I am following a custom established by all of my predecessors. I have no thought of outlining any policy which would help to build up our society to the numbers to which its good work for the different branches of our business entitles it. I know well that every conceivable plan for accomplishing this has been tried. The florists of the country have had an object lesson, showing the value of organized effort to attain results, in the success of the society last year in appearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission for the purpose of compelling the express companies to revise their freight rates. The contention of the S. A. F. prevailed, thus financially benefiting many florists throughout the country. This one instance should prove to everyone, grower, retailer, wholesaler and supplyman, that his interest lies in becoming a member of the S. A. F. They may then see that many problems which they have faced at some time during their career and conquered with difficulty, if at all, would have become easy if they had been members of the S. A. F.

Advantages of Membership.

To the younger men of our business who expect to make their living in the florists' business, being a member of the S. A. F. will gain them much valuable information, as well as the experience and advice of our older members; and to the young men whose experience is confined to one branch of our business, there is no better way of gaining a general knowledge of the business than by attending the meetings of the S. A. F.

We have just passed through one of the worst panics this country has had in years, and I think the florists' business is to be congratulated, in that it has weathered the financial storm as well as it did. To my knowledge, very few failures have occurred, and while florists in general have not made the money they have made in recent years, I feel that I am safe in saying that most of them have more than paid expenses. I think this is much better than most manufacturing concerns were able to do.

Overproduction of Flowers.

Ex-president Burton and Ex-president Breitmeyer, in their messages, called attention to the large amount of greenhouse building going on at that time, and both felt that it would tend to overproduction, and their predictions, I think, have since been verified. All through this last season, especially, has this been so in regard to carnations, the New York market alone receiving at least four times as many of these flowers as were ever received before in any one season. This overproduction has reacted on the producer to the extent of a large amount of worry as to the disposal of his stock.

President Traendly Reads His "Address."

Considering a season like the last, when flowers were abundant and cheap, it would seem to me that this was a most opportune time for the retailer, who is the only outlet the grower has, to give up the handling of painted iron or wax flowers, and also the use of cheap galax leaves, and advance the sale of greenhouse production. This would give the men who are the backbone of our business a chance to get more of the money which the intending purchaser meant for flowers.

Council of Horticulture.

The knowledge has come to me on numerous occasions of the good work done by the National Council of Horticulture in distributing articles through the daily press. Some of our largest dailies have given whole pages to these papers on the planting and care of different kinds of plants, some of these articles being beautifully illustrated. I think our society should donate a liberal sum to keep up this good work, as in no other way can I conceive of so much good advertising to our business having been done for so little money as has been subscribed in the past.

National Flower Show.

This, I think, is the most important undertaking in the history of the society, and the success of our first national flower show should be the earnest wish of every member of the S. A. F., from a financial as well as an artistic point of view. On the success of our first show much depends as to whether the society will continue to give shows in the future, and it behooves us from all parts of the country, especially those of us in the east, to put our shoulders to the wheel—to contribute to the best of our ability whatever we have to exhibit in the line of plants or cut flowers, without concerning ourselves particularly as to whether the premium offered will compensate us for the value of the goods exhibited, but remembering that our reward is to come in increased future business.

National Flower Show and Private Gardeners.

To the men in charge of large private estates we must look for help in making our show a success. These men are in a position to exhibit the finest specimen plants, as well as the finest chrysanthemums and other cut flowers. I know the question has often been asked by some of the private gardeners, "What does the S. A. F. do for us?" and we might answer that all of its energy is devoted to the cause of horticulture, from which all of us derive our livelihood, and therefore the society deserves the support of every florist and gardener.

Horticultural Education in Public Schools.

Much good has been done in the past by our society, and by some individual members, in the assistance lent to the different cities and the national government in pushing along the good work of horticultural education in the public schools. I am sure we all appreciate the refining influence such education will have on the children, and I therefore hope that the good work will be kept up.

Registration of Ornamental Plants.

The Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, at Washington, has under consideration the matter of a plant registration bureau, the plan of which would, I am sure, only require the indorsement of the S. A. F. to be put in operation. And if tried and found to be practicable, it might lead up to other things from this department—public trial grounds, for instance.

After conference with the Washington authorities, the following plan of registration has been outlined and is presented to you in the hope that the matter will receive your earnest attention at this convention.

Object of Registration.

To secure uniformity of nomenclature for a given plant, and in the interest alike of the originator, seller and purchaser, to secure accuracy of description in trade catalogues, and to prevent error and confusion by exploiting as novelties, under new names, plants already in the trade with established names.

To protect in America the rights of the originator or first introducer of a new variety or form of ornamental plant, by maintaining a record of the name of the originator, the parentage of the new form and the date of its presentation for registration.

Method of Procedure.

The registration of introductions and novelties is to be encouraged by securing the coöperation of the S. A. F. and allied organizations, but effort will be made to secure information and keep records of as many introductions as possible, whether request is made for registration or not.

A list of all the names found in American trade catalogues will be compiled, and these names, together with names found in such standard lists as the "Official Catalogue of the National Dahlia Society" (England), Simon et Cochet's "Nomenclature de tous les Nome de Roses," Coit's "A Peony Check-list" and other similar lists, shall constitute a standard list of names which may not again be used for plants belonging to the same group. From this list as a basis, a check-list of the plants in the American trade will be prepared as soon as the information can be secured, giving the correct botanical name of each species and, so far as can be determined, the name by which each horticultural variety is best known to the trade, indicating, when possible, the important synonyms.

Application for Registration.

Registration of the names of introductions and novelties will be made on application and the submission, when possible, of such material and descriptive matter as may be required for future comparison of a plant under a given name with the type originally registered under that name, and a statement under affidavit of the facts known to the originator or introducer concerning the origin of the variety or form for which registration is requested. Beyond this statement, there will be no guaranty that the name registered represents a variety new to the trade.

The originator or first introducer has the right to name a new introduction or novelty, but varietal names must be distinctive, and the names of importations must not be changed except when necessary to conform to the rules under which application is made.

Duplicate Varieties.

Information concerning the origin of varieties or forms will be held confidential until after the distribution of the catalogue of the individual or firm for which the registration is made or which first lists the registered name for the variety in question, provided the name is listed in a catalogue which is issued before the first day of July next succeeding the date of registration. When from the facts submitted in an application concerning the origin of a given variety it is evident that the same variety is represented by an earlier application from another individual or firm, registration will be refused for the later applicant, but with their consent the parties interested will be put into communication with each other, with a view to securing the introduction of the variety in question to the trade under the same name by the individual or firm concerned.

Refusal of Registration.

Registration will be refused when the name proposed does not conform to the rules printed on the reverse side of the application form; when proof cannot be furnished, if required, that the variety to which it is proposed to apply the name is distinct in origin from existing varieties; when necessary herbarium material is not supplied; or when a statement concerning the origin, and a description sufficiently comprehensive to clearly express the characters or qualities of the variety, together with a comparison with the one of which it is supposed to be an improvement or modification, are not furnished.

Records for identification will be kept when the nature of the subject will permit, these records to consist of descriptions, herbarium material of various kinds, photographs and colored drawings, as may be necessary.

Publications on Registration.

An annual publication will be issued after July 1, which will describe as accurately as possible the registrations of the previous year and state the name of the individual or firm introducing each, with the affidavit of the originator or introducer concerning the origin of each variety for which the name has been registered.

Date of S. A. F. Conventions.

From a great many quarters I have heard complaints as to the date of our meeting, and while it is impossible to suit everyone, this matter is worthy of our consideration. Some of our recent conventions have been held at a time when the weather was extremely hot, and this has been the reason for a great many of our members not attending these meetings. A change to the first week in September might be to our advantage, but I should advise that we go slow before making any change in our dates, and that we get the opinion of every member of the society.

Tariff Revision.

The question of a revision of the tariff may come up in the next Congress, and I would suggest that members who might be affected by or desire a change in the present tariff, present their case to the legislative committee of the society, so that their interests may be taken care of.

Parcels Post.

I think that our society should keep in touch with the Postal Progress League through our secretary, and when such legislation as we have indorsed comes up before Congress, the secretary should draft a letter, a copy of which should be given by every member to his congressman, with the request that he do his utmost to further such legislation.

Ladies' Auxiliary.

The ladies are to be congratulated on having an organization of their own, which enables them to become better acquainted, and adds to their pleasure and ours by a reunion every year at the annual convention.

Sports.

I am heartily in favor of having all of the different kinds of games which have been features of the past conventions, as I think they have been the means of bringing a great many of our younger members into the society. But let it always be remembered that we should finish our business first and then have our sport.

The address was referred to a committee consisting of Robert Simpson, P. O'Mara and Robert Craig, to report on its recommendations.

Secretary W. N. Rudd then read his report as follows:

Secretary's Report.

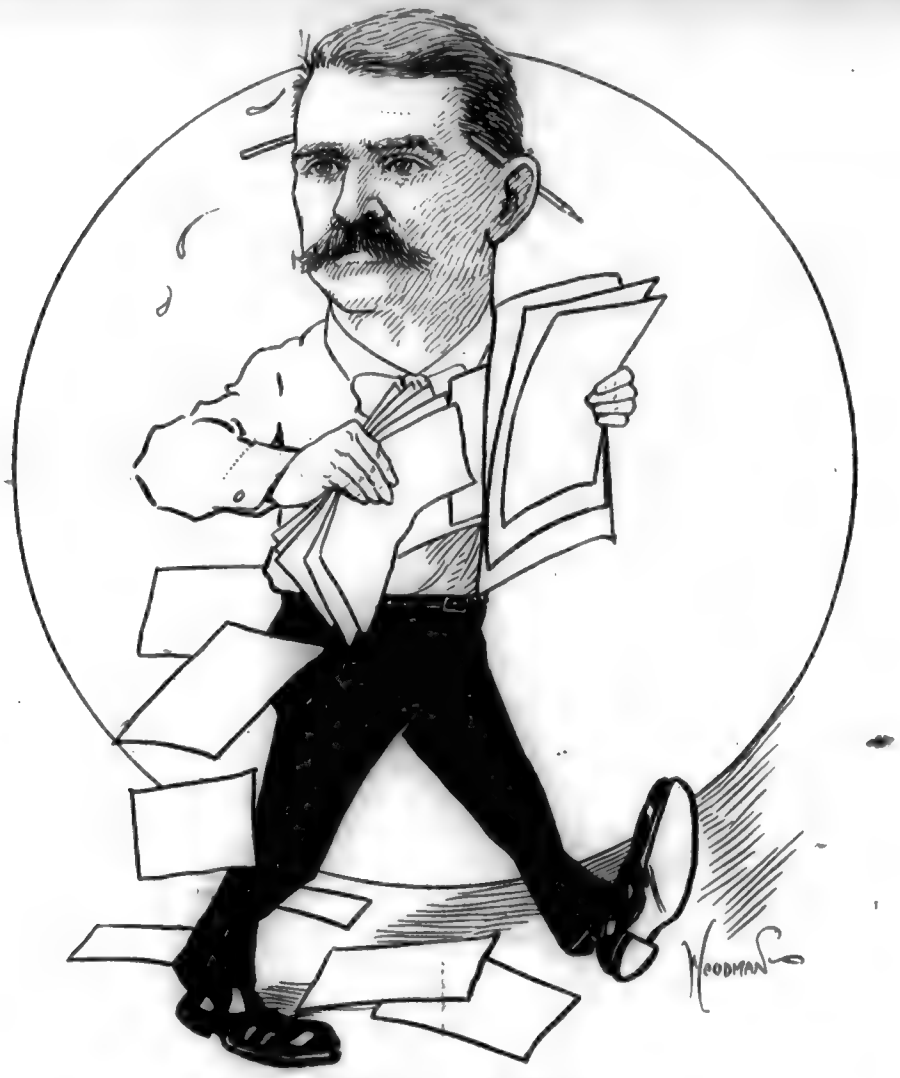
Your present secretary assumed the office December 6, 1907, as a temporary appointee of President Stewart, to succeed the late secretary, P. J. Hauswirth, whose untimely death, just at the close of his first year of service, we all deplore. This appointment was confirmed at a special session of the executive committee, held in Philadelphia, December 28, 1907.

The administrator of the estate of the late secretary requested that a careful check of his accounts should be made. This was done, and the same were verified, item by item. Immediate settlement was then made, as per authority given the secretary, at a special meeting of the executive board, December 28, 1907, and all funds due the society were promptly placed in my hands, and by me transmitted to Treasurer Beatty, as per financial report hereto attached.

It has been the custom in years past for the secretary to include in his report the important matters from the proceedings of the executive board. Under resolution adopted at the last convention, a full summary of the proceedings of the board will be presented at a later hour, so that such items are omitted here.

The only subject of national legislation in which the society is especially interested at present, is the pending bill regulating the sale of seeds. The negotiations regarding this bill have been conducted by the seedsmen, and they have succeeded in having action suspended. It seems to your secretary that, in view of the fact that our members are largely buyers and users of seeds, we should have a hearing in the matter, as our interests may not be identical with those of sellers of seeds, in all respects. The original bill was very drastic in its provisions, and if passed would be likely to largely increase the cost to us, without giving us any offsetting advantage. I would suggest that the legislative committee be requested to watch the course of the bill and apply for a hearing at the proper time.



The National Flower Show is an event in prospect of great interest, but reports regarding it will be made by the special committee in charge at a later session.

Transportation.

Formal application was made to all traffic associations for reduced rates for our convention. The eastern lines quite generally granted a rate of one fare and three-fifths for the round trip.

Geo. W. McClure, Vice-president, Bosses the Bowling.

Chas. H. Keitsch—His Busy Day.

The lines west and south of Buffalo refused to make any concessions. Rehearings were applied for and obtained twice, but any concessions in the way of reduced rates were refused, except when coupled with conditions with which it was impossible to comply. An extensive correspondence was carried on and the matter was taken up directly with various officials, but nothing could be accomplished. The recent general reduction of passenger rates from 3 cents to 2 cents per mile was given as an excuse for not making concessions.

Medals.

Medals have been delivered during the past year as follows:

Silver Medal—The Cottage Gardens Co., for Carnation Alma Ward, offered through the American Carnation Society, and awarded at its exhibition at Washington, January, 1908.

Bronze Medal—R. Witterstaetter, for Carnation Afterglow, offered and awarded as above.

Plant Registration.

New plant names have been registered since last report as follows:

No. 370—January 27, 1908. Name of rose registered July 14, 1906, by Paul Niehoff, as Aurora, changed to Mrs. Mary Niehoff.

No. 371—February 15, 1908. Name of hydrangea registered July 15, 1906, by the E. G. Hill Co., as Hydrangea arborescens alba grandiflora, changed to Hydrangea arborescens grandiflora forma nova.

No. 390—April 27, 1908. Canna W. E. Cottrell, by the Frank Cummings Bulb & Plant Co., Meridian, Miss.

No. 391—May 1, 1908. Sweet Pea Governor John Franklin Ford, by Anton C. Zvolanek, Bound Brook, N. J.

No. 392—May 1, 1908. Sweet Pea Greenbrook, by Anton C. Zvolanek, Bound Brook, N. J.

No. 393—May 1, 1908. Sweet Pea Blue Bird, by Anton C. Zvolanek, Bound Brook, N. J.

No. 394—July 10, 1908. Rose Silver Moon, by Peter Henderson & Co., New York.

No. 395—July 10, 1908. Rose Garnet Climber, by Peter Henderson & Co., New York.

No. 396—July 10, 1908. Rose Dr. W. Van Fleet, by Peter Henderson & Co., New York.

Members Lost by Death.

Since the last report twelve members have died:

In 1907—September 29, E. A. Sanders, Chicago; December 4, P. J. Hauswirth, Chicago (life member); December 18, W. W. Edgar, Waverley, Mass. (life member).

In 1908—January 31, J. B. Heiss, Dayton, O.; March 12, J. M. Gasser, Cleveland, O. (life member); April 2, Warren Ewell, Roxbury, Mass. (life member); April 6, F. P. Davis, Mobile, Ala.; May 19, Wm. Scott, Buffalo, N. Y.; June, Jas. Shanley, Brooklyn, N. Y.; June 16, E. Hippard, Youngstown, O.; June 17, Alex. Wallace, New York; August 2, Christian Rieger, Pittsburg, Pa.; August 9, Warren W. Rawson, Boston.

Membership Statistics July 31, 1908.

|---|---|
| Total annual members as per printed report of 1907 | 719 |
| Reinstated since publication of annual volume | 6 |
| New members | 32 |
| | 757 |
| Deceased | 8 |
| Total annual members enrolled | 749 |
| Total life members as per printed report of 1907 | 157 |
| New life members | 17 |
| | 174 |
| Deceased | 4 |
| Total life members enrolled | 170 |
| Total members enrolled | 919 |

The following is the approximate percentage of 1907 membership in the various states as compared with the total names in the Florists' Directory:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Alabama | 5+ | Maryland | 11— |
| Arizona | 0 | Massachusetts | 6+ |
| Arkansas | 0 | Michigan | 7— |
| California | 1— | Minnesota | 4+ |
| Colorado | 5+ | Mississippi | 2+ |
| Connecticut | 6— | Missouri | 8 |
| Dist. of Columbia | 27+ | Montana | 0 |
| Delaware | 2— | Nebraska | 2+ |
| Florida | 3— | Nevada | 0 |
| Georgia | 4— | New Hampshire | 3 |
| Idaho | 0 | New Jersey | 7— |
| Illinois | 6— | New Mexico | 0 |
| Indiana | 5— | New York | 6— |
| Iowa | 2+ | North Carolina | 6— |
| Kansas | 0+ | North Dakota | 0 |
| Kentucky | 6 | Ohio | 6+ |
| Louisiana | 5+ | Oklahoma | 0 |
| Maine | 1— | Oregon | 0 |
| Pennsylvania | 18— | Vermont | 0 |
| Rhode Island | 6— | Virginia | 4+ |
| South Carolina | 4— | Washington | 1— |
| South Dakota | 2+ | West Virginia | 10+ |
| Tennessee | 0+ | Wisconsin | 5+ |
| Texas | 1 | Wyoming | 0 |
| Utah | 0 | | |

From the above it will be seen that the District of Columbia is far in the lead, with Pennsylvania a bad second (they had the convention last year, too). Maryland and West Virginia divide honors for third place. Missouri beats all the big floricultural states, with New Jersey and Michigan next, but about a point behind. Massachusetts and Ohio lose to them by a neck, while Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, New York, North Carolina and Rhode Island are bunched near the six per cent mark.

There are listed in the Florists' Directory in round numbers 15,200 firms doing business as florists, nurserymen or seedsmen in the United States. Our membership amounts to almost exactly six per cent of this number.

As the names listed in the directory are of separate establishments, it is fair to estimate that there are 25,000 people engaged in the above lines of business as proprietors.

Our membership, therefore, cannot greatly exceed three and two-thirds per cent of the proprietors in the above lines.

Lonesome Members.

An examination of the report for 1907 shows that Chas. Simon, Jr., was the only member in the state of Delaware; Albert Dirwanger the only one in Maine; C. A. Moss in South Carolina, E. C. Newbury in South Dakota, C. L. Baum in Tennessee and Mrs. A. L. Lambly in Washington. These gentlemen and ladies should be given deserved recognition.

The great state of Kansas had but two members, Nebraska three (we had a convention in Omaha once, did we not?), New Hampshire three and Texas three, while several states have no members at all.

State Vice-presidents.

Many of the state vice-presidents have done excellent work in advancing the interests of the society in every way in their power. To these the thanks of the society are due. Others have done little and a few have not even paid their personal dues.

It seems to your secretary that no man should accept the honor of such an appointment unless he is willing to at least "make a bluff" at doing the work.

Payment of Dues.

Many members seem to overlook the fact that dues are payable on the first day of January, and allow the matter to run along till convention time. The paying of dues at convention time, when everyone is working under high pressure, and inexperienced help is necessarily pressed into service, is certain to result in more or less errors, and in delay and annoyance to the members.

Quite an item of expense to the society is exchange on checks. Many members, instead of sending a money order or a draft on Chicago, which most banks will furnish to their customers in small amounts without charge, are in the habit of sending personal checks, which cost from 5 cents to 10 cents for each collection. This is undoubtedly due to thoughtlessness in most cases, but it costs the society a good deal of money just the same.

The Thanks of the Society.

The society's thanks are due to the publishers of the trade papers for complimentary copies of their publications for use in the secretary's office and for the prompt publication of all notices and reports sent them.

Secretary Rudd supplemented his report with an accounting for $4,346.50, which passed through the office from the end of the fiscal year to July 31. This was followed by the report of Treasurer H. B. Beatty, summarized as follows:

Treasurer's Report.

General Fund.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Balance January 1, 1907 | | $3,279.99 |
| Receipts, Dues | | 750.00 |

Treasurer Beatty also made an informal report covering the period since the fiscal year closed, showing the following status July 10:

|---|---|
| General fund balance | $3,129.29 |
| Life membership fund | 4,718.52 |
| Total | $7,847.81 |

Miscellaneous Reports.

Twenty-five of the forty-three state vice-presidents submitted reports, which were referred to a committee consisting of J. F. Sullivan, Adam Graham and John Birnie for consideration and report.

Secretary Rudd read a long report giving in brief detail the action of the executive committee at its meetings since last August. About the only fact of interest at this date is the action in failing to approve the scheme of plant registration last adopted. It was recommended that a special meeting of the S. A. F. be called for November 9 at Chicago.

P. O'Mara reported that the committee on census appointed in accordance with the action of the executive committee had been requested to cooperate by the Census Bureau in preparing a question sheet to be sent to the trade as a means of getting a really worth-while census, it being stated that only ten per cent replied to the request for figures for the 1900 census. The committee had spent the morning in considering the matter, and decided that the important questions should relate to: Ground area covered by greenhouses, number of square feet in hotbeds and frames, number employed, total paid for labor, total paid for rent, total paid for fuel, total paid for soil, fertilizers and insecticides; total paid for advertising, postage and catalogues; total value of property, not including stock; number of plants grown for cut flowers and value of cut stock, number of decorative plants grown, number of bedding and blooming plants grown, number of hardy plants and shrubs, number of vegetable plants and vegetables, and number of small fruits, total area and amount of sales. It was thought that a list of questions of this character can be made simple enough so that every florist can and will answer them, especially if the blank carries notice of the approval of the S. A. F. The report was adopted and the committee continued, on motion of George Asmus.

For the committee on tariff F. R. Pierson reported that it is the sense of the committee that effort should be made to secure specific duties instead of ad valorem duties in the approaching revision of the tariff. He stated a few reasons why the change would be desirable, and P. O'Mara, E. G. Hill and E. V. Hallock gave others. The report was adopted and the committee continued.

After G. W. McClure had outlined the sporting program Robert Craig reported for the committee on standard sizes of pots that the society, and its members, should discountenance everything but pots on the society's standard. On motion of J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill., the judges of all trades' displays in future were instructed not to recognize any exhibits of pots which do not conform to the scale.

The reports of the society's botanist, Prof. L. H. Pammel, of Ames, Ia.; the pathologist, Dr. B. M. Duggar, of Ithaca, N. Y.; and the entomologist, Prof. F. L. Washburn, of Minneapolis, were presented and ordered printed.

President's Reception.

President Traendly and his official family and their ladies received the society in the parlors of the International hotel on Tuesday evening. The spacious rooms were crowded and it proved one of the most successful affairs in years. The hotel management provided music and refreshments and dancing followed until a late hour.

Hail Association.

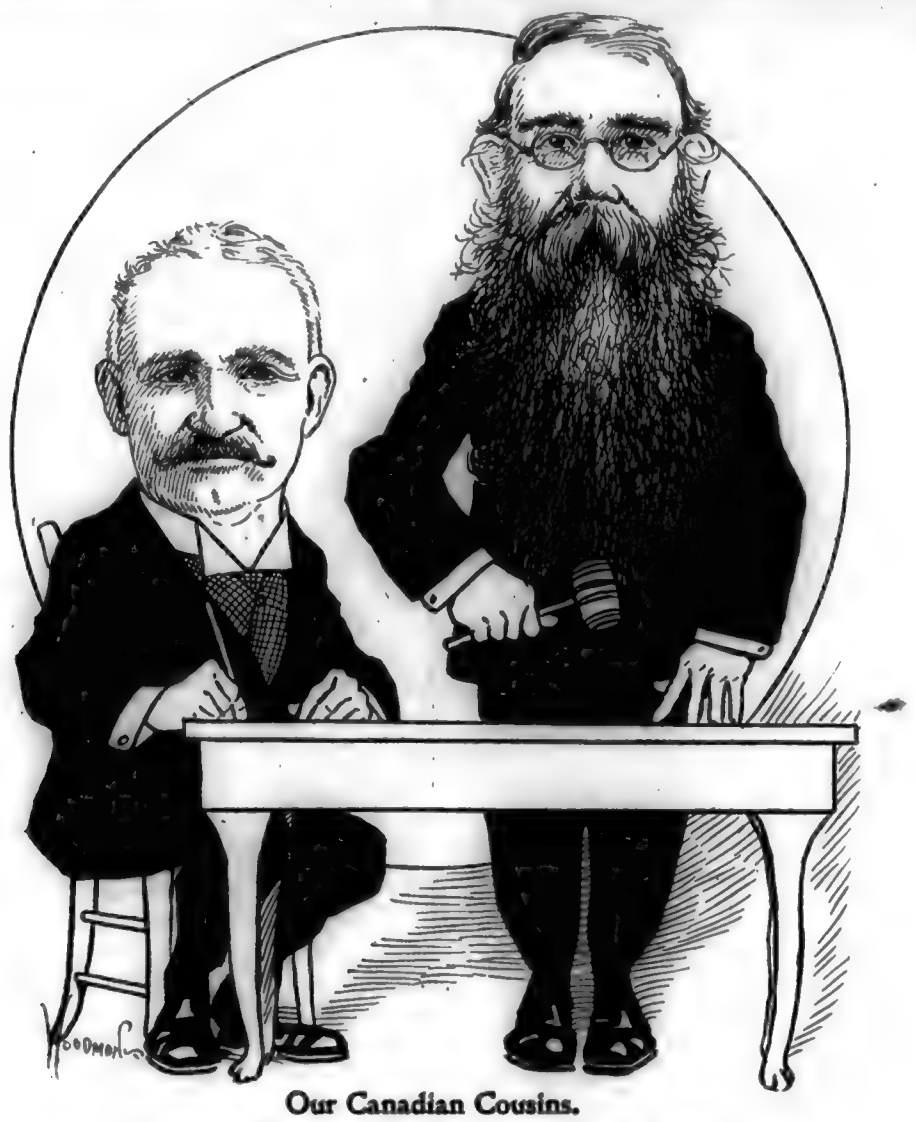
The Florists' Hail Association held its annual meeting at the Cataract House, Niagara Falls, August 18. Secretary John G. Esler made a report showing that insurance is now being carried on the equivalent of 29,093,556 square feet of glass. The losses last year, August 1, 1907, to August 1, 1908, were $20,006.99, including 138 losses, ranging from $1.19 to $1,776.97. The report of Treasurer Herr showed total receipts of $22,573.79, and management expenses of only $2,614.66. The reserve fund amounted to $19,900 August 1, 1908, and the emergency fund to $21,148.24.

J. A. Valentine was elected a director to succeed Geo. M. Kellogg.

The directors were authorized to levy an assessment whenever the emergency fund is below two per cent of the fixed value of all risks.



At a second meeting on Thursday the directors elected officers as follows: President, E. G. Hill; vice-president, H. H. Ritter; secretary, John G. Esler; treasurer, Jos. Heacock, to succeed Albert M. Herr. J. F. Ammann was elected director to succeed Mr. Heacock.

Wednesday's Session.

The Canadian Horticultural Association was expected to attend the session Wednesday morning, and a formal welcome had been provided for them, but they had not arrived at the opening hour, and the first order of business was the report of the committee on examination of state vice-presidents' reports, read by the secretary. The committee found that the state reports

Treasurer Beatty Brought the Money Bag.

Our Canadian Cousins.
(President John Walsh and Secretary A. H. Ewing.)

made clear that the general business depression of the last ten months has been less felt by our trade than in most other lines, that it was less apparent in the middle and western states than in the east and south, that those engaged in landscaping and other outdoor work almost wholly escaped the effects felt to a certain extent by those engaged in the cut flower line. It was apparent that all anticipate an early return to conditions prevailing a year ago and are making preparation for it. It was recommended that the vice-presidents' reports in future be read in open convention as well as printed in the proceedings, and the vice-presidents were urged to continue their efforts for the society, the careful selection of state vice-presidents being recommended because of the possibilities of good which lie therein. It was stated that "the reports show most clearly that in almost all parts of the country the ambitious growers have extended their glass areas far in excess of the actual demands for the product of the same, and the results have been most unfortunate in many instances, and we hope the costly lesson will serve to avert a repetition of the same mistakes of the growers in the future. Many of the reports show that the extravagance in the greenhouse building has abated considerably in the past year." The report was adopted.

A committee consisting of Wm. F. Gude, Edwin Lonsdale and Adam Graham, all ex-presidents, was appointed to send greetings to Ex-president Wm. R. Smith, who is ill in Washington.

Mr. Gude spoke of the passing of Ex-president William Scott since the last convention, and said that it would be fitting for the society to appoint a committee to erect a testimonial to his memory on behalf of the society and his friends, many of whom have expressed a desire to contribute to a fund for such a purpose. On his motion President Traendly appointed as such committee Fred Breitmeyer, Detroit; E. F. Winterson, Chicago; A. Gude, Washington; John Birnie, West Hoboken, N. J.; H. H. Ritter, Dayton, O.

W. J. Stewart moved, and H. B. Howard seconded, that a committee be appointed to prepare memorial resolutions for the late Alexander Wallace. The chair appointed as such committee Mr. Stewart, Mr. Howard and H. B. Beatty.

Prof. J. F. Cowell, of Buffalo, read a thoughtful essay on "Fertilizers and Fertility." This brought out a lively discussion, during which Prof. Cowell answered many questions. He was given an enthusiastic vote of thanks.

J. A. Peterson, president of the Cincinnati Florists' Society, invited the society to meet in Cincinnati in 1909, and was backed up by letters from the mayor and business interests of his city. E. G. Gillett also spoke for his home town and its facilities for caring for the convention.

Wm. Gammage spoke for Montreal, either for 1909 or 1910, and for the meeting of the C. H. A. and S. A. F. on the Canadian side, in the afternoon of Wednesday.

F. H. Vick came prepared to offer an invitation for Rochester in 1909, but said he found the sentiment for Cincinnati; that he asked the secretary to read the letters from the city executives, making them 1910 instead of 1909.

It was moved by Robert Craig that the secretary cast one unanimous vote for Cincinnati in 1909, which was carried with much enthusiasm.

Nomination of officers being in order, P. O'Mara made one of the happiest speeches in his life in presenting the name of J. A. Valentine, of Denver, for the presidency. I. C. Bertermann and a half dozen others seconded, amid much applause. There was no other nomination for the office. J. A. Peterson nominated E. G. Gillett, of Cincinnati, for the vice-presidency, with a number of seconds. Edwin Lonsdale nominated W. N. Rudd for secretary, seconded by John Birnie, E. V. Hallock and others. E. A. Scribner named J. F. Sullivan and Phil Breitmeyer seconded. John Westcott named H. B. Beatty for treasurer.

The president named Philip Breitmeyer, W. F. Sheridan and E. G. Gillett as judges of election.

Robert Craig, for the committee to consider recommendations in the president's address, reported favorably on the work of the National Council of Horticulture, but recommended that a larger proportion of the press notices consist of articles on the plants and cut flowers handled by florists generally. It was recommended that $150 be subscribed to the funds of the council. The report did not concur with the plan of plant registration proposed in connection with the United States Department of Agriculture, it being thought wisest to keep the work in the society's own hands. The committee believed the present date of meeting best for the greatest number. The committee favored a domestic parcels post.

A report from Prof. H. C. Irish, secretary of the National Council of Horticulture, stated that for the year ended August 15, 1908, the receipts had been as follows:

|---|---|
| Unexpended balance | $114.28 |
| Society of American Florists | 150.00 |
| American Association of Nurserymen | 200.00 |
| American Seed Trade Association | 200.00 |
| Wisconsin State Horticultural Society | 25.00 |
| Total | $689.28 |

The expenditures were all for the council's press service, as follows:

|---|---|
| Preparation of articles | $ 75.00 |
| Distribution (17 at $30 each) | 510.00 |
| Postage | 12.00 |
| Balance | 92.28 |
| Total | $689.28 |

Two articles to be sent out this fall will reduce the balance to $32.28.

A report by J. H. Burdett, the press agent, showed exactly what had been done with the set of seventeen articles, millions of circulation having been secured for them. Letters from editors were included to show the high esteem in which this strictly non-commercial literature is held by the press. The report included the detail affairs of the council.

Canadian Guests Arrive.

The belated delegation from Canada arrived before the close of the morning session Wednesday, headed by President Walsh and Secretary Ewing. The party of thirty or more was received with vociferous cheers and as soon as he could make himself heard President Traendly gave them an official welcome no less warm than the one received from the members. President Walsh returned the thanks of the C. H. A. for the reception its members had received and indorsed Mr. Traendly's remarks as to the recognition due the man who conceived the idea of having the two societies meet at opposite ends of the bridge on the same dates. He said all Canadian florists hope for an early meeting of the two societies with no river between.

Judges' Report.

Joseph Manda, for the judges on trades' display, made the following report:

Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., certificate of merit for new gladioli.

Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, certificate of merit for improved generator for hot water heating, for flue coupling and for large 1910 model boiler.

Herendeen Mfg. Co., Geneva, N. Y., certificate of merit for new sectional boiler.

Lord & Burnham Co., New York, certificate of merit for new round sectional boiler; cast-iron bench highly commended.

King Construction Co., N. Tonawanda, N. Y., certificate of merit for new sashbar attachment and for new truss construction; new pipe hanger highly commended.

J. A. Payne, Jersey City, N. J., honorable mention for skeleton rafter and round eave construction.

John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, certificate of merit for new ice-clearing hinge; honorable mention for gutter splice.

Camp Conduit Co., Cleveland, O., honorable mention for tile bench.

E. H. Hunt, Chicago, certificate of merit for the Louis Wittbold method of cement bench construction.

Standard Pump & Engine Co., Cleveland, certificate of merit for deep well pumping apparatus.

The Deming Co., Salem, O., sprayers, highly commended.

George Browne, Greenfield, Mich., American carnation support, highly commended.

George M. Garland Co., Des Plaines, Ill., honorable mention for improved drip conductor and concrete bench.

C. Winterich, Defiance, O., greenery stump highly commended.

It should be noted that only new things are considered by the judges, and then only when the exhibitor has made application in due form and season.

Hands Across the Waters.

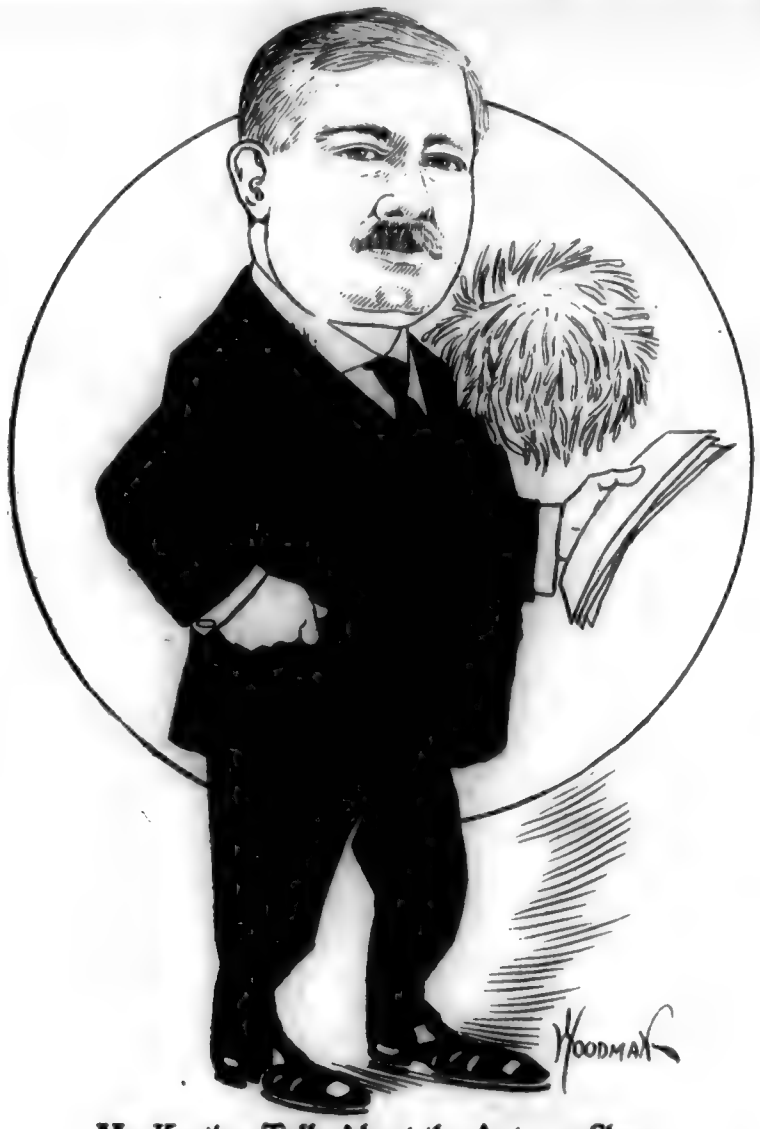
Wednesday afternoon the S. A. F. visited the Canadian Horticultural Association, in session at the Clifton house, just across the bridge, and were received with an open-handed cordiality that made the morning's welcome to the larger convention on the American side seem only lukewarm by comparison. The Canadians set the florists of the United States an example in more ways than one. In the first place, out of the small number engaged in the trade in Canada they have over seventy members, and the interest is so keen that sixty-six, or almost the entire membership, were present. Also, they believe in business before pleasure and began promptly and finished promptly, that they might devote themselves to the entertainment of their guests, who numbered several hundred. The hall was decorated with American flags and each visitor was given a small Canadian flag for his buttonhole. The mayor of Niagara Falls, Ont., made a splendid address of welcome, extending to all the freedom of the city and expressing especial pleasure at the presence of the enthusiastic Americans.

President John Walsh replied to the mayor on behalf of the C. H. A., and in its behalf also gave a formal welcome to the visitors.

President Traendly spoke for the S. A. F., and proved the truth of the old saying, that practice makes perfect, by making one of the neatest little speeches of a week of brilliant oratory.

Routine business was then in order, and President Walsh read his annual address to his society, congratulating the members on eleven years of good work. He said that the part taken by the association in having palms taken from the free list and having azaleas added to it has been subjected to considerable criticism during the past season. "It is not for me to say whether the association acted wisely or otherwise in its action at the time, but, judging from the different opinions expressed through the medium of our official organ, it is still an open question. It must be remembered that the association is established to raise up and carry forward all that appertains to horticulture, and in making the government to give protection to those interested in the growing of palms we were only doing our duty as we understood it at that time."



Reports by Secretary Ewing and Treasurer Simmers showed the society to be in a prosperous condition.

Adjourning at this point, special cars were found at the door to take all the visitors to the handsome restaurant in Queen Victoria park, where refreshments were served. President Traendly called for three cheers for the Canadians, and, not to be outdone at any point, even if outnumbered, John H. Dunlop, of Toronto, called for cheers for the S. A. F. The way those three score Canadians responded for a moment made the roar of the Falls sound like a gentle murmur. Practically the entire party was then taken to the plant of the Ontario Power Company, and down a shaft to a depth of 160 feet, where they saw the giant turbines converting a stream of water eighteen feet in diameter into 66,000 electrical horse-power.

Magnificent views of the Falls were had. Those who did not care to take this trip were taken back to the Clifton House, where other refreshments were in waiting. In the evening the Canadians came over to hear Mr. McFarland lecture, and on Thursday resumed their business. They had four papers, one on "Forcing Tomatoes," by W. S. Blair, of MacDonald College; "Care of Private Greenhouses," by William

Mr. McFarland, Advocate of Civic Beauty.

Mr. Kasting Tells About the Autumn Show.

Wilshire, of Montreal; "Nomenclature," by John Cavers, of Oakville, and "Grapes Under Glass," by Thomas Pewtress, of Pointe Claire. There also was a discussion between growers and retailers, led by George M. Geraghty and M. J. Lawrence.

The convention concluded Thursday night with the election of officers. On Friday the Canadians were guests of the Buffalo florists in company with the S. A. F.

Crusade Against Ugliness.

The society convened on Wednesday evening at the hall in the model factory of the shredded wheat biscuit, President Traendly in the chair, and a large audience present. The order of the evening was the address of J. Horace McFarland, on how florists may aid in the crusade against ugliness. It was an adaptation of a lecture Mr. McFarland has given before many audiences, and only related specially to florists in that they enjoy exceptional advantages for furthering the work of civic improvement and have rather more to gain from it than has anyone else. Mr. McFarland makes his points by contrasts, and showed a large number of splendid stereopticon views illustrating how different communities respect or neglect the æsthetic side of civic life. Speaking of the financial gain for those who maintain the model business establishments, he said every florist would find it would be a money-making proposition to keep neat, clean, well-cared-for greenhouses and grounds instead of retarding horticultural progress by the neglect which characterizes many places where good stock is grown. He urged each one to set an example for his own good as well as that of his community.

Thursday Morning.

A cablegram was received reading: Congratulations to President Traendly and the S. A. F., from the Shrewsbury Flower Show, C. H. Totty and William Duckham, Shrewsbury, England.

W. C. Barry, Rochester, presented a paper on "Outdoor Roses," which was received with hearty applause. Mr. Barry followed his formal address by an impromptu exhortation to the trade to use roses more extensively in their garden work. There was good discussion.

The recommendations of the executive board as to amendments to the constitution and by-laws were adopted. They merely corrected ambiguities in phraseology.

J. Otto Thilow presented a petition signed by forty-three exhibitors requesting that in future conventions the general public be excluded from the trades' display except on Thursday afternoon. Unanimously adopted.

A communication from P. Welch, of Boston, brought up the complaint of a shipper at Natick who alleged unwarranted advances in rates by the American Express Co. Referred to the legislative committee.

A communication from Edward Reid, Philadelphia, detailed his correspondence with the express companies and the interstate commerce commission and the reports of correspondence between the commission and the companies with regard to the allowance of twenty-five per cent in weight of shipments for ice. Referred to the legislative committee.

Communications from the Stiles Co., Oklahoma City, and the Pike's Peak Floral Co., Colorado Springs, raised the question of the lack of uniform success in shipments of cut flowers into the south. Mr. Reid said it raised the whole question of unreliable express service. The secretary pointed out that the gentleman wanted investigation of methods of packing to assure that the trade is not blameless before approaching other phases of the matter. Referred to the legislative committee.

American Rose Society.

The rose society held a meeting Thursday morning for the formal transfer of the presidency from Robert Simpson to August Poehlmann. The status of the society's finances was considered in an address by Mr. Poehlmann, who urged the support of all rose growers for the society and of all members for the officers. The next annual meeting and exhibition at Buffalo was discussed, the local details being left in the hands of Vice-president W. F. Kasting.

Thursday Afternoon.

The National Flower Show was the subject for Thursday afternoon, with a report of progress by W. F. Kasting, chairman of the committee; a report of his trips to Europe, by E. G. Hill, who has recently had the opportunity of meeting most of those from whom foreign exhibits are expected, and a statement by J. C. Vaughan as to the status of the local work in Chicago. There was a special meeting of the American Carnation Society, at which President M. A. Patten presided and during which the premium list was framed up and other matters arranged for the annual convention at Indianapolis in January.

There was no evening review, the time being given to dancing, sight-seeing and the usual annual good-fellowship gatherings.

Friday's Session.

The program for Friday consisted of papers as follows: "School Gardens," by L. C. Corbett, Washington; "State Florists' Associations and the Relation They Should Bear to the S. A. F.," by Albert T. Hey, Western Springs, Ill.; "Planting for Winter Effect," by George E. McClure, of Buffalo.

There also was an informal address on "What Illinois Is Doing for the Florist," by Herman Dorner, of Urbana.

At the close President Traendly was presented with a handsome testimonial and memento of the convention.

Entertainment Features.

The entertainments added much to the pleasures of sight-seeing. The Canadians did themselves proud. Thursday morning the Ladies' S. A. F. gave a reception and were taken through the wonderful shredded wheat factory. Each evening there was dancing at the International hotel. Friday afternoon was in the hands of the Buffalo Florists' Club, two steamers being chartered, one to take the main party for a ride on the river, the other to take the bowlers and friends to Buffalo for the national bowling contest.

The ladies' bowling contest was held Friday evening, to permit the ladies to enjoy the afternoon entertainment on the river, where luncheon was served.

The weather was ideal and the attendance held up throughout, the only unpleasant features being the lack of space for trade displays and the admission of the general public.

Election of Officers.

The election of President J. A. Valentine, Vice-president E. G. Gillett and Treasurer H. B. Beatty was unanimous.

For secretary, W. N. Rudd received 196 votes and J. F. Sullivan 76 votes.

The Trade Exhibits.

The following were those who had representation in the trade's display:

Florists' Supplies.

Reed & Keller, New York, had perhaps the best space in the exhibition, a straight-away table four feet wide and over ninety feet long down one entire side of the Cataract ballroom. With wall space to match, it made the exhibit show to full advantage, and yet it was crowded. Mr. Reed's special pride was a big model of Wright Bros.' aeroplane, to be trimmed with flowers. This firm's line is unique. Dozens of its special wire frames were shown, including a new one for the so-called shower or cascade wreath. There was a new light plant stand, a new plant tub, a little wire device for tilting plants in a decoration that can be folded up when not in use, leather-bound pot covers, a variety of birchbark plant receptacles, a big line of baskets, a gardenia collar a patent on which has been applied for, and a hundred and one vases and other articles of wood, wire, glass or pottery. Visitors were given a dainty little Japanese teapot as a souvenir.

M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, this year inaugurated a reform in that they left the staples at home and only brought the novelties. Pretty much everything in their exhibit, except some regular numbers among ribbons, was of this season's production; also three-fourths of the stock was of their own manufacture; they no longer depend on Europe. A specially attractive thing was a natural willow flower basket, the woven part coming up high on the handles at the sides. This was shown in many sizes and several shapes. There were many natural willow and bark effects in tall vases, some with smaller vase pockets on the sides. Square chip pot covers with high handles were in many colors and styles. Slender wicker Beauty vases with peculiarly rolled tops are specially graceful. A ribbon post of white wicker was a new idea. The ribbons included a new orchid ribbon and a combination violet and green in both violet ties and ribbon.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, made the largest display in their many years of convention going. The samples were far too numerous to permit mention of more than a few of the special features, but the showing of novelty baskets calls for a word; their variety was infinite. One that was shown in quantity was a low-priced so-called French basket that H. Bayersdorfer found in Italy this summer. There was a big line of new metallic designs. Prepared galax leaves were shown in four colors. There was a variety of log-form hanging baskets filled with prepared asparagus, maidenhair, etc., for decorative purposes. There was a large assortment of log goods for filling with plants. The popular toneware was shown in a new steel gray coloring. New Italian pottery was shown. The plant receptacles also included an 8-foot crocodile and a big turtle, the backs of which are hinged so the florist can fill the interior with stock like an ordinary plant hamper. There was a new 16-inch papier-mache plant stand and, neither last nor least, an airship swinging by an invisible wire, the pilot one of those rocking figures that nod the head and sway the body.

L. Baumann & Co., Chicago, had their usual line of metallic goods and wreaths of prepared leaves, also a number of novelties, chief among which is the electra immortelle in several colors, the process of preparing giving a brighter hue. They also had a prepared cycas leaf on which no paint is used. A variety of shapes of pine bark logs, baskets, boxes, etc., was shown, also a line of Hallowe'en novelties, papier-mache pumpkin-heads, etc. An artificial poinsettia is good, also natural prepared adiantum, asparagus, etc.

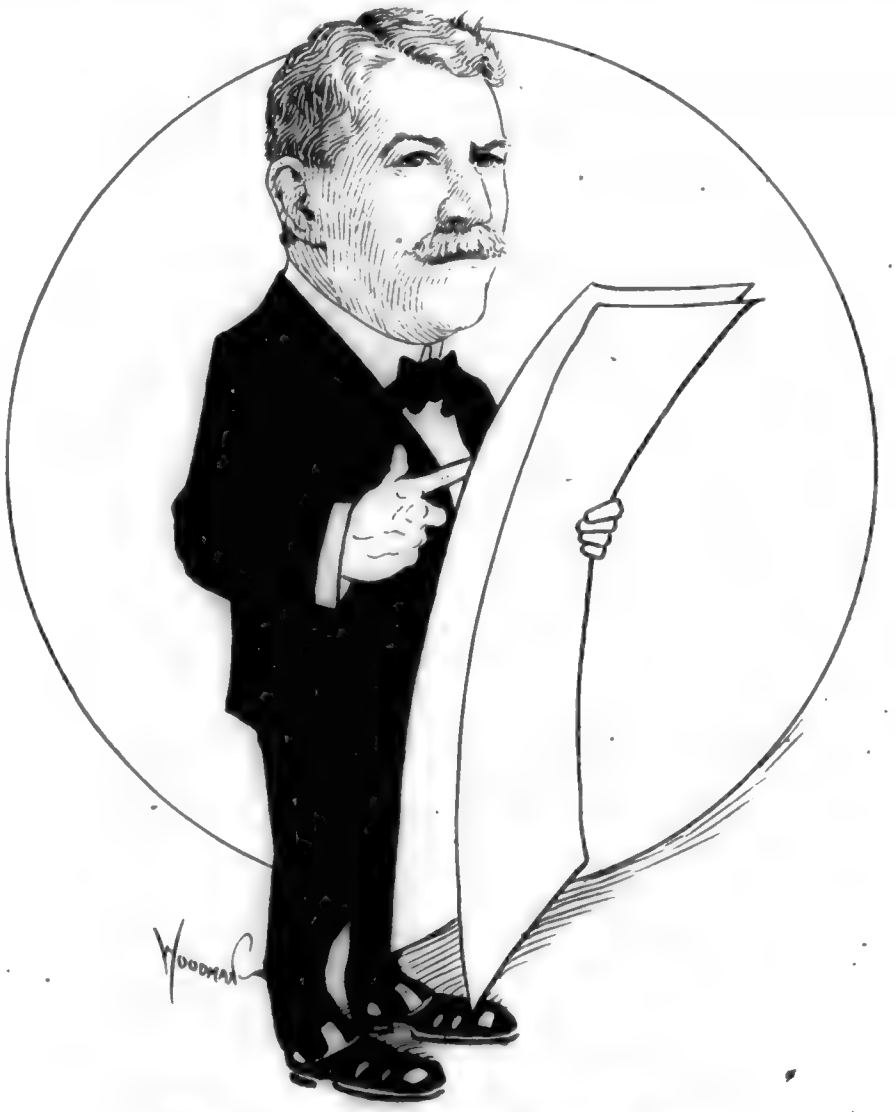
J. G. Neidinger, Philadelphia, showed a fine line of wax flowers and a number of Christmas specialties, including a most natural artificial poinsettia made up in a variety of special arrangements.

The Madison Basket Craft Co., Madison, O., made a fine show of art and craft baskets of willow, some of the forms being described as boat centerpiece, Flemish, two-story, turnip-shape, Tipperary carrying, etc. Pot covers of willow were also shown in odd forms.

Robert Kift, Philadelphia, showed his latest idea, inverted fish-globe bowls on bases, covering plant arrangements. Some were small and contained checkerberry sprays or small ferns, but others were large enough to hold crotons, etc. He also had cut flower holders. The exhibit attracted much attention.

The Ever Ready Pot Cover Co., Buffalo, had an attractive setting for a display of its ready-to-slip-on pot covers in all sizes and many colors.

H. D. Mann Co., Syracuse, N. Y., put up a line of supplies, including chiffons, ribbons, baskets, wheat sheaves, letters, and a fine lot of fern dishes and novelties in china and metal.



C. S. Ford, Philadelphia, made a display of immortelle letters and designs, also of Christmas novelties.

Ribbons.

The S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., Philadelphia, had its usually fine display of staple ribbons and a number of new things, among which was a violet ribbon in chameleon effects, an orchid ribbon and the now largely needed Killarney ribbon. They also had a narrow shaded taffeta in eight colors. The line included many chiffons, which are said to now be so cheap that the leading stores do not use them as freely as they once did, preferring something more exclusive. However, chiffons sell more largely than ever, for the smaller stores that never used ribbons now find they need them. Violet ties and pins were shown, also cycas leaves, etc. Visitors received a fine watch fob souvenir.

Wertheimer Bros. had a large display of ribbons, including a considerable number of novelties, one of which they like so well the visitor had to obey the sign and ask to see "It," for it was not on public view. When the real name is copyrighted it will be exploited. A new idea was a heavy corded corsage ribbon in several colors and two widths, also made up into violet ties with the same color combinations in the fringe. There was a chiffon with Grecian design and one where the color shades from delicate to dark. A wide, heavy ribbon with a ribbon and rose leaf figure woven in was striking. Two corsage dress protectors were good, one fan-shaped of gauzy silk and satin, the other real lace.

Schloss Bros., New York, exhibited a large line of ribbons and chiffons, but their stock is particularly strong on violet ties, of which they make a specialty. These latter included, among dozens of styles, one made up in shower effect in both ribbon and chiffon, all ready for attaching by the pin to the corsage bouquet. They also had a new lily of the valley design in chiffon in a wide range of colors, an imported "novelty" ribbon in many styles and some new wedding scarfs.

Wm. C. Barry Tells About Outdoor Roses.

Geo. E. McClure Tells How to Get Winter Effects.

Cut Flowers.

Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., had a table of nearly 200 vases of gladioli. As usual, the Groff hybrids predominate in the display of this grower, but there is a much larger proportion of named varieties than in previous years. One of the best is Victory, yellow. Taconic is a lively pink, with markings of deeper pink and of crimson. Meadowvale is a fine white. To any but a gladiolus specialist the number of varieties is confusing, but a great many visitors are seen jotting down the names of the ones that take their eye.

John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., made a fine display of cut blooms of gladioli, including some sixty varieties. This firm still thinks there is nothing to compare with America, and features it. A prominent position in the exhibit was given to what they call the "famous eight," which includes all the colors. The varieties are America, Blue Jay, Sulphur King, Contrast, Wild Rose, Harlequin, Blanche and Melrose. Visitors were given souvenir buttons.

Vick & Hill Co., Rochester, N. Y., put up a table of splendid asters, they having had a fine growing season. Some forty varieties were shown, embracing about all types and certainly all colors. Included were two new ones for 1909 and three more for 1910. This firm has originated six colors in the Daybreak class, the new one being named Lavender Daybreak. It and Early Semple's Pink go out this season. Next year Rose Daybreak, Salmon Daybreak and Yellow Daybreak go out. The names will be sufficient description to aster growers.

The Altimo Culture Co., Canfield, O., had a large display of cut gladioli and asters. The latter are the firm's specialty, grown both for seed and for cut flowers. They grow nearly 100 varieties for seed and cut from ten acres. The exhibit included all the varieties now in season. They have some new sorts of their own raising, soon to be put upon the market. Their large sign was a novelty, some lines of letters being made of their trade-mark label and others of aster seeds glued to the cloth.

E. E. Stewart, Rives Junction, Mich., staged a collection of cut gladioli, of best named varieties.

W. H. Shaw exhibited a new yellow dahlia grown for him by W. F. Patrick, of Millville, N. J. Of the decorative class.

James Vick's Sons, Rochester, put up a table of aster blooms grown by florists who had bought their seeds.

Bulbs.

Arthur T. Boddington, New York, had a comprehensive display of French and Dutch bulbs, everything that is included under those names. In addition there were cold storage speciosum, auratum and giganteum in fine shape, notwithstanding their long hibernation. Harrisii also was shown in 5 to 7 and 6 to 7 sizes. Seed of Christmas-flowering sweet peas was shown in glass bottles. Of course every lot of bulbs was a good sample and the exhibit well arranged. There were some monster speciosum album and some fine candidums. The exhibit also included the Ferguson sprayer and a vase of Gladiolus America.

H. F. Michell Co., Philadelphia, was shy one feature of its exhibit, its Dutch bulbs having been lost in transit, but it had Harrisii in several sizes, including the scarce ones. French bulbs also were shown, a full line. But the special feature of the display was a new electric thermostat that will raise the sleepers when the temperature in a greenhouse approaches the danger point, either up or down, whatever it is set to. The exhibit also included spawn, fertilizers, insecticides, sprayers, hose, cultivators and many other growers' requisites. Visitors received a pansy tape measure as a souvenir.

Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, had much its usual exhibit, occupying a large space, for it included a big line of sample plants. There were kentias in all sizes, from small plants for growing on to big specimens for decorating; araucarias, pandurata, cibotiums, cocos up to 6-inch, bays, small ferns for dishes, adiantums, dracænas, nephrolepises in variety and many other plants. French and Dutch bulbs were most attractively staged. Plant tubs, Peerless glazing points, Riverton brand hose and other growers' requisites were shown. One of the features of the exhibit was the attendance of the firm's entire staff of travelers.

Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, had a large table of commercial sizes in palms, nephrolepises, dracænas, pandurata, crotons, Lorraines, rubbers, araucarias, Phoenix Roebelenii, and many others, also a table carrying a full line of French and Dutch bulbs, Harrisii up to 7 to 9, and samples of bulbs from cold storage, everything carefully labeled.

Plants.

Robert Craig Co., Philadelphia, had four splendid tables of plants inside the hall where the sessions were held. They staged 100 crotons in seventy varieties. Two of the best were seedlings raised by Edwin Lonsdale, one of which was sold to the Craig Co. without a name and by it named for the originator. Not to be outdone, Mr. Lonsdale named the other for Robert Craig before he disposed of the stock. Large blocks of each will be ready for the Christmas trade. The exhibit also included Ficus pandurata, dracænas in variety, Otaheite oranges, Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, Nephrolepis Amerpohlii, etc., all, it is needless to say, well grown.

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., had two new ferns, one of them Superbissima, which is being sent out this season, the other Elegantissima compacta, to go out in 1909. Superbissima differs from all the other nephrolepises that have followed the firm's first sport of Boston, not only in form but in color, it being a much darker green. The fronds are heavily imbricated and the plant is decidedly compact. Elegantissima compacta is just what the name implies, a compact form of Elegantissima, the growth much like Scottii. It is a beautiful thing, especially when looked on from above. Both ferns were shown in all sizes. The exhibit also included French and Dutch bulbs, the latter verifying the Hollanders' reports that the season's crop is of excellent quality.

C. D. Ball, Holmesburg, Pa., had well grown kentias in various sizes and made up plants, also Ficus pandurata, latanias, arecas, dracænas, and pandanus. It was clean, healthy stock, in keeping with the exhibitor's reputation.

J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, staged Lorraine and Agatha begonias and a sport from the latter, also excellent Farleyense, pandanus, and dracænas, with a couple of fine plants of Asplenium nidus avis.

The Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J., made a large display of plants. There was a table of orchids, some big bays, Lorraine begonias, Farleyense, nephrolepises, kentias in several sizes, cocos small and large, araucarias, dracænas, ardisias and a large assortment of crotons in variety, as well as many other plants. The good color was a noticeable feature of all the plants in the exhibit.

Lager & Hurrell, of Summit, N. J., made a very large display of orchid plants, both freshly imported and established plants. A large number of pieces were staged, including about all the varieties possible to show under such conditions. Many were accompanied by color plates to show the bloom.

W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., had a big display of plants—too many to receive proper display in so crowded an exhibition. Besides a large number of commercial sizes in staple decorative plants he had a large number of new things, among which were the South Orange variety of Boston fern, Dracæna Rothiana, D. Mandiana, Asparagus elongatus, Rudbeckia subtomentosa lutea, dwarf Phlox Tapet Blanc, the golden privet, and a Cattleya gigas carrying seven fine flowers.

Christ Winterich, Defiance, O., had a "greenery stump," a frame for growing asparagus and small ferns. He had it filled with moss and planted with stock as in use.

Harry C. Reeser, Springfield, O., showed new Nephrolepis Springfield, called the most erect crested fern to date, to be disseminated in 1909. Also small stock of Hydrangea arborescens grandiflora, asparagus, crotons and roses.

Henry Eichholz, Waynesboro, Pa., exhibited seedling Carnation Alvina, a cross of seedlings on Lawson, dark pink, adapted to pot culture as well as for cut flowers. It is to be disseminated in 1909.

S. A. Anderson, Buffalo, had a fine table of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in several sizes, and poinsettias.

Lemuel Ball, Wissinoming, Pa., had a group of well-grown kentias, crotons, ardisias, panduratas, pandanus, etc. Some of the crotons were seedlings.

Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J., had a large exhibit, but were forced to be content with a place on the veranda, where there was not much chance for display. They had some big bays, some good-sized kentias, a large line of conifers in tubs, araucarias, pandanus, Bostons, cibotiums, cocos, and other well grown decorative plants. It was such an exhibit as should have had 200 square feet of good space, but they spoke too late.

The exhibit of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co. came all the way from New Orleans to get no farther than the porch. It included kentias, rubbers and latanias, probably the largest lot of samples the firm ever has sent to a convention, and the kentias especially were good. The made-up plants were fine.

Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, sent a variety of conifers in tubs, also a collection of acers, but were too late to secure space indoors.

Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, O., had an exhibit of field-grown roses on the veranda.

Jackson & Perkins were next to them with standard hydrangeas, also H. Japonica rosea, clematis and field-grown roses.

Building Material.

The Lord & Burnham Co., New York, exhibit was of special interest, as it contained innumerable new things and improvements on old ones. The new round sectional boiler has a deep firebox, with large crown sheet directly over the fire, with large opening for waterways into the side of the boiler, flue travel three times across the boiler, burns hard or soft coal. The standard sectional boiler was shown with a new hub section making a low connection possible for shallow cellars. With it was a special hub with prongs that make it possible to screw it up without large pipe tongs. A section of cast-iron bench was shown, strong, light, well drained, easy of erection and parts interchangeable, so that a bench of any size may be made. There was also a wood bench on single-fitting pipe supports with a spreader to space and strengthen cross boards in wide benches. Sash was shown with all joints blind mortise and double shoulder tenon; a round tie rod across the middle casts the minimum of shade. The special greenhouse white lead shown was of finely ground bone-dry lead, which takes more oil and therefore goes farthest; it is mixed with tank settled oil. A special elastic putty was shown. A close working ventilating apparatus for side walls had the sash hinged directly to the metal eave plate. A large line of fittings was shown, all designed to reduce the number of parts; a shelf bracket with clamp for either double or single arm; a pipe hanger shaped to reduce friction, for wood or iron posts; an extra deep spool pipe hanger; a purlin end bearer, and dozens of others. A wrought bar iron post is designed to resist rust in the ground. And all about was the new Handy Hand Book that tells all about all the things the firm makes.

The King Construction Co., North Tonawanda, N. Y., put up its new truss house. This was not a model, but a section of a 30-foot house, with all parts exactly as used in this style of construction. The section was of such size that it left room in the clear for a number of exhibits of special parts. The truss iron gutter was shown in two styles, illustrating wide spacing of posts. The special attachment of sashbars to the iron frame was displayed. There were racks of brackets, pipe hangers, etc., also a soil crushing machine. A section of new iron gutter showed a bar attachment that left the end of the bar free, also held the glass neatly overlapping the gutter to prevent ice breakage.

J. A. Payne, Jersey City, N. J., had a section of wide house which embodied four styles of construction: wood, semi-iron and iron frame, the latter with the Payne dripless steel bar and either small eave plates and straight glass, or curved eaves. One section of the house was trussed, the other supported by posts. The house was complete with all fittings, ventilating apparatus, etc. A Payne sectional hot water boiler was in the house, also an iron frame bench embodying the grip-tight fittings.

The John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, put up a model greenhouse, embodying many of its special features of construction. The new ventilator hinge was of much interest. By its use top ventilation is secured without the use of a header, the sash being attached to each bar in such a manner that the drip falls on the warm glass where it cannot cause trouble, as it does when it freezes on a header. The exhibit also included a new interlocking splice for gutters, purlins, eave plates and long bars.

The Foley Mfg. Co., Chicago, had a neat pavilion in which the Foley ventilating apparatus was shown in operation, also sections of gutters, etc., embodying the firm's ideas in greenhouse material. A complete section of greenhouse was shown in connection with the ventilating apparatus.

A. Dietsch Co., Chicago, had a table of greenhouse gutters with drip conductor attachments, also a model of ventilator showing the special header used by this firm.

Geo. M. Garland Co., Des Plaines, Ill., showed sections of the improved Garland iron gutter, posts and fittings, also a concrete greenhouse bench built in sections so that it is movable.

The Advance Co., Richmond, Ind., had a display, including the Advance ventilating apparatus, pipe carriers, couplings, brackets, etc.

Boilers and Traps.

Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, had two of its steel hot water boilers, one large size for big ranges, and one small one. These were fitted up complete and had the firm's shaking grate. It was an exhibit that weighed many tons. The boilers were painted red, not black like the others, and showed up strong. The Kroeschell generator was attached to one. The exhibit showed the Kroeschell method of boiler tube piping and the firm's method of tube coupling. Pipe tongs also were shown.

The Herendeen Mfg. Co., Geneva, N. Y., set up a row of four boilers, two the well-known sectional Furman, No. 307 and No. 362, and one a new style in which the fire travel is up the sides and back through the center. The fourth was a round sectional boiler.

C. B. Weathered, New York, had a large Spencer water tube boiler, for which the selling agency is held; also literature illustrating and describing greenhouse construction.

The Detroit Steam Trap Co., Detroit, had its trap in operation, showing how traps automatically keep the steam coils free from the water of condensation.

The Morehead Mfg. Co., Detroit, had on exhibition one of the well-known Morehead traps for returning to the boiler the water of condensation in steam pipes in greenhouses. The trap works as well when the boiler is on a level with the pipes as when it is in a pit.

E. Hippard Estate, Youngstown, O., set up a Standard steam trap for returning condensation to steam boilers.

Pumps.

The Standard Pump and Engine Co., Cleveland, consummated a long cherished plan by showing two of its pumps in operation. It is the first time in recent years that the conditions surrounding the trade's display would permit of operating gas or gasoline engines in it. They showed a double-acting deep-well pumping engine and a double-acting shallow-well pumping engine, each taking water from a well and working directly into a line of the Wittbold watering system set up outside on the lawn.

Concrete and Tile Benches.

E. H. Hunt, Chicago, had a line of To-bak-ine products, fertilizers, hose, the Success sprayer and the Wittbold specialties for which the sales agency is held. There was a good length of concrete bench, showing in its various stages the entire process of building this bench with the use of the Wittbold clamps and leg molds. This was the center of much interest, for it showed better than could pages of printed matter just how to use these specialties. Many growers still think that Hunt sells the whole bench and not merely the leg molds and clamps for holding the bench mold together, in spite of the circulation of much carefully prepared printed matter. The exhibit also showed a section of the Wittbold mechanical watering apparatus in operation on the lawn, and the Wittbold plant stand in use for a decoration of Wittbold kentias and Boston ferns. Invert the stand and it becomes a vase for long-stemmed flowers.

The Wilson-Hoyt Co., Short Hills, N. J., put up a section of concrete-steel bench. One-half showed the completed bench, the other half the metal mold in place for filling in the concrete. Drainage is provided by means of a ridge in the mold that leaves half-inch openings seven inches apart practically the entire length of the bench. They take contracts for putting up completed benches.

The Camp Conduit Co., Garfield building, Cleveland, O., put up an "Everlasting" tile bench. This consists of legs and bottom pieces of hard tile, so molded that the pieces are interlocking. The side piece is of wood. They also showed a section of bench of split tiles without the interlocking feature. Bate Bros., the Cleveland growers, who formerly sold a bench of this character, sold out to the Camp Co., who have the facilities for making the tiles in quantity. It is said twenty-two carloads of this bench have been sold in the last two months.

Pots and Pottery.

The Ionia Pottery Co., Ionia, Mich., had its usual line of flower pots, bulb pans and lawn vases; also a line of standard wire designs, which is a recent departure for this house and one which they think will work in well with pots, as a large proportion of the buyers of pots also make up funeral work.

The Roseville Pottery Co., Zanesville, O., had a large display of jardinieres, pedestals, umbrella stands and similar goods in glazed pottery. The exhibit occupied large space and was well spread out, so that a large number could examine it at one time.

The Whilldin Pottery Co., Philadelphia, exhibited its full line of standard pots, all regular sizes being included, and some special pots.

W. H. Elverson Pottery Co., West New Brighton, Pa., had a large line of standard pots.

A. H. Hews & Co., North Cambridge, Mass., had an exhibit of the line of pots made continuously since 1765.

Peters & Reed Pottery Co., Zanesville, O., showed smooth red burned flower pots and a line of jardinieres.

Wm. P. Craig, Philadelphia, staged a table of Italian pottery in a variety of shapes and sizes, and a couple of fine plants of Amerpohlii adjoining the exhibits of the Robert Craig Co.

J. Ginther's Sons Co., Buffalo, had an exhibit in iron lawn vases and settees.

Detroit Flower Pot Mfg. Co., Detroit, had a display of round bottomed red pots.

The Zanesville Stoneware Co., Zanesville, O., had a table for a display of its green glazed flower vases.

Carnation Supports.

The Heim Support Co., Connersville, Ind., had a regulation greenhouse bench fitted with the Heim carnation support and the safety clips for attaching wire stakes to the guide wires. Both these devices are well known to the trade and need no description.

Geo. E. Browne, Greenfield, Mich., had an exhibit of his new carnation support called American, on which he was given a patent March 14, 1907. The special feature is an expanding ring.

H. D. Seele & Sons, Elkhart, Ind., showed tieless plant stakes, trellises and supports.

I. L. Pillsbury, Galesburg, Ill., had a table for his carnation staple and showed blooms with split calyxes mended with his device.

O. J. Jawort Co., Wausau, Wis., had a section of bench equipped with the Common Sense carnation support.

Kring Bros., Fairbury, Ill., exhibited a new carnation support such as they have made for use in their own greenhouses.

Paper Boxes.

The Edwards Folding Box Co., Philadelphia, had a line of cut flower boxes, full telescope and half telescope.

Hummel & Downing Co., Milwaukee, showed their line of cut flower and design boxes, and violet boxes in staple and novelty styles.

W. J. Boas, Philadelphia, had a large line of cut flower boxes, the printing showing the names of some of those who give him their business.

Miscellaneous.

The Crowl Fern Co., Millington, Mass., showed hardy cut ferns, laurel roping and other evergreen decorations.

H. J. Smith, Hinsdale, Mass., had a table of hardy cut ferns and other green goods.

Benj. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y., had a line of his specialties, including a barrel of his special greenhouse paint, Twemlow's glazing putty, slug shot, etc.

H. E. Wilson, Madison, N. J., had an exhibit of his insecticide, called Plant Oil, also of rubber hose.

The Larkin Soap Co., Buffalo, had a table of sulpho-tobacco plant and animal soaps.

F. O. Pierce Co., New York, made an exhibit of Mastica, Mastica machines and paint.

J. Horace McFarland Co., Harrisburg, Pa., exhibited advertising literature, horticultural photographs, etc., including the new process of color photography.

D. B. Long, Buffalo, had an exhibit of florists' printed matter.

W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, made an exhibit of wire work, etc.

A. T. De La Mare Printing and Publishing Co., New York, had a table of horticultural books, etc.

O. G. Koenig, St. Louis, exhibited a corner lock for hotbed frames, invented by F. L. Doubrava. By means of it the frames can be quickly taken apart for storage when not in use.

Niagara Sprayer Co., Middleport, N. Y., exhibited sprayers.

W. F. Kasting Co., Buffalo, exhibited a pulverizer for soil, sod and fertilizer.

The Deming Co., Salem, O., made an exhibit of sprayers.

The following were represented by signs: Buffalo Cut Flower Co., Buffalo; E. F. Winterson Co., Chicago; Florists' Review, Chicago; Traendly & Schenck, New York; Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, Carnation O. P. Bassett; A. L. Randall Co., Chicago; American Florist Co., Chicago; Yuess Gardens Co., Newburgh, N. Y.; E. H. Hunt, Chicago; Michigan Cut Flower Exchange, Detroit.

Ladies' S. A. F.

The first meeting of the Ladies' S. A. F. was held Tuesday at the hall of the Shredded Wheat Co., President Mrs. W. J. Vesey in the chair. Mrs. Chas. H. Maynard is secretary; Mrs. E. A. Scribner, treasurer; Miss Meinhardt, first vice-president; Mrs. A. F. Sibson, second vice-president. The attendance numbered nearly fifty. The adjourned meeting was held in the same hall at 10 a. m. on Thursday.

The secretary's report showed a membership of 117. Sincere regrets, because of inability to attend, were telegraphed by Mrs. U. G. Virgin, of New Orleans. Mrs. Dilger suggested the appointment of an introduction committee to further sociability among the lady members and the visiting ladies as well. The value of acquaintance and more thorough fraternity was eloquently portrayed. The natural diffidence of the gentler sex and the value of reciprocity received due comment. Miss Fulmer spoke against the necessity of any committee, the society pin forming a sufficient introduction, and her opinions prevailed.

The treasurer, who has been indefatigable in her labors in behalf of the society, reported a balance of $118 from last year's balance after all expenses had been paid, and further receipts making the amount now in the treasury $184.50. The next meeting of the society, after the close of the present convention, will be held in Chicago, at the National Flower Show.

A conference committee to suggest important duties at that time was appointed: Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. Hauswirth and Mrs. Kuhl.

The holding of a special ladies' day at the convention of 1909 was left to the executive committee.

Mrs. Vaughan spoke for the National Flower Show and the wisdom of giving a prize on that occasion, moving that $50 be appropriated for that purpose from the society's treasury. This was unanimously approved. Mrs. Maynard generously guaranteed that, if the expenses of the year amounted to more than the surplus, she would furnish the prize from her own exchequer.

A discussion on the form of prize to be given caused much good-natured discussion. Some of the ladies suggested, naturally, a loving cup; others $50 worth of spoons, while all agreed the prize must be something the winner would always cherish. Mrs. Fisher, Miss Fulmer, Mrs. Vesey and Mrs. Phillips gave valuable advice, beautiful, but useless, things being severely criticised.

The vote to give $50 in gold was a unanimous rising demonstration, of which the male element may be justly proud.

Nominations for president for the coming year resulted in two contests, which will be decided Thursday morning. For president, Mrs. Vaughan and Mrs. Vesey; for treasurer, Mrs. Herr and Mrs. Scribner. The balance of the officers were reëlected, including the efficient board of directors. Thursday morning Mrs. Maynard announced a reception at the Shredded Wheat building for all the members and their friends, including husbands, sweethearts, etc. Miss Fulmer demonstrated rare executive ability and parliamentary knowledge in the discussions. Strict adherence to law and order characterized the society's deliberations, and opportunity to be present and witness the harmony and ability of the ladies was quite an inspiration.

At the meeting Thursday morning the Ladies' S. A. F. selected Mrs. J. C. Vaughan president and Mrs. A. M. Herr treasurer, other officers being reëlected.

Those Present.

With so large an attendance, and particularly with a convention held where so many were but a short rail or trolley ride from their homes, and ran in only for the day, it is impossible to give a

Base Ball—Buffalo Wins 8 to 3.

The ball game away out at the college grounds drew a fair crowd of ladies and gentlemen when the other attractions are considered. Until the seventh inning the score was a tie. Then the All-Americans could not stand the nerve strain and the Scotts and their allies got busy. When the smoke cleaned the shot was a 100 to 1 and Vice-president McClure won his bets with ease. There was much strenuosity and excitement and the mixed team played fine ball under the handicap of lack of practice together. The grounds were not in perfect condition, but the weather was made to order.

FERTILIZERS AND FERTILITY.

BY JOHN F. COWELL, BUFFALO, N. Y.

[Read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.]

Few phases of scientific investigation are of greater interest, or hold forth more promise of profitable results, than the studies which are being made in regard to the fertility of our soils and their conservation. To the gardener the subject is of prime importance, whether his work be in the open field or under a roof of glass; whether engaged in the growing of the primary food products, or in the production of materials for decoration and the expression of the higher æsthetic feelings of mankind.

That we are still in the experimental stage of agriculture can hardly be denied, though we are slowly approximating to a scientific basis. Theory and practice are often at variance, probably from a misunderstanding of the meaning of the facts before us. These differences will in time be eliminated, and our practice will constantly become more exact. That we still have many things to learn about our soils and their relation to plant life goes without saying, but at the present time I think we are not all making the best use of the knowledge which has accumulated on these subjects.

In this paper will be found little that is original, but rather an attempt to collate and place before you some of the more striking facts and theories current at this time.

Some Fundamental Facts.

In these days of intensive gardening, all questions relating in any way to the supply and assimilation of the elements of fertility are of vital interest, as upon their correct solution depends the final profit or loss.

In order that we may discuss these matters more intelligently, let us briefly review some of the fundamental facts which underlie the subject, as well as some modern theories of fertility and assimilation, and the relation of various factors which enter into the problem of plant growth.

The great bulk of plant tissue is made up of starch, cellulose and water, with a small amount of proteids or albuminoids. These, reduced to their simplest terms, mean carbon, oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen, which, together with potash, phosphorus and a little lime and sulphur, make up the list of essentials. Carbon, oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen in gaseous condition are everywhere present in the atmosphere, while potash, phosphorus and lime and sulphur are found to a greater or less extent in most soils, and are the elements which become exhausted, and have to be renewed. Of these latter elements sulphur may be omitted, as it, like some other elements of minor importance, is usually found in sufficient quantity.

The Tripod of Fertility.

Of these substances the most expensive, and at the same time the most evanescent, is nitrogen. The soil will not hold it; it is here today and there tomorrow. It is inordinately fond of fresh fields of activity, and so impatient of confinement that it has to be constantly kept at work and watched lest it escape into the atmosphere from whence it came, or enter into some combination which secretes it and deprives the plant of its services.

The usual sources of supply for fertilizing purposes are animal substances,

Mrs. Chas. H. Maynard.
(Secretary Ladies' Society of American Florists)

stable manure and natural deposits of nitrates.

Potash is a more stable element, though likely to be lost by leaching, and is obtained in commercial quantities from wood ashes and from the nitrates and sulphates.

Phosphoric acid is commonly bought in the shape of ground phosphoratic rock, from bone, horn, hair, from fish and from basic slag. These three elements have been called "the tripod of fertility."

Complete Fertilizers.

A so-called complete fertilizer, as prepared by the manufacturers, will contain, we will say: Fifty pounds of available nitrogen, worth, at 19 cents per pound, $11.40; six per cent, or 120 pounds, of available phosphoric acid, worth, at 5 cents per pound, $6; five per cent, or 100 pounds, of available potash, worth, at 5 cents per pound, $5, making a total cost of $22.40 per ton, of which more than one-half is represented by the nitrogen.

From whatever source these elements are obtained, they must be soluble in water in order to be available to the crop. Potash and phosphoric acid can be applied to the soil at any time, and the loss from leaching or otherwise is not very serious, while any surplus beyond the present needs of the plants will be retained for future use; but nitrogen applied in excess is, as a rule, nitrogen wasted, and, as we have seen, this is an expensive fertilizer. This leads us to the theory, which has the support of good practice, that nitrogen should be applied in small quantities and often, rather than enough at one time to perfect the crop. There are combinations of nitrogen, however, as in stable manure and animal matter, which require time to unlock and render available. Such compounds may be applied in larger quantities some time previous to the planting of the crop, or a time allowance made to enable the proper forces to tear the combinations apart and render the nitrogen fit for assimilation.

The high price of nitrogenous fertilizers has caused careful search to be made for the purpose of finding cheaper sources of supply than those above mentioned.

Partnerships in Plant Life.

To understand the reasons for some of the studies which have been made with this end in view, it will be well to review some of the theories of the inhalation of nitrogen and the forces which are supposed to play an important part in the reduction of nitrogenous compounds and the secretion of the product within the plant tissues. Some of the most interesting chapters in the history of plant life are those dealing with the relationships between widely different organizations where a partnership is formed for the mutual benefit of the parties concerned. It was formerly supposed that all plants growing upon others were parasites, or, to use the somewhat "yellow" language of Grant Allen, they were committing "robbery and murder." When, nearly forty years ago, Frank made the startling assertion that "the beech is a parasite on a fungus," he did not mean just what we would ordinarily understand by parasite, but that the beech was simply dependent for its supply of nitrogen upon a mycorrhiza or root fungus.

Modern investigations have shown that many of the associations are far from being criminal, and that the two members are mutually dependent on one another for existence. To this peculiar arrangement has been given the name of symbiosis, which, being interpreted, means "a living together." Most plants of the higher orders are dependent for their supply of nitrogen on that which is soluble in water, while some of the lower forms are able to extract it from its compounds, or, as some claim, from the atmosphere, a statement, however, which needs proof. Of the lowly forms which possess these powers of nitrification, perhaps the most familiar are the maligned bacteria. To these simple micro-organisms we probably owe most of the reduction of organic remains, the breaking down of complex, and the formation of simpler soluble ones.

Benefits From Bacteria.

It is maintained that a symbiotic relationship exists between our red clover and the nitrifying bacteria, and that the little swellings or tubercles which are ordinarily to be found on the roots of the clover are the homes of the bacteria; that the bacteria supply the nitrogen necessary for the growth of the clover, and, in return, take from the clover such elaborated food as they may require.

Such tubercles may be found on the roots of beans, peas, or, in fact, on almost any of the leguminous plants.

Whether the bacteria can take nitrogen from the air may well be doubted, but it is a pretty well established fact that they can extract nitrogen from combinations that are beyond the power of higher plants. So firmly has the belief in this association been established that it has become the practice to inoculate the soil with the proper bacteria when legumes are to be grown on soil where their natural symbionts are lacking.

This inoculation is often made by the transfer of some soil from a fertile field to the new location. One can obtain on the market pure cultures of bacteria suitable for various crops, and sow with the seed. That the use of these cultures is not uniformly successful does not disprove the theory, but rather indicates that the preparations are at fault or that they are not properly applied.

Clover as a Fertilizer.

Long before these relationships were known, the fact was realized that if a good crop of clover could be grown upon a field it could safely be relied upon to grow a good crop of corn or wheat the succeeding year, and this notwithstanding the fact that the clover had been cut and removed in the form of hay, the extensive root system of the clover, with its stored nitrogen, being sufficient for the succeeding crop.

The action of fungi of the unicellular type in breaking down organic compounds has long been recognized, and put to use in many industries—witness the yeasts and other ferments of this class—but their mutual relationships with the higher plants are subjects of quite recent inquiries. To recur to the statement in regard to the fungus and the beech, we find that in this case we have a fungus of a higher and much more complex organization, a fungus which, instead of being a microscopic unicellular plant or a collection of similar cells, is really a structure having organs highly differentiated and making in some stages of its growth a conspicuous object to the naked eye. Here, too, it is believed that a symbiotic relationship is maintained, and that the mycorrhiza, in return for the nitrogen secreted for the higher plant, takes its pay in starch or sugar which it is unable to make for itself.

Investigation shows many cases of symbiosis between plants containing chlorophyl and those which are without it. Among our cultivated plants which depend more or less upon the help of the root fungus, we may mention some of the orchids, gerardias, polygalas, some ericaceous species and many others. If you will examine some of these plants, or, to be more exact, if you will place a thin section of their root on the stage of a microscope having a magnifying power of about 900 diameters, you will be able to trace the mycelium of the fungus investing with its anastomosing fibers the outside of the root and penetrating through the epidermal cells of the host.

The Work of Ferments.

In speaking of the ferments we are prone to infer that the work is all done by the micro-organisms already referred to, but it seems that still more important in the economy of plant as well as animal life are the unorganized ferments or enzymes. It now seems likely that these enzymes may have an important bearing on the fertilizer question. Just what the nature of these substances may be, at the present time we do not know, as it is difficult to collect them in a pure state. That they are highly nitrogenous, however, is generally believed. But it is their action which concerns us most. It is said that these ferments bring about changes by their mere presence, or at least without loss of their own substance. That is what is called catalytic action, just as the presence of certain metals in a solution will precipitate other metals.

These enzymes exist in all parts of the active tissues of the plant, and are found in abundance upon the growing point of roots. They evidently have the power of reducing the starches, fats and proteids to forms which can be directly assimilated and used in the building up of tissues. In fact, it appears that it is to the work of these enzymes that the bacteria and other simple forms of vegetable life owe their power of rendering up in such a remarkable degree the nitrogen contained in albuminoids and other compounds. The enzymes have been studied principally as they appear within the plant body. They are not themselves organized, and are products, not parts, of the vegetable cell. They can bring about their characteristic changes as well outside as inside the body; and an interesting question is how far these substances may extend outside the plant body, and if it is not possible that in some genera of plants the work of collecting nitrogen from the soil is due directly to them without the intervention of the fungus.

Physical Condition of Soil.

In discussing the fertility of the soil, there are other factors than the presence of chemical elements necessary for plant food. The food must be accessible, there must be a supply of water for solvent purposes, and there must be a sufficient amount of heat to encourage the action of the dissolving agencies. The physical condition of the soil plays a very important part in determining the fertility of the soil. Air and water are not usually spoken of as fertilizers, but they, nevertheless, are vital to the success of the plant. The soil must be of such character that the air can circulate among the particles and come in contact with the rootlets. The soil must also be in such condition that it will hold a certain amount of water, and it must be of such consistency that the root hairs can visit every little grain of earth in search of nutriment.

The soil must not be so fine as to obstruct the free passage of air and water, nor so coarse as to allow either to flow through in currents. What we need is a happy medium, where the spaces between the soil particles are such that a mere film of water encircles every one, or what is called hygroscopic holding of moisture. In this condition the soil is capable of absorbing and holding the greatest possible amount of nutrients in a readily accessible manner. In this condition, too, it will maintain a more equable temperature and become a more comfortable home for nutrifying bacteria. This physical condition of the soil is brought about by tillage, and it is frequently the case that proper handling of the soil makes all the difference between success and failure.

Reasons for Loss of Fertility.

So much for some of the factors which we have to consider in increasing the fertility of our fields, and now let us consider briefly some of the causes of loss of fertility. We are apt to attribute loss of fertility entirely to absence of available plant food. That such is not always the case will be evident to anyone who has had long experience in gardening operations.

In the originally fertile farm lands of central New York, where a rotation of corn and wheat and clover, or wheat, clover and grass, or something of that kind, was pursued for long years, we heard complaints of lessening fertility. The land would no longer grow clover, or, as the farmers expressed it, the land was "clover sick." This land still grows a fair crop of corn or potatoes or the grasses, but clover must be given a rest and is uncertain.

After a few years' rest, probably, the clover grows again. There are failures of other crops, it is true, failures which are often, and perhaps justly, attributed to exhaustion of the soil, or at least of certain of the elements. The theory is that the land must be rested or a rotation pursued which will allow of a recovery or a renewal of the missing element. It is such occurrences which have been responsible for our systems of rotation of crops.

Is the Soil Exhausted, or Poisoned?

The unsatisfactory part of this exhaustion theory is that, no matter how much fertilizer we may supply, we cannot get certain crops to succeed themselves annually through a long series of years and give satisfactory returns, while certain other crops can be grown annually on the same plot for a generation and increase in fruitfulness from year to year. In looking for an explanation which explains, we naturally recall the fact that all living things in the course of their growth use only certain portions of the crude material which is taken into their systems, and reject other portions more or less changed in character. These rejected, waste or by-products may be thrown off from the organism or packed away in some unoccupied corner. These refuse portions are often useful as a food for other organisms, though some are very poisonous, particularly to the organism which produced it. You will doubtless remember that the bacteria and other micro-organisms are notorious in this direction; they not only give off refuse matters which are excessively poisonous to some other forms of life, but in the end they destroy the bacteria from whence they came.

These secretions of waste matters have been given the name of ptomaines, and instances of severe illness or even death from the use of ice cream or cheese containing these ptomaines will perhaps be more or less familiar to you.

Now, it is possible that our "clover sickness" and other like occurrences are due, not to exhaustion, but to the presence in the soil of these ptomaine poisons. Perhaps the clover itself may not be the direct victim, but the nutrifying bacteria so necessary to the growth of the plant may be killed by their own toxic refuse. If this is true of clover, it may be true of other plants which decline to succeed themselves for any length of time.

If this theory of ptomaines is tenable, we have an explanation of a puzzle. There is, of course, a great difference in various plants in the character of their secretions. The Rothamsted experiments showed, if I remember rightly, that wheat could be grown on the same land for at least twenty years and the yield be on the increase.

Some other crops are known to do well year after year in the same soil, a fact well known to gardeners, and I can recall one instance of rye being grown on the same field for twenty successive years without any apparent loss of vigor.

Renewal of Greenhouse Soil.

Regarding the behavior of many of the flower crops which are grown under glass, we have but comparatively few facts available. The general impression is, I think, that they will not do their best unless the soil is entirely renewed each season. Whether this is due to poisoning of the soil or to the exhaustion of some food element, or to a change in the physical character of the soil, has not been determined, as far as I am aware. If the loss of fertility of the soil in our greenhouses is due to physical changes, it is a serious matter, for it means the removal and renewal of the soil once or twice a year, an operation both laborious and costly. In the broader practice of field work these losses can be more readily corrected; at least, we do not have to move our soil to the crops, but can move our crops to the soil, a comparatively easy matter. Fertility can be maintained by proper rotation and the recuperative forces of nature.

We stand in need of more work in the investigation of the losses in our greenhouse work, and it seems to me that the experiment stations might help us in that direction.

Horticulturists have, it is true, done a great deal of experimenting along these lines, but most of the work has not been done in such a manner as to render the results of any great value to the public; nor have there been records kept of the work which are available for study and comparison.

These are some of the factors which we have to consider when attempting to increase the fertility of our gardens. We do not know just what is the best thing to do; we must still experiment a little. Fertilizers do not act just the same every time, but we must continue to use them, and our experience is a pretty good, though often costly, guide in their application.

We must remember that fertilizers do not always mean fertility; we need good tillage, good cultivation and common sense mixed with them.

It seems to me that we stand today upon the threshold of the door which will not only lead us to a vastly better understanding of the processes of assimilation, but also to a more perfect knowledge of the economical production and use of fertilizing elements.

DAYTON, OHIO.

Condition of Business.

Practically there was no change in last week's business as compared with our former report. Trade would be quiet some days and brighter the next, thus making the average business good during the week—that is to say, good for this season of the year, funeral work being its main support.

Roses can be had in any quantity and they are exceptionally good considering the extremely hot weather with which they have to contend. Asters are plentiful, and also good in quality, but can be had at almost any price, the best selling at $1.50 per hundred. Carnations from the new plants are becoming a little more numerous each day, but of course the market is by no means crowded with them. Longiflorum at present is a little scarce.

Weather Conditions.

A temperature of 104 degrees in the shade—such was the condition of the climate in Dayton August 16. Those of our tradesmen who left for Niagara on that date may consider themselves lucky to be out of it. Good rains still continue to be a necessity.

Various Notes.

Several of the Richmond, Ind., brothers joined our Dayton delegation and left August 15 for the convention. On August 16 they were guests of the Detroit florists.

John Boehner has just returned from a trip to Kenton, O.

Katherine Young is visiting friends at Franklin, O.

Wm. Kiefaber and family are enjoying a two weeks' outing at Atlantic City.

Alice Le Baron and Florence Culver, of Chicago, are the guests of Ruby Bartholomew.

Wm. Ritter and wife returned August 16 from the Thousand Islands, where they had a most enjoyable time.

La Crosse, Wis.—The La Crosse Floral Co. has completed its new greenhouses and has planted 5,000 roses and 12,000 carnations. The firm is composed of C. E. Schaefer and W. R. Ellers, both of whom were with the Salzer Seed Co. for a number of years.

Chrysanthemum Golden Glow.
(Photographed August 12, 1908.)

CHRYSANTHEMUM GOLDEN GLOW

It seems that each season chrysanthemums come in earlier and earlier, and it is only natural that the growers should strive to be early, because the early stock has brought excellent prices for several years. Monrovia, coming in at about the time the asters went out, has paid the growers handsomely.

This year the C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, has set the pace for early mums with Golden Glow, which was ready early in August. The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of some blooms cut August 12. The picture gives a good idea of the character of the stock, which is reported to have sold excellently. The Pollworth Co. says its chrysanthemum season this year will last from early August until Christmas.

STATE FLORISTS' ASSOCIATIONS.

By Albert T. Hey, Western Springs, Ill.

[Read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.]

I have been called upon to talk to you this morning on "State Florists' Associations, Their Value and the Relation They Should Bear to the S. A. F." I believe the best interests of this great society can be better accomplished and more fully developed by systematizing its work, and the greatest good to the largest number can be secured through state societies that can individually take up the work and develop what is most suitable for their localities.

To give you an idea of what these societies can do, I will give you a brief review of the work accomplished by the Illinois State Florists' Association.

The Illinois State Society.

After a year of preliminary work the present organization was formed, and elected J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill., as its first president. From that time the work was carefully planned and the first important step undertaken was to secure a definite and separate department for floriculture at our Illinois Experimental Station, believing this would bring further benefits in its train.

The next question was how to raise funds to carry out the work. The executive committee set to work; a bill was framed and presented to the Illinois legislature, becoming a law and giving us $15,000 for the purpose stated.

The bill provides for an advisory board appointed by the president of the society, consisting of five members of the association, with the dean of the college as chairman, whose duty it is to advise and consult with the university officials as to what shall be done at the station, and the results so far obtained show that they have attended strictly to their business.

Illinois Experimental Station.

The Experimental Station is located at Urbana, in connection with the University of Illinois. The plans and specifications which appeared in the trade papers you probably are acquainted with. The houses will be planted with carnations this season and the work will be chiefly in fertilizers, under the direction of Prof. H. B. Dorner, son of the veteran carnation grower of Lafayette, Ind., who has been placed in charge of the Experimental Station, with capable assistants.

When the officers of the college saw what our work meant and the amount of practical good it was going to do, they became enthusiastic and, in addition to our appropriation from the legislature, donated to the cause out of the college funds the magnificent sum of $7,000, making a total of $22,000 to help carry on the good work, and by this, I assure you, our association was highly gratified. In addition to this the college officers tendered the services of the Entomological Department and sent out one of their men to take up the question of thrips, which has been doing an immense amount of damage in the rose-growing district, and have since detailed him on the special work of studying insect life and giving instructions in the different ways of fumigation, etc.

At an early date a bulletin will be issued which will be of value to all.

First Experimental Work.

Our first year's experimental work was done in greenhouses rented from Washburn Bros., in Bloomington, Ill., by Professor Beal. This was mostly in the testing of the different commercial insecticides, and when this bulletin is issued it may be a surprise in the varying analysis in these preparations tested.

We expect soon to see a course in floriculture established at the university, covering soil analysis, a study in insect life and a practical training in greenhouse construction and heating, making a school which we have long dreamed of for our boys.

Now, there are other important things that a state society can do. Nearly every state has a state fair, and did you ever realize or stop to think that you can reach the masses more quickly at a state fair than at a flower show? We took up this idea and thought it out in this wise: The people who go to a flower show are, as a rule, flower-lovers and generally know just about what they are going to see, but the every-day, ordinary people do not go to these flower shows, but will go to their state fair.

State Fairs as Educators.

Now, nearly every state fair has a floricultural department and there are hundreds of people who never visit a greenhouse or even see one, and never have flowers in their home or garden. They see these flower and plant displays and it creates a desire to have some in their home, which sentiment might have lain dormant forever if they had not visited the state fair.

In a great many of the state fairs this department is looked upon as one of the side lights, and whose fault is it but our own? Our state society took this up, went before the State Board of Agriculture with our statistics, showed them the importance of our trade, impressed upon them the idea of cultivating the beautiful and elevating the taste of the people. This was hard work—to get it through the heads of our farmer friends. Farm crops and cattle they understood, but did not realize that flowers cost money to grow and when the exhibition was over it was a dead loss to the exhibitor, but if some ordinary hog went in and came out with a blue ribbon, he was worth so much more, but the flowers, why, of course, they did not amount to anything.

We finally gained our point and secured $1,000 to the Illinois State Fair in premiums, also revised the list and gained an important recognition in the appointment of a practical florist as assistant superintendent of the floricultural department. Through the efforts of this society the premium list stands on an equal basis with any of our great shows. This is one of the things that a state society can do. This is not work for our S. A. F. to do, and this is where I make one of my strong points.

Work of State Vice-presidents.

The S. A. F. has done its share of pioneer work, but there are some things it can still do. For instance, our state vice-presidents can, in addition to what they are doing, get in closer touch with their experimental stations, take more interest in their state and county fairs, visit the boards of agriculture and get in touch with appropriation committees in the different state legislatures.

The trade has not taken advantage of these things. Our agricultural friends have, and the results are shown by the many experimental stations devoted to their use. We have no one to blame but ourselves. The amount of capital invested in our business demands that we should have recognition and if we organize and go after it as the Illinois State Florists' Association did, we can get it.

Every city should have a florists' club and every state a state society, and these societies become as feeders, from which the national society can draw its membership and with this near relationship a far greater work can be accomplished.

Are There Too Many Societies?

It has been said that we have too many societies, such as the Carnation, Rose, Peony and Chrysanthemum Societies, which have a tendency to divert the interest from the parent society. I say, no. The very strength of the tree lies in its fibrous roots; without these the society could not accomplish its work and stand at the top. Let it continue to be the adviser and counselor of these societies.

You already know, as I know, what good these associations have done and we could not have done the work which has been accomplished in these special lines without the aid of these societies.

Now, a state society can get nearer to its home members and awaken their interest in the work locally. You take up the school gardens and the "City Beautiful" idea, which is one of the greatest modern ideas that the florists can take up and push with a good credit to themselves and benefit to their neighbors. This idea was taken up in the city of Springfield and with the assistance of the state society was made a great success, and if time permitted I would like to tell you about it, for the "City Beautiful" idea, aside from its moral and uplifting tendencies, is one of the greatest advertisements the craft could have. Get the masses interested, start with the children and the rest will come.

Importance of Statistics.

There is also another feature, an important one, and that is the statistics of our business. This was thoroughly discussed by our state association and through this we have been able to get in connection with the Census Bureau, and with the aid of the S. A. F. we think we can and will have a better census of our business than ever.

When you go before a legislature and ask for an appropriation, they want to know who and what you are, and we found that this was a very important feature—to know just how we stood—and what better way of getting it than that each state take up this work?

State Societies' Relation to S. A. F.

Now you may ask: "What relation do we bear to the S. A. F.?" I can answer that in this way: The same relationship as the state bears to the national government, each working out its own problems, all for the common good, and I believe it should be the policy of this society to foster and aid any state that will take up this work. We can make this society stronger in membership and more far-reaching in the good work it can do, continuing its committees in national affairs, such as express rates, statistics, postal laws, and like broad questions.

Do not forget that with this close relationship of state societies you secure and inspire local interested workers in the cause, who, through such interest, become eventually enthusiastic members of the S. A. F., the proud parent of them all.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave;
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business is just about as would be expected with the thermometer hovering around the hundred mark. It was even quiet at the commission houses this week, as there was not the usual assemblage of florists there to pick up what little stock arrives.

Asters are none too plentiful. The good stock is picked up rapidly at prices ranging from 1 to 4 cents. The roses are good; some very fine Killarney are on the market. A few carnations are coming daily; these of course are of short stem, being from outside plants. Green is plentiful, excepting probably smilax.

Various Notes.

It was a jolly bunch of florists that left on the steamer for Buffalo last Monday for the convention. The writer regrets very much that he could not be one of the party and hopes all had a splendid time.

Beard Bros. have an exceptionally fine lot of small ferns coming in for fall delivery.

During Mr. Schroeter's absence at Mackinac his whole store force renovated the working parts of the establishment, giving the appearance of newness to the whole place.

Fred Miesel's cyclamens are coming along nicely, and from present indications will be prize winners when their time comes.

W. B. Brown is sitting up nights preparing his speech for the next club night, when he will be installed as president.

The American Carnation Support, invented by George E. Browne, of Greenfield, Mich., though the latest in the market, already has the indorsement of several well known growers in this locality.

James Carey, of Mount Clemens, expects to have extra fine roses this winter.

August Von Boeselager, of the Bath City, is kept pretty busy in his efforts to grow all the various flowers the Bemb Floral Co. can use. They get most of his stock.

The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is receiving some very fine asters and could dispose of many more.

John Frueh, of Saginaw, stopped off at Detroit on his way home after spending several weeks fishing in northern Michigan.

The Wm. Hielscher Wire Works are working up a large stock in anticipation of a big trade next winter.

The Detroit Cut Flower Supply House is handling some unusually fine asters from its Pontiac place.

Robert Klagge, of Mount Clemens, was laid up several days last week, but is up and at work again.

Those "red pots" of the Detroit Flower Pot Manufacturing Co. are selling as fast as modern machinery can turn them out, says Harry Balsley.

Mrs. Sullivan has her hands full this week with the three men folks away, but—leave it to her.

Louis Rush has built up a nice business at his west side store. From the way he was buying wire frames last week business must be pretty lively even now.

Taepke's will soon be cutting some fine carnations from the McClellan avenue place.

Mrs. Phil Breitmeyer has been in Buffalo a week in advance of the rest. Mr. Breitmeyer and his mother left Detroit for Buffalo Saturday, August 15, by rail.

Ex-president Scribner is still with the boys heart and soul, even though he is not in the chair.

Another source of supply in asters is from Leopold Mallest, of Mount Clemens. His asters are very fine.

Albert Stahelin has fully recovered from his recent accident, when he was thrown out of his buggy by an auto.

The Florists' Club.

The fall chrysanthemum show, to be given by the Washington Florists' Club, in the Masonic Temple, Ninth and F streets, November 12 to 14, promises to be the most elaborate ever held in this city. Arrangements were made at a meeting at the home of William F. Gude, 3900 New Hampshire avenue. George C. Shaffer was elected to take the place of Secretary McCauley, who resigned. Mr. McCauley, who is leaving the city to accept a place in Chicago, was presented by the members of the club with a silver loving cup.

A party of thirty-six left Monday morning, August 17, for the convention. Wm. F. Gude and family were unfortunately delayed, but got away Tuesday morning.

Vacation seems to be in order and everybody who can do so is taking advantage of it.

Walter Hawley and Albert Booth, of Gude Bros. Co., have returned from a delightful trip to Boston, stopping at Saratoga and New York on their way home.

Frank Sly is back at his stand in the market after a month's rest down the Potomac river.

Miss Blanche Dodge, bookkeeper for the Washington Florist Co., is spending two weeks at Colonial Beach, Va.

Mrs. Beatrice Siford, who was Miss Smith, clerk for F. H. Kramer, met with a serious accident Sunday. She was thrown from a horse which she was riding and the horse rolled over her.

THE new hydrangea, H. arborescens sterilis, is said to be an excellent subject for forcing under glass.

F. R. PIERSON, of Tarrytown, N. Y., is, and has been for fifteen years, president of the board of education in his district.

HUGH LOW & Co., Bush Hill Park, London, describe Hiawatha as "the quickest growing and longest lasting of all rambler roses."

OTHER associations that are working to correct abuses in express service are making good use of the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the case of the S. A. F. vs. the U. S. Express Co.

A MEETING took place at Utrecht, Holland, May 14, at which all the principal Dutch horticultural societies were represented. The result has been the federation of all the forty-nine societies, with a membership of about 18,000.

THE new rose, Lady Godiva, is an English sport of Dorothy Perkins. Some standards exhibited by Paul & Son attracted much attention at the recent show of the National Rose Society and are the subjects of excellent illustrations in the British gardening papers. The color of the flowers is flesh pink.

OBITUARY.

Louis H. Sander.

After a long and painful illness, borne with the greatest fortitude, Louis H. Sander died in Boston, August 11. Mr. Sander was a German by birth, coming to America in 1882. In 1895 he commenced work at the Arnold Arboretum under Prof. C. S. Sargent, where for a dozen years he proved an invaluable man, being a veritable encyclopedia in everything pertaining to trees and shrubs. Mr. Sander never recovered from an operation for appendicitis in the early part of 1907. This was followed by other operations, all of which, however, proved futile. The deceased was of a genial disposition and beloved by all who knew him. He leaves a widow and three children. His brother, Charles, has for many years had charge of Prof. C. S. Sargent's Brookline estate. A sister, Mrs. Sabin Bolton, resides in North Easton. To all of them the sympathy of a host of friends goes out.

Department of Plant Registration.

Public notice is hereby given of the application of the Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., for the registration of the plants specified below. These applications for registry were filed in this office August 14, 1908, and any person knowing of any reason why the registry of these names should not be made is requested to communicate with the undersigned.

No. 398—Rose, American Pillar. Flowers measure three to five inches across and are very durable. They are borne in immense clusters. Color is a chaste shade of pink, while in the center of each flower is a cluster of bright yellow stamens; these are followed in the autumn by pretty clusters of brilliant red seed hips. Parentage: Rosa setigera x seedling of multiflora.

No. 399—Canna, Gladio-flora (No. 2675, C. & J. Co., 1908). Petals are short and rounded and overlap each other. Color is crimson, changing to carmine rose, with an uneven edge of gold to each petal. Height, three and one-half feet. Parentage: Sam Trelease x Venus.

No. 400—Canna, Minnehaha (No. 2744, C. & J. Co., 1908). Form much like Mont Blanc. Blossoms are extra large; petals are long, gracefully curved and have wavy edges. Colors deepen through shades of gold and cream to a center of peachblow pink. Height, three to four feet. Parentage: Evolution x seedling, numbered.

No. 401—Canna, Rosea gigantea (No. 2698, C. & J. Co., 1908). Single petals are two and one-half inches across; color, a deep, rich rose, almost a coral carmine. Plants make a vigorous growth, producing unusually fine clumps of green foliage. Height, four to five feet. Parentage: West Grove x numbered seedling.

We never lose faith in the future of our business

Our establishment affords the grower of good stock the best means for securing adequate returns for his labor — and the assembling of the product of dozens of skilled growers on our counters every day makes our house the most satisfactory source of supply any buyer can have.

The steady annual growth of our business, even in an off year, proves we are on the right road.

In our experience it is better to give a man more than he expects, than to have him disappointed after extravagant claims.

But really, relying on Amling isn't a matter of experiment at all — many do it, both growers and buyers, and among them some of the shrewdest and most successful men in the trade. Our prosperity, indeed our very existence, depends upon the fact that those who sell or buy through us make money by so doing. It has and it does pay others to rely on Amling — it will pay you. At least, investigate.

Our facilities we consider to be the best in Chicago.

Our business is large enough to warrant our maintaining the best possible equipment for handling cut flowers and dispatching orders promptly, carefully packed. If we knew of any improvement which could be made in our equipment — or of more capable men than we employ — we should let nothing stand in the way of improving our service.

In the new season now close at hand we shall relax no effort — we want additional business and shall seek to merit the continued patronage of everyone who gives us a trial.

Our price list appears on this page of the Review each week. Watch for it.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Convention week is always one of the quietest of the year; not only are many of the buyers and wholesalers away from home, but it is approaching the turn of the tide, and the old saying is that it always is darkest just before dawn. The wholesalers all are looking for fine business this autumn, with trade beginning to pick up September 1.

In spite of the dog days, those houses which make a feature of summer stock are doing a good business. There is an excellent demand for good roses, and carnations, or asters, if of good quality, find ready sale. Also, lilies are selling steadily. In certain quarters it is decidedly quiet, because there is nothing to do business with, but the houses that looked forward for summer business have not been disappointed. The shipping demand continues better than local trade.

There are slightly increased supplies of roses, a fact which probably may be recorded in each issue for the next several weeks. The cut from young stock does not amount to much as yet, and what Beauties are received hardly suffice to meet the orders already booked; it is not easy to fill on late telegrams. Nor is it possible to fill all orders for Killarney, although the supply is increasing. This rose has so much the best of the demand that it usually is sold out early.

There is still a good call for asters, although last week's rain did much to improve the cut and prices are lower, particularly on the poorer grades, which were commanding figures considerably above their real value. There are now considerable quantities of field-grown carnations, of course short in stem, but otherwise of good quality and selling well. Indoor carnations are not often seen.

Gladioli are largely used for window decorations, and the light colors in funeral work, but asters and lilies are the standby of the design-maker. Auratums are about through, but there is an abundant supply of Easter lilies, providing enough time is given to get the stock in from the greenhouses. There is little stirring in the market for green goods.

Profited by Early Purchases.

The two advances recently made in the price of window glass put that commodity back almost to where it was before the financial upheaval, and Poehlmann Bros. Co. is a good, big winner through having bought nearly 5,000 boxes of glass when prices were at the bottom.

The new range, which has been under contemplation for several months, will go up in September and will require about 4,800 boxes of glass. There are to be thirteen houses 27x350, nine houses 27x250 and one house 18x265, making a total of twenty-three houses, covering over 188,000 square feet of ground.

The Rain.

The rain August 11 and 12 was of inestimable benefit. It not only gave the aster crop a fresh start, but it made a lot of money for the carnation growers who have plants in the field. In addition, it put renewed life into almost all lines of business.

In twenty-four hours the precipitation was 4.35 inches, which is the heaviest day's rain recorded in Chicago since August 3, 1885. It followed ten weeks of drought.

Various Notes.

The Parkside Greenhouses, at the corner of Seventieth street and Adams avenue, not far from Oakwoods cemetery, seem to be getting a fair share of the midsummer retail trade. Mr. Collins, the proprietor, began business there seven years ago, renting the establishment for five years. At the expiration of the five-year lease he purchased the property, including nearly an acre of ground. At present he has two houses in ferns and palms, one house in chrysanthemums and one in carnations, besides a good quantity of bedding stock.

The membership list of the Chicago Association of Commerce, under the head of florists shows only two names, those of Percy Jones and John Mangel, but E. H. Hunt is found included among the seedsmen. The association is doing good work in advertising Chicago, "the great central market."

Peter Reinberg will have no carnations at the home place this year, the new range of houses on the farm being devoted exclusively to this flower. At the home place practically the entire establishment will be in roses, except for a little asparagus and space for valley, Easter lilies, etc.

The Schillo Lumber Co. says this is an excellent opportunity for growers to buy pecky cypress, not only for their needs the balance of this season, but for next year. The price is lower than it has been in two years, and it is likely to advance with the return of activity in general business.

C. L. Washburn said at Niagara Falls on Wednesday that he had met with remarkable sales of the O. P. Bassett carnation. Total sales are 85,000. Poehlmann Bros. Co. has taken 5,000.

There was a large attendance at the golden wedding celebration of Mr. and Mrs. Gottfried Amling August 14, all the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren being present. One son came from Berlin, Germany, and a daughter from Orange, Cal. The daily papers gave the affair extended notice because of the fact that the worthy couple have lived for the entire fifty years almost in sight of the place where they were married. Quite a few trade friends of the sons, who are florists, attended the reception.

C. L. W. Snyder, of the El Paso Carnation Co., El Paso, Ill., was in Chicago this week, buying supplies for the new store recently opened by the company at Clinton.

Louis Wittbold was one of the first of the Chicagoans to start for the convention. He left Thursday, August 13.

Emil Buettner, at Park Ridge, is equipping some more of his boilers with the Martin rocking grates.

E. T. Wanzer, at Wheaton, wants to interest the large growers around Chicago in the fair at Wheaton August 25 to 29. It is called a country fair and takes in everybody, even the city growers. There will be a large attendance.

H. F. Port, of Maywood, has been the subject of attention by the daily papers this week because he was given a pass back to New Mexico at the intercession of James S. Harlan, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the body engaged in enforcing the anti-pass law. Mr. Port has tuberculosis. He returned from New Mexico in hopes of selling his greenhouses at Maywood, but has not succeeded.

Scheiden & Schoos are making elaborate preparations for the dissemination of their red seedling carnation next January. They have planted 25,000 of it for cut blooms for exhibition, and for cuttings. The variety is yet nameless, but it will have a good, catchy title by the time of the fall flower show.

It is interesting to note that a clerk in a downtown book store, who grew a crop of sweet peas in his garden this season, received $56 from a commission man on one week's sales and $50 on the next. The result is he is now building a greenhouse and by another season will be a full-fledged florist.

Bassett & Washburn took advantage of the benefit of the rain to get in two additional houses of their red seedling, O. P. Bassett. They have practically 60,000 plants of it now benched.

J. A. Budlong is not cutting much now, most of the houses of roses being in process of drying off. They replanted only a small part of the place this year, the greater part of the grafted stock being carried over. Carnations have been planted some little time and are making a good start.

Mike Rocklin, who has been with Bassett & Washburn since he withdrew from the firm of Fisher & Rocklin, at Kalamazoo, has formed a partnership with J. Lehman, and they will start business as Rocklin & Lehman, at 405 Douglas street, Sioux City, Ia.

Sparks from a Michigan Central freight train set fire to the dry grass near the plant of the Thompson Carnation Co., at Joliet, the other day, just before the big rain, and it required considerable effort to save the greenhouses. At one time one of the greenhouses was on fire, and much of the stock in it was destroyed. The loss was estimated at more than $1,000.

Charlie Ernie is at home from West Baden and on duty again at E. H. Hunt's. W. E. Lynch is at his old home in Massachusetts and making short trips into the fern country.

E. C. Amling says the first shipment of leucothoe this season arrived August 1 and the second lot is now in, a month earlier than usual. Green galax also is a month early.

The Florists' Club gave up the idea of a special train to the convention—too many chose other routes—but there were two special cars on the regular train.

The A. L. Randall Co. is at work on a new and enlarged catalogue and is busy also in taking in new stock for the fall season.

Winterson's Seed Store is busy with Harrisii and French bulbs.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is in receipt of some quite fair dahlias and has advices from a Michigan grower that some fine stock may be looked for shortly.

Vaughan & Sperry report a good sale for sheep manure.

Visitors have been numerous, going to the convention.

There is no change in prices of these. Carnations are few and of microscopic size, but the first pickings from the new crop are due this week. Lilies are in good supply, although L. longiflorum is rather less abundant than it has been. There is about the usual demand for lily of the valley. Bunches of Bouvardia Humboldtii are noted on several stands and find ready sale at the better class stores. For green stock there is a fair call.

Club Field Day.

Glorious weather favored the thirty or more members of the Gardeners' and Forists' Club who journeyed to Amherst Agricultural College August 15. Leaving Boston at 8:23, via Central Massachusetts railroad, Amherst was reached at 11:34. The college officials, including Prof. E. A. White, of the department of floriculture, with visiting gardeners and florists from Northampton, Holyoke and Springfield, met the party on arrival. A special trolley car was first boarded and the beautiful town of Amherst, with its many fine buildings, was seen. An adjournment was then made to Draper hall, where lunch was served. At its close President Butterfield, in a short address, warmly welcomed the visitors. Vice-president Downs made a suitable response. After the party had been photographed, an examination of a number of vegetable plots was made under the guidance of Prof. W. F. Brooks, of the department of agriculture, and the effects of the various fertilizers on the different crops were noted. This proved deeply interesting to the visitors.

Next an inspection of Wilder Hall, in the horticultural department, was made. The present greenhouses were inspected and the site for the ranges of new houses soon to be built by the Lord & Burnham Co. was looked at. These will include special houses, each 25x50, for violets, palms, roses, carnations, tomatoes, cucumbers, etc., workrooms and a new instruction building; the latter to cost $15,000. The fruit orchards—including grapes, pears, plums and apples—and gardens were next examined, following which there was an inspection of the botanical building under the guidance of Prof. G. E. Stone, and this was found splendidly equipped. Professor Stone has for several years made special studies of diseases of lettuce, tomato, cucumber, melon and other commercial indoor crops.

Time did not permit of an inspection of the entomological building, but a hurried visit was made to the farm barns, a large portion of which had been destroyed by fire early on the morning of the club's visit, entailing a loss of $50,000, which included the season's hay crop, many valuable cattle and nearly all the farming implements. The barns were new and up-to-date, being only completed eighteen months ago.

The special car was boarded at 4:15, and the visitors, accompanied by some members of the college staff, journeyed through the Mount Holyoke range of mountains, via South Hadley's Falls, to Holyoke. The magnificent scenery excited the admiration of everyone. At Holyoke the train was taken for Springfield, where an express for Boston was boarded, the latter city being reached at 8:40. Weather conditions were ideal and the ride of some 250 miles through much of the finest scenery in Massachusetts was greatly enjoyed. The college officials left no stone unturned to make the visit a pleasant one, and if a field day can be arranged for 1909, a delegation thrice the size will undoubtedly make the trip, which was the most interesting and enjoyable the club has yet held.

Various Notes.

The local delegation for Niagara Falls was smaller than Boston ought to have sent. Some are holding back for the national flower show in November and did not feel able to take in the two. Ideal weather favored the party as it left, the temperature being much more tolerable than on several preceding days.

There promises to be a fine exhibition at Horticultural hall, August 22. This will be the closing Saturday show of the season.

Thomas F. Galvin is now a grandfather, a son having been born to Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Galvin, Jr., at Siasconset, Nantucket, August 10.

The club field day to the New England Nurseries comes on September 5.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The scarcity of choice asters is the feature of a dull market. Really fine asters, notably purples, have exceeded listed quotations. The buyers will not take poor asters and many are wasted. Beauty, Kaiserin and Killarney are in fair supply. The other varieties are rarely seen in good form yet. There are few carnations. Valley is fine, but it has weakened. There is some demand for Easter lilies, which are extra good. Gladioli continue in oversupply, especially the ordinary varieties. Hydrangeas are much in evidence. Sweet peas are plentiful. The out-of-town stock is still excellent, but the demand is falling off. There is no special demand for other outdoor flowers or for greens.

Philadelphians at Niagara Falls.

The main body of delegates to the S. A. F. convention left this city last Monday morning over the Pennsylvania railroad. Others went earlier, and a few later by the Lehigh Valley. The following list of those who went from this city to Niagara Falls is therefore nearly, but

A New House.

A representative of the most progressive paper was on hand early last Monday morning to witness the opening of the new Skidelsky & Irwin Co.'s office, salesroom and warerooms at 144 North Seventh street. The company has something over 3,400 square feet of floor space, covering the second, third and fourth floors of the building. They propose to carry on a wholesale business in plants, bulbs and seeds, one member of the company being on the road and the other at home, by turns. S. S. Skidelsky has had twenty years' experience in the business. He is well and favorably known all over the country. F. C. Irwin has gained many friends during his sixteen years' experience, equally divided between Vaughan's Seed Store and J. M. Thorburn & Co., both of New York. Mr. Skidelsky says that the present move was made necessary by the increase in his business.

Popular Plants.

When I want to know just what kind of plants the masses of the people want, plants not too expensive to be found in every home—your home and my home, not the rich man's home—then I go to see Godfrey Aschmann and learn what he is doing. Mr. Aschmann owns a thinking cap and wears it regularly. He believes it pays to advertise persistently and that it pays to keep the houses full. I cannot recall a time when he did not advertise and I cannot recall a visit when I saw an empty bench or even part of one. I may also add that Mr. Aschmann is evidently prosperous, for he has just bought another dwelling house. The stock in the greenhouses impressed me favorably. Nearly all of it was in medium sizes, ready for immediate use. Unfortunately, I neglected to take a rule with me when I called, so I cannot cite you the numbers and sizes of the plants with accuracy.

Convention week is a synonym for stagnation in the wholesale cut flower department, especially this year, when nearly every wholesaler is at the Falls, and the growing and retail sections, too, are creditably represented.

general expectation of it is one of the most encouraging signs of the times.

The bulb, seed and nurserymen are all preparing for a strenuous season, and the supply houses are stocked to repletion with large importations, many novelties among them. Evidently the spirit of optimism is in the air and the lines are being laid in all departments of the business, with a view to the return of prosperity.

Roses are improving daily in color and length of stem and soon the prices will correspond and the grower take heart again. There are few carnations arriving, which is fortunate, for the rivers of asters and gladioli run deep and wide, and there seems to be no let-up in the flood. Plenty of lilies add to the beauty of window decorations and of Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora there is no end.

Various Notes.

September 14 the first meeting of the New York Florists' Club will take place in its handsome rooms in the Grand opera house building, on Twenty-third street and Eighth avenue.

On August 12 and 13 the Southampton Horticultural Society held its fall show. The Rickards Bros.' exhibit was in charge of Frank M. Dugan. Will and Al Rickards attended the clam bake August 12, of the Oceanic Horticultural Society.

The Averne Floral Association will have its annual fete next week. A. Warendorff, the retail florist, who is a member, will have many of the autos and other vehicles in the parade to decorate.

Lion & Co., the ribbon merchants, report their July and August receipts 50 per cent in advance of the same months last year. The firm will have some thirty styles of violet ribbon novelties for their fall trade.

The Jounston Heaung Co. has several large contracts under way this fall and expresses great encouragement at the outlook. The past has proved an excellent year.

Lecakes & Co. have installed a new icebox, one of the largest on Twenty-eighth street. A brother of Manager John A. Foley is ill with pleura-pneumonia.

N. J. Mekelburg, a friend of President Traendly, presented the New York Club with fifty pounds of choice candy for distribution to the excursionists on their way to the convention. In addition, Chairman Rickards had an abundance of fruit, ice cream and other delicacies, and the supply of liquid nourishment was sufficient to fill every desire and demonstrate as usual how well the New York Florists' Club cares for its guests and members.

After the growers' clam bake September 15 at White Stone, there will be no more recreation. The strenuous season for the New York and New Jersey Growers' Association begins in earnest September 16. Chairman Miller promises some surprises for the final outing of the society.

George Cotsonas & Co. have a big force busy gathering fancy ferns. The amount of galax, ferns and other products of the green goods men numbers many millions.

Anton Schultheis and his sons are enjoying a week of motor boating on the sound. Mr. Schultheis' family is summering at Rockaway. The new greenhouses are well under way.

Philip Einsman, treasurer of the New York Cut Flower Exchange in the Coogan building, has just returned from a seven weeks' pleasure trip in Germany.

George Allen, son of J. K. Allen, and family have returned from a three weeks' outing in the Catskills. The veteran, J. K., and Mrs. Allen will make a holiday of the convention.

Sydney Wertheimer, of Wertheimer Bros., is back from Europe and will be at the Falls with a fine exhibit and many novelties, the result of his trip to France and the great ribbon factories of the continent.

George Hildebrand, of John Young's force, is home from his summer rest in the mountains with his family.

Messrs. Hallock and Pierson visited President Traendly last week and discussed their splendid work and progress in relation to the school gardens, together with the active coöperation of Dr. Crosby and Dr. Irne, of the Washington Government Experimental Station. A great deal of practical work has been done by these gentlemen.

Emil Schloss, of the Schloss Bros. Ribbon House, was at the convention with the firm's usual beautiful exhibit, and larger than ever. Arthur Schloss has lately entertained the stork on its first visit to his home. The little lady has a born cinch on her ribbon necessities for all the time.

William H. Kuebler, the wholesale florist of Brooklyn, returned last week from his outing in Germany, greatly benefited by his trip. His experiences are interesting.

George Saltford, the wholesaler of Twenty-eighth street, is still enjoying country life at his old home in Rhinebeck.

Russin & Hanfling were unpacking their importations last week and among them were many novelties in baskets that should become popular with the retail trade.

Mrs. Sigmund Geller presented her husband last week with a son, making the quartette of olive branches complete.

Weigel & Ujfalussy, successors to Emil Steffins, of West Twenty-eighth street, announce large shipments of supplies out of town and have a great many country florists on their books, whose patronage for so many years indicates careful work and satisfaction. They are both practical men.

Headquarters for Lilium Harrisii

Just received in extra fine condition, MICHELL'S Special Brand Lilium Harrisii

By special brand, we mean lilies that have been grown harvested and packed especially for us. They are the cream of the Bermuda Lily crop, being a selection of the most uniform bulbs, gathered in districts where the smallest amount (if any) of disease exists. Every year the florists are making greater demands for this particular strain and we advise all to order early.

6-7, 350 in a case..... 6.00 per 100; 55.00 per 1000

Immediate ordering is advisable, as the stock of Michell's Special Brand is limited. (Seven to nine size especially is very scarce.)

DIRECT BULB IMPORTERS

Mention The Review when you write.

S. Jacobs & Sons, of Brooklyn, have been busy all the season and are adding to their force. They say business is fully up to expectations and the outlook encouraging.

H. H. Berger & Co. have been busy since the return of Mrs. Berger and Miss Berger from Europe, and the fall business has opened unusually early and in volume ahead of any season in the firm's experience.

Julius J. Heinrich, whose work at the Jamestown exposition won such praise for his artistic ability, is the artist who creates and maintains the attractive showing in the windows of Peter Henderson & Co., on Cortlandt street.

Boddington had a beautiful bulb brochure at the Falls, with Harry Bunyard bestowing his boundless welcome to his friends from everywhere as usual.

E. McKay Whiting, head of the National Florists' Board of Trade, with his bride, visited the convention. His collecting agency has been of great value to many a florist.

Gunther Bros. are beautifying their store and getting things in readiness for the dahlia shipments, which will be, they say, large this year. They have made a specialty of the new and best varieties of dahlias for several years and some of the largest growers ship to them daily in their season.

Samuel A. Woodrow is still in Massachusetts, recovering from the accident that put him on the shelf. He will be back at his desk September 1, and is importing a lot of stock from Europe for the fall trade.

Ford Bros. have renovated and redecorated their big store and biggest ice-box, as becometh a bridegroom, and the fancy carnations will soon be pouring in, as usual. Everything will have to be fancy now that the junior member of the firm has joined the majority.

Walter F. Sheridan keeps on the placid tenor of his way and panics may come and go, but the stream of Beauties and high-class roses and carnations runs wide and deep and constant. The special train ran the steadier for his presence and there is a whisper of official timber—if not this year, some year soon.

Mr. Schenck allows his partner the conventions, presidential honors and all the tidbits of the business this year, while he stays home in the heat and runs things. Next year the shoe will be on the other foot.

A. L. Young has built up a large business by strict attention to the details of his work and only needs room to spread. His sample window is one of the attractions of Twenty-eighth street daily.

B. S. Slinn, Jr., has got his land legs on again after his voyage to the continent and does not care, he says, how soon the violets bloom.

Bonnot Bros. ship every day, winter and summer, hot or cold, and the Coogan building would be lonely without the genial partner who presides there.

Millang Bros. are handling shoals of asters and August is proving a practical manager and building up a confident clientele that promises well for the future.

Rosens is ready for a record season,

The popular places at Niagara were Our Exhibit and the Falls

We received hearty congratulations from everyone who saw our magnificent exhibit at the Convention at Niagara Falls. It was admittedly the finest collection of Novelties and Staples in Florists' Supplies ever brought together. We are proud of the fact, and we want you to know that we are working to give you the best that can be had anywhere. Anything that will help you in your business, we can get, no matter where it is made or by whom. with the largest stock of green goods and supplies he has ever handled and arrangements complete for enough wild smilax to decorate for every wedding in New York.

Bonnet & Blake have evidently no fear of the effects of the new combination of wholesalers, growers and retailers over in Brooklyn and their only worry seems to be the need of a larger store to meet the demands of their growing business.

A. J. Guttman says he is too busy this year to attend the convention, much to his regret. The big store is an inspiring responsibility. Mr. Reidel has returned from his outing on the continent.

Harry Crawbuck is sending fine asters to Frank S. Hicks, of West Twenty-eighth street, from his farm at Chatham, N. J.; also lilies and dahlias. Mr. Hicks now has his new store complete and ready for all the shipments that may come to him.

Jonathan Nash is summering at Sea Cliff, L. I. The outlook is good for Moore, Hentz & Nash and everybody else, Mr. Nash prophesies, this winter.

Messrs. Seligman and Levy are both back from their mountain climbing in fine condition for the strain of the better times. Joe says he has a surprise up his sleeve that will make some of his confreres sit up and take notice.

H. E. Froment is now holidaying and enjoying a well earned rest, after all his big force have had theirs. The manager came back last week with a few pounds extra of weight and heavy business will come natural.

It looks like an orchid year and McManus at headquarters is ready for it. All the years of education and strenuosity have had their legitimate effect. The orchid's popularity is now universal; shipments go to every part of the country from New York daily, and there is no longer any doubt as to the fact that the orchid is king. The supply will be the largest the New York market has ever handled, and the best. There are no better orchidists in the world than the growers within a radius of twenty-five miles of this city.

The Coöperative Flower Growers' Association has rented a big store at 48 West Twenty-seventh street, New York, has already thirty stockholders, and has appointed as its manager J. J. Coan. September 15 is the date of launching the new ship on the troublous waters of New York's wholesale sea. It looks like a stormy winter in little old New York. Brooklyn also has put a new boat in commission on its usually placid bosom.

Bowling.

The extreme heat kept down the attendance at the final practice of the New York Club. The team should give a good account of itself at the convention. Next year it is hoped the club will be under the auspices of the New York Society and that more general interest may be maintained thereby. ## ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

As far as business is concerned, there is absolutely nothing new to report. The store men have gotten sufficiently used to it by this time to content themselves with a funeral design or so for a day's business. Most of them are keeping busy by cleaning up their places with new paper and paint, so as to be in shape for the early fall trade, to which we are all looking forward hopefully. The wholesalers do all their work early each morning, after which there is nothing doing until the next day. The stock that is coming in is of poor quality and shows the effect of the hot weather. American Beauties are among the best in roses that are coming in now, besides a few fine Carnots and Perles from Springfield, Ill. Carnations are still small in all varieties. Anything good sells well.

Asters are selling well—that is, those of the fancy grade. They are not as yet as much of a glut as they usually are at this time of the year. Tuberose spikes are arriving in thousand lots from Kirkwood, and sell in lots of 100 at $1.50 to $2. The market has a good supply of all kinds of greens.

Club Meeting.

The annual meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club was held Thursday afternoon, August 13. The attendance was large and enthusiastic and much interest was taken in the proceedings. The near approach of the S. A. F. convention, the election of officers and the payment of annual dues brought out the large attendance. As President Young, owing to sickness, was unable to be present, and Vice-president Angermueller was away on a fishing trip, the members selected Ex-president Beneke to preside over the meeting. The meeting opened with thirty members present. After the regular order of business had been disposed of, the different committees reported. The trustees reported that the recent picnic had cost $50, and the balance of $25 was returned to the treasurer.

John J. Burke's name was presented as an applicant for membership. Several names were dropped from the rolls for non-payment of dues, among them five prominent members of the St. Louis Horticultural Society.

After this the election of officers took place. For president two candidates were in the field, W. C. Young and Walter Retzer, and the result was the reelection of President Young for another term. For vice-president the candidates were George Angermueller, Henry Emunds and Edwin Denker. After three ballots were taken the office fell to Edwin Denker. For secretary A. J. Bentzen had no opposition and was elected by unanimous vote. The withdrawal of J. J. Beneke from the race for treasurer left the field open to Fred H. Weber, who was also elected by a unanimous vote. For election as a three-year-term trustee, George Frow, C. Juengel and Henry Ostertag were the candidates. Mr. Ostertag's election followed on the first ballot.

J. F. Ammann invited the members to hold their September meeting at his place in Edwardsville, Ill., and the invitation was accepted with thanks. So the installation of the new officers will take place at the home of Mr. Ammann.

The question box, as usual, brought the meeting to an interesting close, after which the members had a good time at a near-by cafe, at the expense of the newly elected trustee, Henry Ostertag.

Various Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning left last week for a northern trip, expecting to return by way of Chicago and take in the convention with the Chicago florists.

W. C. Young, who was reported sick last week, is up and about again, looking none the worse for his few days' confinement indoors. Mr. Young was much pleased with his reëlection as president of the Florists' Club, also with the balance of the ticket that was elected with him, and things should be lively in club matters this fall and winter.

Frank Fillmore, not to be outdone, has joined the grandfather class. It is a boy and it will be named Frank the Fourth. The mother and child are doing well and we extend our congratulations.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Halstead, of Belleville, left Sunday noon with the St. Louis delegation for Niagara Falls, to attend the S. A. F. convention. They will return by way of Detroit, to visit their daughter before returning home.

Fred Ammann, of Edwardsville, left Sunday to attend the S. A. F. convention at Niagara Falls. He was delegated by the Florists' Club to tell the members at the next meeting all about the convention.

Quite a number of our suburban club members attended the last club meeting. They were: E. W. Guy, A. S. Halstead and Henry Emunds, of Belleville; Henry Johann, of Collinsville, Ill.; Edwin Denker, of St. Charles, Mo.; John Connon, of Webster Groves, Mo., and J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill.

Vegetable Forcing.

The Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, Amherst, Mass., has made an exhaustive study of the blossom end rot of tomatoes and has published a bulletin on that subject, dealing with it from a scientific standpoint. The purpose of such bulletins is supposed to be to afford assistance to the citizens of the state, but it is a matter of doubt how much value the average tomato grower can get from these technical discussions—what the grower wants to know is not that "the organism isolated is an ærobic, spore-producing, monotrichic, oval form, producing a yellowish color on most media," but how to make his crop worth more of the yellow medium of exchange.

A PROFITABLE CUCUMBER.

Please tell us what kind of cucumber is the most profitable to grow in greenhouses in winter. E. B.

I consider the Improved White Spine forcing cucumber the most satisfactory of all for growing under glass, and this is the most popular in all localities where cucumbers are grown. All dealers have special, selected seed for forcing, but those advertised in the Review are not excelled by any others on the market. H. G.

THE ENEMIES OF ASPARAGUS.

We are mailing you, in separate package, a stalk of asparagus, two years old. Kindly tell us what the trouble is and how to check it. W. E. T.

The asparagus stalk received did not show either beetle or rust, the two chief enemies of the asparagus, and I am at a loss to say just what to do for the plants, not knowing the condition of the field. If there are only one or two stalks so affected, I should think that they were injured by the cultivator or hoe. If many plants are affected, I should suggest looking over them carefully for better signs of the enemy.

Rust of asparagus is now becoming very common and can be detected by the brownish color of the field of affected plants and by the blistered stalks. Under these blisters a fine brown dust can be found. The effect of the beetle is quite different. The field remains green—that is, what foliage is left on the stalks—and the spotted beetle, a bug about the size of the melon beetle, in color red, yellow and black, can be easily found eating. Experiment stations are giving considerable attention to these of late and some new methods may be successful in dealing with the pests, but I am unable to learn of any positive relief in either case that would not cost more than the bed is worth.

Burning off the tops after the bed is mowed in September will do much to destroy the enemy. All weeds around the field should have been kept closely cut at all times. After mowing the asparagus, rake everything up in narrow windrows and burn up clean, leaving the ashes for fertilizer.

Start in next season and keep the soil well cultivated, perfectly loose and free from weeds, and watch for any appearance of the fungus or pests, which may be kept down by spraying with various solutions if started early in the season, when they first appear.

Some of the newer varieties of asparagus are rust-proof and growers will do well to use such varieties when planting a bed. H. G.

BOTTOM HEAT.

I have a house with solid beds that I want to use for vegetables next season. Would it be advisable to put pipes in the soil to provide bottom heat? I heat with water. A. C.

The correspondent does not say what vegetables he will grow and for lettuce and some other vegetables bottom heat is not necessary, but for cucumbers, tomatoes and peppers it is important, especially in winter, when the plants are small. Later in the spring, when the days are long and warm and the plants are full-grown, it may well be dispensed with.

Where it is deemed advisable to put in bottom heat in solid beds, rows of drain tile should be beneath each row of cucumber or tomato plants. When steam is used a ¾-inch pipe inside a 3-inch line of tile will give excellent drainage and a good bottom heat. The heat, however, should not be left turned on all the time, but only a short time each morning and evening. By having a few soil thermometers always in place along some rows, it will be easy to tell how long it is safe to leave the steam on at a time. If hot water is used it will be necessary to use larger pipe and tile. A 1-inch or 1¼-inch pipe in a 4-inch tile would probably be steadier and more satisfactory than the steam. It will be found necessary to examine the soil frequently and well down into it, to see that the roots have the proper amount of moisture. Be careful of the roots.

Rupp, the primrose specialist of Shiremanstown: "If this solicitation obtains your approval, will you kindly assist me in giving Mrs. Rupp a post card greeting on her birthday, August 25, by having as many friends send cards as you can?" ## GRAFTING AGAINST MILDEW.

A correspondent says: "I send you a clipping from the Oakland Tribune on the discovery of Mr. Lilienthal. After reading this you surely will come to a conclusion that the Pacific Coast is going some—and that graft is bound to be a panacea for all troubles." The clipping is as follows:

"Hugo H. Lilienthal, of Berkeley, organizer of the National Juvenile Horticultural Society and expert in plant life, will give demonstrations next Saturday during the educational, botanical and floral exhibition at the Melrose grammar school, of a new method of grafting, whereby all seedlings of new creation in roses, which are bothered with mildew, can be saved from destruction by vegetable grafting behind the bark of the dog rose—Rosa canina—and other varieties. Yesterday in a communication to Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, Lilienthal made the first announcement of his discovery. The process promises to be one of the most important finds of recent years in horticulture.

"Lilienthal is persuaded that his solution of the problem will be final. It is new in two particulars, both the method of the graft and its application to the mildew problem. It will increase to an enormous extent both the production of new varieties and the preservation of older ones. It will permit the production annually from each bush of not less than 3,000 usable slips. The operation is a delicate one and requires the greatest care that is known to the horticulturist surgeons. With the spread of knowledge of the method, however, it is believed that it will come into general use and prove a great boon to the growers of the rose. The Melrose grammar school will be honored with the first announcement because it is the first school to harbor under its roof a branch of the Juvenile Horticultural Society."

PLANTS FOR SHADY PLACES.

What to plant in shady spots, or in the garden which is all in the shade, as is often the case in the city, is a question that perplexes many. There are few flowers which do not require sunshine during some part of the day. The National Council of Horticulture says most suitable material for planting in shady places is found in the wild flowers, many of which are extremely handsome and easily cared for. Solomon's seal, Canterbury bells, mayapple and spiderwort, bleeding heart, violets and columbines, are among the best for such a place. Then the ferns may be relied upon as the best shade loving plant we have. Our native maidenhair does well in thoroughly drained situations and there are many cultivated flowers which like best the places where they are protected from the sun's rays. Forget-me-nots, lobelias and the improved variety of the cardinal flower known as the Queen Victoria are among them. The latter is an exceptionally fine flower for damp, shady places, and its extraordinary coloring makes it attractive. Arabis alpina is a pretty annual for early spring, of dwarf habit and white flowers. Ordinarily the shady nooks should be well drained and have plenty of light, rich soil, of which leaf-mold and sand are generous parts.

DEATH OF W. W. RAWSON.

Resolutions by the Trade.

At a meeting of the Seed and Agricultural Trade of Boston, held August 10, to take action on the sudden death of W. W. Rawson, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It hath pleased God to remove from among us our associate, the Hon. W. W. Rawson, while still in the midst of his usefulness, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, members of the Seed and Agricultural Trade of Boston, deplore his unexpected and sudden death, and

Resolved, That we deeply feel the loss of his genial face, cheerful disposition and wise counsel whenever occasion brought us together, and that we tender our sincere sympathy to his bereaved family.

On behalf of the Seed and Agricultural Trade of Boston.

THOMAS J. GREY, Chairman.
J. K. M. L. FARQUHAR,
M. H. ROWELL,
Committee.

THE early peas for seed in England are reported August 5 as offering a most uncertain prospect.

N. L. WILLET, Augusta, Ga., has filed articles of incorporation for the Willet Seed Co., capital stock $25,000.

HERBERT W. RAWSON will continue the business of his father, W. W. Rawson, of Boston and Arlington, Mass., who died August 9.

R. M. WARD & Co., New York, say the production of narcissus bulbs in America is increasing from year to year because the bulbs give general satisfaction.

HASSLACH & ROUMANILLE, St. Remy de Provence, France, have dissolved partnership. The business will be continued by Jacques Hasslach, who founded the firm at Nimes in 1898.

THERE is said to be much disappointment at the way orders for large sizes of calla bulbs have been cut this season by California shippers. The Californians assert the crops turned out unexpectedly short.

FRANK E. RUE, of Peoria, Ill., who is rounding out his third year in the seed business, says that he has done twenty-five per cent more business this year than he did the year previous, midsummer trading being unusually good. His autumn catalog is in the hands of the printer and has been promised in time for mailing September 1.

have the seed reach Liberia not later than September 1, which is the beginning of spring in Africa.

FRENCH bulbs are materially higher than they were early in the season, the growers now holding them twenty-five to thirty per cent above the prices importers paid on early orders.

A CORRESPONDENT in Holland writes: "Nasturtiums are very good in general, the crops in full bloom now brighten the landscape, but I am afraid the price will not be very high next season, for plenty of old seed is yet in stock."

THE retail bulb catalogues are reported to be bringing as good early responses as they ever do, but the wholesale bulb lists are not bringing even the usual return from the growers whose cut bloom is sold in the big city markets; the country florists are buying as many bulbs as ever.

J. W. JUNG, the seedsman of Randolph, Wis., writes: "Seed crops as a whole are not as satisfactory as the previous season. We have had very dry weather until a few days ago, but since then we have had some much needed showers. Corn, tomatoes and all vine crops show the effects of the drought and will be only a short crop. In some sections here corn will be almost a failure. Although I have about forty varieties of asters, early and late, the majority of the kernels fail to fill. High grade northern-grown aster seed will probably be very scarce."

C. S. HARRISON, of York, Neb., has recently returned from a trip among the seed collectors in the Rocky Mountains. In a trip of several hundred miles he says he did not see a single cone, but the collectors told him that in the high altitudes there will probably be plenty of Engelmanni spruce, a limited amount of pungens, plenty of aristata or foxtail pine, some Pinus flexilis, a small amount of sub-alpina and very little Douglas and concolor. Mr. Harrison says that owing to the scarcity of seeds of conifers on the eastern slope, some seed gatherers are getting seeds of the same name from the western slope, which, he says, are worse than useless for all our northern states. "Years ago these seeds were tried near Philadelphia and proved a dismal failure. Of course they are of no account farther north and will succeed only in the south."

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

A statistical authority gives the following totals as the imports and exports of seeds of all classes for the years ending June 30, 1907, and June 30, 1908:

| | IMPORTS. |
|---|---|
| 1907 | $ 6,404,776 |
| 1908 | 6,371,470 |
| | EXPORTS. |
| 1907 | $10,094,609 |
| 1908 | 8,683,688 |

IMPORTS.

The imports of seed through the port of New York for the week ending August 8 were as follows:

| Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. | Kind. | Pkgs. | Val. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Anise | 76 | $1,261 | Grass | 400 | $5.211 |

In the same period the imports of bulbs, trees and plants were valued at $12,571.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business has taken on its summer attire, and there is not much doing outside of occasional funeral work. Roses are holding up well, considering the season, and have a fair demand. Carnations are becoming quite small and these are mostly from outside plants. Asters are beginning to come in, but are poor. The markets are glutted with hardy phlox. Gladioli are more plentiful, but are mostly in dark colors, which do not meet with a ready sale.

Club Meeting.

The club held a meeting at the club rooms on Monday, August 10, which was well attended, considering the hot spell which we are having now. There is only one meeting each month during July and August. Quite a crowd went to the convention this year. The members left on the 8:55 train Monday morning, on the B. & O., which also had the Washington florists on board. There are about forty members present from Baltimore.

Louis P. Eyer was elected a member of the club.

W. O. Stran had a fine vase of Crego asters on display.

Various Notes.

Charles Hamilton, of Mount Washington, has just finished a cold storage building, 20x40 feet and two stories high. Mr. Hamilton does an extensive wholesale business in cut flowers and has finished another house for asparagus, 30x100 feet. C. M. Wagner is manager for Mr. Hamilton.

Carroll Hoffman, of Park Heights avenue, is building two small houses for carnations and violets.

Frederick Reitz, of Franklintown, Baltimore county, was fired upon by a colored man whom he found sleeping in his hay loft. Mr. Reitz had a desperate struggle with the man and only saved himself by knocking his hand upward, which sent the bullet wild. The negro jumped down the steps, ran across the road and disappeared in the woods on the opposite side.

Mrs. Perry, the mother of J. J. Perry, manager of the Florists' Exchange, is critically ill at Frederick. Mr. Perry went to her bedside Tuesday and had not returned, and it was feared that he might not be able to go with the boys to the convention. Q.

NEW SWEET PEA

Burpee's Earliest White

Burpee's Earliest White comes into full bloom in forty-five days after the seed is planted in the open ground. The dwarf plants, sixteen to twenty inches high, are clad in rich, dark green foliage and carry a profusion of the pure white flowers, borne upon strong stems six to eight inches long. Each stem has two or three of the fully expanded, well-formed flowers, of good size and placed close together.

From seed planted on May 18th Burpee's Earliest White was in full bloom on July 1st, while Mont Blanc, planted the same day, was showing only a few buds. It is also wondrously profuse-flowering.

Burpee's Earliest White is not only as extremely early, but also just as hardy as the famous pink-and-white Burpee's Earliest of All. It has black seed—and is really the only clear white Sweet Pea that has! This insures a better stand, stronger and more thrifty plants.

2956 Burpee's Earliest White is not only the earliest white in the open ground, but is also unequaled for forcing. The plants under glass begin to bloom freely when only twelve inches high and continue to grow and flower profusely until, when six or eight feet tall, they reach the top of the greenhouse; the plants can then be cut back, if desired, and will make an equally vigorous second growth.

Per pkt, 10c; per oz., 20c; ¼ lb., 60c; per lb., $2.00

☞ If you have not received Burpee's Blue List for 1908 (Wholesale Price List for Market Gardeners and Florists), you should write for a copy. This catalogue, from cover to cover, is full of information of interest to all planters of seed.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Club Meeting.

The Albany Florists' Club held its last meeting at the home of Patrick Hyde, 486 Hudson avenue. Fred A. Danker read an instructive paper on "The Aster and Its Diseases." Besides Mr. Danker, the question was spoken on by Louis Marks and John Haggerty.

Toward the close of the evening resolutions were adopted condemning the actions of certain unscrupulous persons, who by some means secure the cards of legitimate florists and go about to houses where crepe is seen upon the door and solicit orders for flowers.

Arrangements were made for a clambake which is to be given August 30 at the establishment of Henkes Bros., in Loudonville. This outing will be given to the members of the club and their friends. The affair is in charge of the following committee: Frederick Henkes, chairman; William King and Patrick Hyde. These gentlemen will have charge of the sports for the day: F. A. Danker, chairman; Edward Tracey, F. Connolly, J. Haggerty and J. Butts.

Five new members were received into the club. They were George Schinkel, R. D. Griffen, Theodore Draulley; Amos Balford and Alfred Simmons. Proposals for two new members were received. Among the out-of-town guests of the club were: James H. Schneider, of Rhinebeck, and Lewis E. Wood, of Fishkill.

After the regular business of the meeting was completed, the members were entertained by Denis McCarthy, who rendered some clever songs and recitations.

DUTCH BULBS.

The Dutch bulbs for the S. A. F. trades' display reached New York August 10 on the steamer Nieuw Amsterdam, that day in from Rotterdam. The following consignments were on board:

| Consignee. | Cases. |
|---|---|
| Boddington, A. T. | 3 |
| Maltus & Ware | 20 |
| Pierson, F. R., Co. | 2 |
| Roosa, J. F. | 6 |
| Vandegrift, F. B., & Co. | 2 |
| Vaughan's Seed Store | 6 |

Each boat will now bring its quota until the season's shipments all are in.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The weather turned decidedly cooler the past week, and though business improved, a couple of dark days retarded the cut of roses. Speciosum rubrum, gladioli and asters continue to be the popular flower, and the most plentiful. Greens are as scarce as at any time the past year.

The Park Superintendents' Association held their convention here the past week and appointed Seattle as the meeting place next year. They visited the local playgrounds and were delighted at the numerous natural advantages of the city. A trip to Lake Minnetonka was one of the features of their entertainment.

The Minneapolis Floral Co. is cutting some first-rate smilax.

O. C. Swanson has been away on his vacation, and on his return finds that business compares favorably with other years. He is selling a number of varieties of the popular outdoor flowers grown by himself.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is better at present than it has been at any period since June 1. The opening of the city schools has had the effect of bringing most of our town people back from the country and the increase in trade has been quite perceptible.

White stock of all kinds is moving well and everything in the line of light colored flowers is quickly bought up. Chrysanthemums have made their appearance here and several varieties of early whites and yellows are displayed.

Asters are now at the height of their season. They are mostly produced by the Chinese growers and the quality is good throughout. Semple's Branched seems to be the variety grown principally and they cost the stores from $1 to $2 per hundred.

Carnations, owing to the fact that many growers are at present changing their beds, are not in abundant supply. Enchantress and fancy whites are scarce and it will be several weeks before they are again offered in quantity. The red and deep pink varieties do not sell so well as the lighter colors. With roses there is still quite a shortage. There is no fancy stock at all to be seen, and Brides, Maids and a few second rate Beauties are all that can be seen at present. Sweet peas still sell well, and several growers who have long-stemmed batches just coming into bloom are getting good prices.

Amaryllis and gladioli are plentiful and at the same time sell well. The former costs the retailers about $2 per hundred. Lilium album and rubrum are fairly plentiful. They are good sellers and cost the stores from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen. Ferns and asparagus are plentiful at present, and the bunches are being made large enough so that the retailers can get something out of them. There is quite a difference between the bunches as made now and those of a couple of months ago, and it is all in favor of the retailer.

Various Notes.

Alexander Frey has returned from a two weeks' visit to Los Angeles and vicinity.

A regular meeting of the Society Hortensia was held in Alameda on Saturday evening last.

The Eureka Wire Works, of Oakland, are now located on Twelfth and Castro streets.

Chester Hutchison has completed his new store on Telegraph avenue, Berkeley. G.

POINSETTIAS IN CALIFORNIA.

I should like some information on poinsettias as cut flowers. What distance can they be shipped? What are the best methods of picking, packing and preserving them? W.

The poinsettias, as grown in California for the wholesale trade, are in the neighborhood of San Francisco cultivated entirely under glass and almost exclusively pot-grown. Those from southern California are grown almost entirely outdoors, owing to the mildness of the climate there.

In the vicinity of San Francisco we have no trouble whatever in getting the blooms from Los Angeles in good order. The only difficulty is with the foliage, which, if the packing is not carefully done, or if the stems are allowed to stand too long in water, usually drops off, although the flowers remain perfect. Those grown under glass in this neighborhood keep their foliage better than do the plants grown outside and, although the flowers are also more delicate, they, if handled carefully, will last longer than the others. On the other hand, they cost fully three times as much, and for ordinary trade the outside-grown flowers answer nicely. There is no difficulty in shipping them to any distance where they will not be covered up longer than three days, and they can be sent even farther than this, but the foliage usually suffers.

The flowers are cut when fully expanded. Each one should be tied up in a piece of tissue paper so that it will not rub, and the stems should be fixed so that they will not crush against each other. The boxes should be long enough so that there is no chance for the tops to touch the end of the box. Give some ventilation to the stems and see that they are not packed wet, and if they cannot move around in the box there should be no trouble in sending them many hundred miles.

When the boxes are opened, cut off the ends of the stems and plunge them in water. Do not put the flowers in a draughty or warm place. Take the papers off the blossoms. Even after the foliage has dropped, the blooms will keep for many days.

The poinsettias grown outdoors in the south cost the retailers about $10 per hundred, while those grown under glass cost about three or four times that much. Plants grown in pots cost from 50 cents to $1.50 each and are difficult to ship. Regarding the size and strength of the stem, the outside-grown stock is fully as large and heavy and keeps quite as long after being cut. G.

BERKELEY, CAL.—In Ocean View, the part of Alameda county which lies between the northern limits of Berkeley and the Contra Costa county line, steps have been taken for the incorporation of the district as a city, and if the movement, as now planned, is successful, it will involve Edward Gill, of the Gill Nursery Co., in peculiar political complications. Mr. Gill, who owns 300 acres of land, is the only resident who objects to the adoption of city government, and his opposition has been so strong that a compromise has been reached, whereby his property will not be included in the proposed incorporation. Mr. Gill will then own the only property north of Oakland, and within Alameda county, that is not within the limits of an incorporated town or city. He will have a county section all his own and will own an entire election precinct. The political situation, it is said, will be unique.

The Market.

The business for the last week averages up very well with other years. In fact, I believe that it shows a slight increase over last year, mostly because there are more flowers on the market now than then.

Asters and gladioli continue to be the main stock in trade, with a few roses and lilies on the side and now and then a few carnations. Asters are about equal to the demand in all grades except the best, of which there are not enough to fill all orders, and many more could be used. In the poorer grades there is a surplus in all colors except white, which sells out clean. Gladioli are still fine and the best quality sell well, but there are thousands being shipped to this market which at times it is impossible to sell for express charges. Roses are coming fairly well and the better grades are soon disposed of, but the majority of them are short-stemmed and the weather is so hot that they will not keep more than one day. Some good dahlias move very nicely, as they work well into a window display.

Various Notes.

The Cincinnati delegation got off in good shape. There were a goodly number of the craft from this city in the party to the convention and with them were quite a number from surrounding towns. Several florists from the south joined us here and M. Cook, with his wife and daughter, were all the way from New Orleans. E. G. Gillett will join the party at Detroit, as doubtless will J. W. Rodgers.

The annual Hamilton County Fair was held last week in the fair grounds at Carthage, O. It was an unqualified success this year and the exhibits in all departments were very good. The florists who entered in the flower and plant displays did themselves proud by the show they made. The principal exhibits were made by J. T. Conger, Hartwell; Henry Schwarz, South Norwood, and George & Allan, Hyde Park. J. T. Conger won about half of the prizes and the other exhibitors took the balance.

Mrs. A. Gargas left August 17 for an extended trip by boat down the Ohio river. She is with a party of friends and they will be gone some ten days.

Max Rudolph leaves this week for his annual trip about the Great Lakes in quest of the finny tribe.

C. J. Ohmer.

PEORIA, ILL.—Frank E. Rue reports an unusually good demand from the retailers for Boston ferns, sago palms and flowering begonias.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—It is reported that Miss Anna S. Cammack, the only daughter of the millionaire florist, John Cammack, has made a fight for a part of her father's estate and has been successful. She was cut off in the will with the income from a trust fund of $50,000. Now an arrangement has been made by which she is to receive control of an additional $200,000 in gilt-edged securities.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

THERE will be none too many two-year-old cherry trees on the market next spring.

DRY weather is affecting the fruit crops and the buying power of the orchardists.

THERE is a first rate call for the better peonies for September delivery, almost none at all for the now common sorts.

THE growth of nursery stock has not been all that the average nurseryman would like, on account of continued dry weather.

NURSERYMEN as a rule are looking forward to next spring as the banner year for the business, especially in the west and in ornamentals.

THE wholesale nurseries report that the fall season will not fail to be a good one—since storage houses have become a part of the equipment of every up-to-date nursery the fall deliveries by the wholesalers have increased rapidly.

FLORISTS will do more fall planting of nursery stock this year than they ever did before, for they are gradually finding out that ornamentals, and shrubbery especially, make a fine side line for the florist who has space for good specimens on his home grounds.

THOSE who do a large mailing trade in plants should be interested in a new mailing tube recently put on the market by the Standard Mfg. Co., Second and Vine streets, Philadelphia. The tube is split and of light but strong pasteboard; strong enough to resist the pressure of the mail bags. The tubes come in nests of five sizes.

THE JUNEBERRY.

On page 44 of the REVIEW for July 23 I saw a note on the Juneberry, but it did not tell where I can buy such a tree. As I never heard of it before, I would like something of that kind. Tell whoever wrote that piece to put his name to it and I will send for a few plants.

T. P.

The plant known as the Juneberry is one of our native shrubs or small trees, common to the eastern United States and Canada. Besides Juneberry, it is known in some sections as the shadbush, and to botanists as Amelanchier Canadensis. The form most often met with in cultivation is the dwarf or bush type, but in nature both are quite common. The fruits are rather dry, but have a pleasant flavor. They have never been extensively cultivated, because of the difficulty of protecting them from birds, which are fond of them. You can order of almost any nursery that deals in ornamental stock.

Our Red Seedling Carnation to be disseminated January 1, 1909

This is a seedling of Enchantress and Crusader. The color is a shade deeper than Crusader. The flower is very double, with high built center. It has wonderful keeping qualities and will therefore be a fine shipper. Although the flower is one of the fullest and heaviest, the calyx is strong enough to hold it and we have seen very few splits in the years we have been growing it. The flower is three inches or more across and freely produced. Everybody who can do Enchantress can do well with this. It has the growth and stem of Enchantress. We had 5000 plants last winter for cut flowers and it beat any other red on the place; the flowers always brought 1 cent or more above the market price of other reds. We have benched 25,000 plants and shall exhibit it this fall at all the flower shows and at that time we shall give it a name.

ASTERS, HOLLYHOCKS AND IBERIS

I am going to build some greenhouses and I would like to get a little information. I have been in the florists' business a long time, but want to raise some small stuff that I often need. Will someone tell me when to plant asters, hollyhocks and candytuft so I can have them to bloom in July and August?

C. M. T.

Asters for early outside blooming should be sown in February, and for later crops a succession of sowings can be made up till the middle of June. The young plants should be pricked out into boxes as soon as they are fit to handle, and transferred into the flowering beds as soon as ready. This same routine applies to plants to be flowered under glass.

Hollyhocks should be sown now and the seedlings transplanted to a cold-frame as soon as ready. They require protection the first winter. Transplant to the flowering grounds early in the spring.

Candytuft for winter blooming can be sown now. The young plants should be potted as soon as ready and transferred to benches in September. For fall blooming sow in April or May, in the ground where they are to bloom. RIBES.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY.—Wm. F. Snyder has purchased the fixtures and stock of the Savage Floral Co. and will continue the business.

WAGNER PARK CONSERVATORIES—FIRST PRIZE PEONIES

After a number of years of experimenting we have selected three varieties of peonies out of our large list that we consider the best and most profitable for florists, and have called these three varieties our First Prize Varieties. Their selection was not only made on account of their beautiful large blossoms borne on long stiff stems, color, free flowering qualities, and being the best for cut flowers, but on account of their continuous and long flowering period, which is an important feature to the florist.

FIRST PRIZE WHITE—Has immense pure white blossoms, with carmine flaked tips to a few center petals. It is the first to flower and is succeeded just before its flowers begin to fade by the First Prize Pink.

FIRST PRIZE PINK—Blossoms immense on long stiff stems and in color almost identical to a La France rose.

FIRST PRIZE RED—This beautiful variety, resembling the American Beauty rose in color, succeeds the First Prize Pink, extending the flowering period for peony blossoms almost two months.

We are sure that our efforts in supplying the florist with three grand varieties of peonies, enabling them to have a continuation of bloom over such a length of time in place of overstocking him with blossoms all at one time, will be appreciated, and we are expecting a great demand for this stock, so advise the placing of orders as early as possible so there will be no disappointment in securing the best stock. Orders will be filled in rotation as received. Stock will be ready to ship September first.

BLIGHT ON GERANIUMS.

Two weeks ago my geraniums were doing finely. Now the leaves are all drying up and are all spotted, like the enclosed specimens. Any information you can give me as to the trouble will be greatly appreciated. G. L. E.

The leaves received were badly blighted. In this respect it may be some small consolation for you to know that your experience is this year by no means exceptional. It invariably makes its appearance outdoors after drenching rains or during hot, muggy weather. How to counteract it I cannot tell, but one thing we have noticed is that while our plants from last fall's cuttings are immune from disease, spring rooted stock is full of blight. Certain kinds, like Beaute Poitevine, double Grant, Dryden, S. A. Nutt and Ricard, show no disease, while La Favorite, Centaure, Paul Crampel and Jean Viaud are affected. How to account for this I cannot tell, as all were propagated and treated alike. I know of no remedial measures you can adopt. Perhaps you may not have any trouble again for years. Everything, I think, depends on climatic conditions, but it would be well not to propagate from the affected plants this fall. C. W.

LILIES FOR EASTER.

When should Easter lilies be started so as to have them in for Easter time? What care do they need after planting and when should they be housed?

R. H. G.

These should be potted not later than the middle of October. Then you are sure to have them in season without hard forcing. After potting, place on a cellar floor, away from the light, or stand in a coldframe; after watering, cover the pots with ashes or sand, removing this covering as soon as the tops appear. For later cultural details watch the Review's suggestions as they appear weekly and you will find full directions at frequent intervals.

SEEDS—Continued

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.

Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.

Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.

As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.

Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price, $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

REPOTTING MUMS.

Can chrysanthemums repotted from 2-inch into 4-inch in the month of July remain in 4-inch to flower? I have about a dozen different varieties, but mostly Glory of Pacific and Polly Rose. Would it be better to give them a shift into 5-inch pots? C. U.

The chrysanthemums will become rather starved in 4-inch pots and a shift to 5½-inch will insure nice flowers. If you have no bench space to plant these in and want them for cutting, why not put them in boxes in five inches of earth? They would thus give you as fine flowers as in the pots, and at a much reduced cost. C. W.

JOINTS IN CAST-IRON PIPE.

Will you kindly give directions for making a cement joint with red lead and oakum, or any other good cement joint for cast-iron pipe? W. J. S.

A good paste for calking cast-iron joints with oakum is made by using equal parts of red and white lead mixed with boiled oil. Make the paste thick, thoroughly saturate the oakum and drive it in tight. Let it set well before putting on the water. L. C. C.

THREE COLORADO HOUSES.

In the accompanying illustration of my place the boiler house will be seen covering the north end of the house. House No. 1 is 18x75 feet, side walls four and a half feet high, with eighteen inches of glass for about sixty feet on the east side. It is ten and a half feet to the ridge. House No. 2 is connected to the south end of No. 1. Its walls are five and a half feet high, with eighteen inches of glass in the east side. This house is 19x60 feet and eleven and a half feet to the ridge. The office covers the south end of No. 2, with the exception of a small corner. We have four 2-inch flows, with six 2-inch returns through No. 2, and halfway down No. 1, and would like your opinion on how much more piping is needed to keep 55 degrees, when the temperature is 20 degrees below zero outside. We have four 1 and the new house called No. 3? There would be glass gables to within three feet of the floor line. Should we put the returns under the benches? Our boiler is fifty horse-power. L. A. D.

If I were arranging the piping in these houses I should carry a 3½-inch flow from the boiler under the ridge to the far end of house No. 1 and there take off the necessary 2-inch branches to supply four manifolds, each carrying three 2-inch returns, or twelve 2-inch returns for the house. House No. 2 should have a 2½-inch flow, which would be a continuation of the 3½-inch flow pipe in house No. 1. To complete the piping in house No. 2, use four manifolds of three 2-inch pipes, one under each bench, the same as in house No. 1. For house No. 3 I would suggest the use of an independent 3-inch flow from the boiler, under the ridge of benches in each house. There is one flow and return under each side bench, the balance under the middle benches.

We are going to build on the east side one house sixteen feet wide, six feet to the gutter, with three feet of glass on the east side. There will be glass on the west side above the gutter of the old houses. The new house will be about twelve feet to the ridge. Would two 2½-inch flows near the gutters be sufficient to supply the house, and how many returns will be needed? It would require about the same temperature. How should we regulate the flows between house No. the house rather than along side walls, and the installation of ten 2-inch returns arranged under the benches. These directions contemplate the use of hot water at 180 degrees. L. C. C.

HEAT FOR SIX HOUSES.

We want someone to give us a plan for heating our range of six houses. Three of the houses are for carnations. They are each 22x100, and run east and west. At the east end of these is a corridor house, running north and south and extending about fourteen feet north of the main part of the range. This house is 10x80 and will be used for smilax. At the north end of it is the boiler-house. Running east from this corridor house are two rose houses, each 22x100. The houses have 8-foot iron gutter posts and meas-

"The Kroeschell"

in 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907

NO OTHER TYPE OF BOILER HAS EVER EQUALED SUCH A RECORD OR MADE SO MANY FRIENDS

Marysville Floral Co., Marysville, O., write:

"We have a No. 4 boiler which takes care of 7000 sq. ft. of glass and would take care of twice that amount. We first had a new cast iron boiler which lasted only two years when it cracked to pieces. The second was a second-hand boiler. We consider your boiler the best paying investment we ever made."

Mr. J. G. Frisz, of Vincennes, Ind., writes as follows:

"Your No. 13 boiler is carrying 25,000 square feet of glass and I can keep it at 60° in the coldest weather without any trouble. I have three cast iron boilers also heating a range of 25,000 square feet of glass, but the No. 13 Kroeschell boiler only takes half the coal and half the work to get the same results."

Geo. Mathews, Great Neck, N. Y., writes:

"I have two of your boilers, but formerly used four different types of boilers, all of them cast iron. I consider the Kroeschell boilers the finest heaters of any of these boilers."

Geo. N. Sones & Sons, Hamilton, Ont., write:

"We can say nothing but good of your boiler. It gives more heat with less fuel; it is safer; no leaking as is the case with some of the cast iron boilers; your boiler needs less attention than any boiler we ever saw; it is more easily kept clean; and most important of all is that you get heat out of every shovel of coal burned."

Grant Newport, Cedar Rapids, Ia., writes:

"I have had a cast iron boiler but it broke down twice in two years, always in the coldest weather. It broke down December 29th and I lost all my stock in consequence. I now have two Kroeschell boilers and do not worry about their breaking down."

Mr. Geo. Engel, Xenia, O., writes:

"The No. 4 boiler bought in 1902 is taking care of 7,000 square feet of glass and would take care of 2,000 more. I would not have a cast iron boiler for a gift."

Kroeschell Bros. Co., 51 Erie St., Chicago

ure fourteen feet ten inches from the ground to the ridge.

We expect to use 1½-inch pipe, running the main feed under the walk in the corridor house. This is about as far as we have got with the plan, and if you will give us information as to the necessary amount of pipe we shall appreciate it very much. T. F. & S.

---

If you can save money by using 1¼-inch pipe, it will answer your purpose quite as well as 1½-inch pipe and be a little easier to install. Each house to be run on the carnation temperature can be handled by using a 2-inch flow under the ridge and twelve 1¼-inch returns. The rose house should have a 2½-inch flow and fifteen 1¼-inch returns. The corridor will likely not require more than four 1¼ inch pipes, in addition to the heat from the main flow. I do not believe it will be wise to install less than a 6-inch main flow, as it is evident you contemplate adding more houses. Keep the boilers well down, unless you are to use a pump or trap for return water.

L. C. C.

PIPING A CARNATION HOUSE.

Please inform me how to pipe a house 26x80 for carnations. The house runs east and west, is five feet to the eaves and twelve feet to the ridge, with two feet of glass on the sides. The east end also is glass, the west end being protected by a house. There will be five benches the length of the house. I want to use 1½-inch pipe for the returns under the benches. The boiler-pit is four feet below the surface at the west end. The expansion tank is fifteen feet above the boiler. The location is Ohio.

Would the use of the Honeywell heat generator allow us to use less and smaller pipes throughout the system? If so, what could be used? L. N. B.

The house in question should be well provided for by using one 3-inch flow and eighteen 1½-inch returns, or two 2½-inch flows and the same number of returns. The piping can be arranged so as to place five lines of pipes under the bench on the most exposed side; four under the other outside bench, and three lines under each of the three interior benches.

I know of no way to decrease the amount of radiation required for water or steam at a given temperature. The amount of radiation varies according to the temperature of the water or steam contained. Anything which increases the temperature of the fluid carried correspondingly reduces the amount of radiation required to maintain a desired temperature. L. C. C.

PIPING FOR ENLARGED HOUSES.

Please state what piping must be added to our present hot water system, in order to properly heat our houses, which have been enlarged. The houses have not been lengthened, but have been made wider and connected to each other. All the present piping is under the benches. What additional piping is needed will be run up on the gutter posts, with return coils under the benches. The location is eastern Wisconsin.

We have one rose house, 19x100, and three carnation houses, 21x82, 26x82 and 24x82, respectively. The carnation houses are on the north side of the rose house and are all connected, but there is a partition between the rose house and the carnation houses. At the west end of the houses, and extending across their entire width, is a shed, where the boilers are. The east ends are double boarded to a distance of three feet and a half from the ground, with glass the rest of the way. The north wall has four feet and a half of boards and three feet of glass. The south wall of the rose house is only four feet high and is boarded up entirely. The ridge of the rose house is twelve feet high. The ridges of the carnation houses are, respectively, fourteen feet, fifteen feet six inches, and fourteen feet nine inches high.

The rose house has at present three

DEAR SIR:—We are glad to report that the "Compound Vacuum System of Heating" which you installed for us last fall, has given good satisfaction. We find our range, which covers about 3 acres, is equally heated at all points, the action of the Vacuum System being equally good close to and at the greatest distance from boilers—and always positive and reliable. We can heartily recommend your system for the heating of large areas.

Very truly yours, DUNBAR & HOPKINS.

DEAR SIR:—In answer to your inquiry of the 8th inst., will say that the Simonds Vacuum Heating System installed in our greenhouses last season is giving perfect satisfaction. As you know, we are using the exhaust steam from the Darling Milling Co., situated 310 feet from our greenhouses. We have no difficulty in heating the houses at any time, in any kind of weather, at atmospheric pressure. Will also say that we saved the price of your system, in being able to cut down our supply pipes alone over the other system. We remain yours, flows and three returns of 4-inch pipe, and two flows and two returns of 2-inch pipe. The next house has three flows and four returns of 4-inch pipe. The middle carnation house has five flows and five returns of 4-inch pipe. The north house has four flows and four returns of 4-inch pipe. J. N.

If the piping is in good order and gives good service, it should do the work in the new plant without addition or modification. The rose house has radiation which should hold a temperature of 65 degrees, and the carnation houses have just about the right piping for a temperature of 50 degrees. This is based on good circulation and a temperature of 180 degrees in the boilers. You should be able to heat the one large carnation house more easily than three smaller ones. L. C. C.

HOT WATER FOR SMALL HOUSE.

I am building a two-third-span house, 11x40 and eight feet to the ridge. The south wall is four feet high and the north wall five feet. I am going to keep a general line of pot plants in it and will heat it with hot water. I would like to know if a Wilks heater, 20x42, will do the work. I want to use a 2-inch flow and 1½-inch returns. Please tell me how to arrange the pipe and about what temperature will be needed day and night. I have 500 feet of 1½-inch pipe and 100 feet of 2-inch that I bought cheap. I am located in Tennessee. J. F. C.

To pipe your house to maintain a temperature of 65 to 70 degrees, which will be desirable for a general collection of plants, it will be necessary to use one 2-inch flow pipe under the ridge and ten 1½-inch returns the length of the house. If you wish to run cooler plants the number of returns can be reduced to eight, but ten will meet the conditions for any plants that you will probably wish to grow. If your boiler is rated to carry 300 feet of radiation, it will be ample. The plan above described contemplates the use of an elevated expansion tank, connected with the main return near the boiler. ## USING LARGE PIPE.

Please give me information as to how many 4-inch pipes I need to heat a house 26x118 in northern Illinois climate. I want to heat to 60 degrees at 10 degrees below zero. How should it be arranged? The house contains two 4-foot benches and two 6-foot benches. The house runs north and south and the boiler-shed will be at the south end. H. V.

While I do not recommend the use of 4-inch pipe in houses over 100 feet in length, unless artificial means of circulation are provided, the following will supply the necessary radiation with a boiler temperature of 180 degrees and normal circulation: Under these conditions eight 4-inch pipes the length of the house should supply the desired temperature. I should arrange to use two of the pipes as flows and six as returns. L. C. C.

turns would join in a common 2½-inch pipe back to the boiler, which sits ten feet below the greenhouse. The only question in my mind is if the 2½-inch pipe from the boiler would be big enough.

---

If I understand your letter correctly you have only one house, which is 11x90 feet. If this is the case, you will not require so much piping as you have planned to install. A single 2-inch pipe will be ample to supply steam to the six 1¼-inch returns. If you do not have the 2-inch pipe, but have the 2½-inch on hand, substitute it for the 2-inch, but it will be overlarge. Run one 2-inch or 2½-inch pipe from the boiler through the shed and under the ridge of the greenhouse to the far end and there divide by two branches, one to each manifold of three 1¼-inch pipes. With five to eight pounds boiler pressure, and the boiler located as stated, you should get excellent results.

CEMENT IN GREENHOUSE WALLS.

I expect to go into the florists' business in this city, beginning operation about April of next year. I intend to build a three-quarter-span house, 20x96, with a boiler-house, etc., as a beginning. I am considering the advisability of building the side walls of the greenhouse of cement blocks and would be pleased to have your opinion in regard to this method of construction. Is it more economical than grout or brick, and does it give good satisfaction? J. H. B.

Few of the modern commercial growers are using either brick or cement for greenhouse walls, the objections being cost and the unsuitability of the material, because of the porousness and coldness of the walls during winter. If hollow cement blocks are used, this objection is partly overcome.

Economic construction, durability and lightness combined can be attained by using tubular iron supports, set in concrete blocks, and attaching thereto ordinary wooden walls. Any of the construction companies will gladly supply plans and estimates. Walls constructed on these lines cost about 30 cents per lineal foot for seven feet high.

RIBES.

BEST DARK RED GERANIUM.

What is the name of the darkest red geranium known and where can I get them? D. S.

We are really unable to state which is the darkest red geranium known. Very dark varieties are of little commercial value, those of clear scarlet or crimson scarlet shades being in the best request. S. A. Nutt is the standard double crimson geranium for bedding or pot culture. El Cid, of a velvety crimson color, is fine, while Colossus, of rather more recent introduction, is a beautiful dark crimson. In singles, Jacquerie continues to lead. Its color is crimson scarlet. Cannell's Crimson Bedder is another splendid variety. If you want good, dark crimson geraniums to sell, any of the foregoing varieties will please you. They are each and all good for either bedding or pot culture.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons Co., White Marsh, Md., publish a geranium catalogue, well illustrated, and are leading specialists with these plants in America. We can recommend them as being a reliable firm. C. W.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF OUR ESTABLISHMENT

PRACTICALLY ALL GROWERS NOW REALIZE THAT BY FAR THE BEST MATERIAL FOR GREENHOUSE BENCHES IS

PECKY CYPRESS

It is like any other cypress except that it looks as though it were full of worm holes, but isn't; it is especially like other cypress in that it has to be open air dried in the south. It is dried until it weighs three pounds to the board foot, or 3,000 pounds to the thousand feet. Consequently 10,000 feet will make a minimum car. We can ship from our yards to the central states, or direct from the mills in Louisiana to florists in New England and to growers in the far west, and it is only a question of time when all growers will use it.

It doesn't take so very many feet of bench to call for a minimum car of pecky cypress. It comes 1x6 inches and the boards eight to twenty feet long. With about an inch between for drainage, a bench four feet wide will take seven boards, or three and one-half feet lumber measure for each lineal foot of bench. Side pieces bring it up to four and one-half feet. Consequently a minimum car, 10,000 feet of lumber, would suffice for only twenty-two benches 4x100. The average car contains 13,000 to 15,000 feet.

If you don't need a car yourself, get your neighbors to club in with you and order a car. :: ::

DUBUQUE, IA.

The funeral of U. S. Senator William B. Allison, who was buried August 9 in Linwood cemetery here, caused some extra design work for the florists. A casket cover in the colors of the national flag was ordered by the family; a large crescent with lyre on stand by the Iowa delegation to congress; a large panel design of white with "Iowa" in large red letters by the state officers, and a large laurel wreath from Washington; these were some of the largest and best designs. There were several large wreaths of roses, and other designs. Many more would have been sent had not the family published a notice of "Omit flowers." The stores and factories closed during the funeral services. W. A. H.

A CHANCE TO GET MANURE.

Thousands of Jersey commuters, who daily make the trip to New York city, are about to lose two familiar landmarks. These are the mountains of strawy manure which border the tracks of the Pennsylvania, Erie and Lackawanna railroads in that part of the Hackensack meadows lying about three miles on the New York side of Newark. The Pennsylvania and Erie managements, which maintained these malodorous heaps for so many years that the traveling public had given up hope of the abatement of the nuisance, have been induced to promise their removal by reason of the protests of the pollution committee of the New York Merchants' Association. Last month Edward Hatch, Jr., chairman of the committee, wrote to the two roads, pointing out the fact that the manure heaps were vast breeding grounds for countless flies which menaced the health of New York, the metropolitan district and even more distant localities, and asking that the practice of storing manure in the meadows be discontinued.

He has received a letter from the Erie, saying that the company appreciates the objection which is made to the proximity of the manure heaps to the tracks and will make arrangements for its removal. The Pennsylvania has notified the authorities of the town of Kearny that the location of its manure piles will be changed, a more remote site farther south having been selected.

Thus an institution which has brought reproach upon two great trunk lines, not only from commuters, but from travelers from all parts of the country, is happily to pass out of existence, for these are the only manure heaps maintained by railroads in the neighborhood of New York.

GARDENERS' WAGES AT KEW.

When the vote of £83,124 for salaries and expenses of the Board of Agriculture was before the British House of Commons the other day, someone called attention to the wages paid to the gardeners in the Royal Gardens, Kew. He urged that the wages paid to the gardeners should be raised from a guinea to 24 shillings weekly. It was, in his opinion, begging the question to say that the gardeners were improvers. He thought the wages should be raised to the level of those paid in the London parks. In reply, Sir E. Strachey said the gardeners at Kew are young unmarried men, who come under special conditions with a view to obtain experience, and that they can only remain two years. The guinea paid them weekly is more in the nature of a subsistence than a wage, and the advantages they receive through being at Kew for the two years have to be taken into account.

PLUMOSUS UNDER LATH SHADE.

Asparagus plumosus, so much used for decorative purposes, is cultivated out of doors for market purposes near Naples, Italy. According to a writer in Revue Horticole, M. Traverso has succeeded by a cheap and ingenious device in overcoming the difficulties due to excessive dry heat and the dangerous winds that occur in that part of Italy. His plantation is surrounded with close lattice work, and is roofed over with the same material at about seven feet from the ground. The results are said to be excellent, and the plants grow freely and give little trouble.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

A GALAX SCROLL.

The scroll is not a favorite with Charles Henry Fox, Columbia avenue and Twenty-first street, Philadelphia, but when he makes it he tries to make his personality show in the work, as in everything he does. The illustration shows a scroll made of orchids and galax leaves, the effect being enhanced by the varied hues of the caladium leaves. Mr. Fox believes that judgment should be used in the colors of the caladiums, so that they will not clash with each other or with the orchids. PHIL.

SOME WINDOWS.

Two Requisites.

The window that really attracts and holds the attention and stamps itself on the memory of the casual observer is a rare one. It has two requisites; a fair amount of good stock makes about one-half its value, and a plan of display which allows a liberal view of stem and foliage against a suitable background makes up the other half. The beauty of it is, there are endless suitable backgrounds and settings and plans of display.

Window displays are for the purpose of attracting customers. Then it follows that stock best displayed sells at a better price and more quickly than poorly displayed stock. People of means have always been known as patrons of art; then why not of our art? The trouble is, only a few florists show works of art in their windows.

Flowers when cut are taken from their natural surroundings and, in order to display them to the best advantage, this setting or its substitute must be at least partially restored.

Displays in Dull Seasons.

Again, since window displays are for the purpose of attracting customers, the dull season is the time when we should put in our best efforts and most time. But somebody will say that the dull season does not furnish enough stock for fine displays. Bless you, that is just your opportunity. You will not be bothered with a surplus and can use your stock to fine advantage. Two dozen roses or a few hollyhocks, well displayed, may win for you a better customer than you have ever had. Keep out more than you put in, is a good rule for all window trimming. Educate to quality and charm of arrangement. Display one kind of flowers sometimes with a great variety of color, introducing others subordinately in color and amount.

Inoffensive Funeral Designs.

Where to draw the line in the display of funeral design work without suggesting mourning is no trifling question. Although it ought not to be, funeral work is the main standby of the average florist. Like undertaking, it is "a bit ticklish" to advertise. Yet, after all, there are few designs which are positively obnoxious in themselves. The trouble is that, being always made in the same style, they are too likely to suggest some particular funeral occasion.

Sometimes for an Easter window have an immense wide cross of gilded ivy or galax leaves. Convert the entire window into a field of Easter lilies and spiræas, interspersed with adiantums and valley, and set in the cross prominently. Would that appeal to you as funereal? Yet, for that very reason it might bring an order for a handsome funeral design.

Skillful Use of Current Events.

If some musical event is on, trim an oriental harp with blue pansies, silver the strings, and lean it against an ivy pillar on a ground of sweet alyssum or white pansies, and somebody will remember it when at some future time he wants a funeral design.

On a hot summer day make a pillow of shaded asters, with a fringe of chiffon or ribbon. Make another of different sizes of ferns, with a monogram or pennant. Make another of some brilliant contrasting color. Group the three together, sofa-cushion fashion, on a background of sheet moss. Make a small hammock of wide chiffon or veiling and tie it across the corner of the window with violet cord. Throw a few full blown roses into it, letting some fall out on to a book lying open on the grass below. There is no crepe about that, yet you have displayed pillows and also suggested your ability to make a variety of them.

Wreaths and Scrolls.

On some off day use a boxwood wreath three or four feet in diameter, on which you have spread a generous bunch of Killarney roses. Set this in your window and sprinkle liberally several times and the roses will last all day. The next day they can be renewed or something else substituted. A wreath is always decorative, just as much so for a store as for a casket.

Make a good, smooth scroll of foliage, plain or painted. Decorate the center with a pretty spray of rosebuds. Set in the window near to where you have planted a campaign torch, and you have a classic Greek window. At some appropriate and convenient time almost any one of the ordinary funeral pieces may be displayed inoffensively.

Your Own Untrammeled Thought.

So, without trying to be original and by carefully avoiding extremes, cut away from precedent and give expression to the best in your imagination. Get real pleasure out of your window work. There no fussy customer can limit you. It is your own thought carried out.

But only as fascination beckons you on can you truly enjoy it. If you stand back and view the finished product with folded arms and complacent air, deciding that this piece is a gem, perfect in design and execution, it is time for you to register in the kindergarten. You have not yet begun to learn. But when you feel that if you had the opportunity to do that same window over again you could remove some glaring faults and add some better touches, you are on the right road. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

CONVENTION AFTERMATH

New Canadian Officers.

At the closing session of the annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Society, held at Niagara Falls, Ont., August 20, the following officers were elected:

President—E. Dale, Brampton.

First vice-president—H. E. Philpott, Winnipeg.

Second vice-president — J. Connor, Hamilton.

Secretary—A. H. Ewing, Woodstock.

Treasurer—H. Simmers, Toronto.

Directors for two years, to succeed Messrs. Philpott and Connor—William Hopton, Montreal, and C. H. Janzen, Berlin.

Directors for three years—E. Annandale, Toronto; E. F. Collins, Toronto, and J. Walker, Montreal.

The Trade Exhibition.

The trade exhibition gave the S. A. F. a net profit of $1,000, largely through the generosity of the hotel management in permitting the use of the Cataract house without charge. The accommodations provided free have usually cost several hundreds of dollars. The expense of installation was considerable, especially the space under canvas, which cost more than was received for it.

The exhibitors in many cases did most satisfactory business, but there was general complaint that the outsiders were so numerous as to crowd out the florists. This has been provided against for future conventions, but it is suggested that if exhibitors have further ideas as to how the trades' display can be made more successful they be put in writing and placed in the hands of the secretary, while fresh in mind, for consideration of the board of directors at the proper time. It is recognized on all sides that the trades' display is one of the most important features of the convention.

Judges' Report.

The judges of the trade exhibit made a supplemental report August 21, withdrawing the awards previously made to the Altimo Culture Co. for asters and George M. Garland for iron gutter. They overruled the protest of J. A. Payne.

Bowling.

Buffalo won the national championship in the big S. A. F. convention contest at Buffalo August 21, by the narrow margin of five pins. Following are the scores:

Committee on Horticultural Education.

At the request of E. V. Hallock, chairman of this committee, I submit the following report on behalf of the committee:

At the last annual meeting of this society, held in Philadelphia, the question of horticultural education in the common schools was discussed at length, and as a result a committee was appointed to take up this work. At the Congress of Horticulture, held at the Jamestown exposition in September of the same year, this question was again discussed at length, and a committee was also appointed by that body, consisting of Dr. A. C. True, of Washington, D. C., director of Experiment Stations, United States Department of Agriculture; Mr. E. V. Hallock and myself.

The suggestion was made at Philadelphia that effort should be made through the legislature of the various states to establish a system of school gardens; but it seemed wiser to the committee to endeavor first to interest the Department of Education in this subject before appealing to the legislature.

The committee appointed by the Congress of Horticulture met at Cornell University, Ithaca, June 19, 1908, and after considerable discussion, adopted a tentative course of study to be presented to the Educational Department of the state of New York; and a conference was arranged with Dr. A. S. Downing, assistant commissioner of the Department, August 3.

At that time the matter was discussed at length, and the committee was pleased to find that the Department received favorably the suggestions made. Dr. Downing stated that said suggestions were in line with the policy already adopted by the state, and finally requested the committee to draw up a course of study for the consideration of the Department, stating that they would take up the matter and go into the necessary details as soon as a new syllabus was issued, which would be in the following year.

The idea of the committee was to emphasize especially the necessity for elementary education in horticulture in our graded and common schools, in connection with the school garden idea, making it an interesting and instructive course of study, combining botany, nature study, etc., teaching the children to observe and love nature. This horticultural course should be made exceedingly simple and practical, and should combine the school garden idea with the adornment of grounds surrounding the school buildings, interesting the children in their environments. They should be taught what can be done with the most unattractive surroundings, and at the same time be given a general knowledge of horticulture, especially making the acquaintance of their native grasses, trees, shrubs, vines and flowers. Where the grounds permit, planting should be done under the direction of competent teachers, so that they will become generally well acquainted with our common plants—something which is practically lacking today, even among the best educated people. And another aspect of the case that appeals to the committee is that by interesting the children in their surroundings, a higher standard will be raised in their minds regarding the ownership of property, which would result in inculcating the right idea in regard to property rights, thus making better citizens of the boys and girls who attend our schools, who are really the warp and woof of our commonwealth.

While the work of the committee was especially to secure such a course of study in the common schools, it felt it wise to advocate a complete course; and it was suggested that at least two special horticultural and agricultural schools should be established for special courses in these branches—one situated in the eastern part of the state and one in the western part—the one in the east to specialize more particularly in horticultural subjects, and the one in the west in agricultural and pomological subjects. These special secondary high schools would then become feeders for Cornell University.

It seems to the committee very necessary that such a comprehensive plan should be adopted, as at the present time Cornell University is obliged to take practically unprepared students, which compels it to do the work that secondary schools should do. The special horticultural and agricultural schools could then do much of the preliminary work that Cornell is now obliged to do, leaving it free to teach the higher and more scientific work, which is its legitimate field.

The establishment of these schools, however, would be a matter that would come before the legislature, and steps looking toward that end will be taken in due time. The special effort of the committee at present, however, will be to secure the incorporation of a definite course of study in the elementary and graded schools.

While much has already been done in New York state in this direction, the present syllabus leaves too much to the discretion of the individual teachers, who, perhaps, have little knowledge of the subject. What the committee desires is to secure a definite, systematic course of instruction, incorporated in the syllabus, so that it will not be optional, but as much a required study as mathematics, English and the other common branches. The committee has considered it wiser to concentrate its efforts, and has selected New York state as the field of operation, and if this effort is successful, after a definite course has been adopted by the state of New York, the committee will then appeal to the other states.

National Flower Show.

The executive committee for the national flower show held a meeting at Niagara Falls August 20, at which a considerable number of members of the general committee and other prominent members of the trade were in attendance. Chairman Kasting presided. It was decided to call in another thirty per cent of the guarantee fund. Details pertaining to management were discussed.

There is to be a special meeting of the S. A. F. at Chicago during the flower show.

THE CONVENTION.

From the Standpoint of an Exhibitor.

Of all pests the chronic faultfinder is the worst. However, sincere criticism is the basis of all radical improvement, so I modestly trust my observations may suggest some way by which the florists' trade in general may be benefited.

The admission of the general public to the convention this year, I venture to say, caused more annoyance to the members of the S. A. F., and particularly to the exhibitors, than all other causes combined. Many of the smaller articles on display were stolen, and considerable injury was caused to delicate plants, orchids and ribbons, by promiscuous handling by the multitude. The annoyance became so unbearable that a petition was presented to the superintendent, signed by most of the exhibitors, requesting that the general public be excluded. This was carried into effect, and a few moments later one of the exhibitors of pottery rushed to the superintendent stating: "You are excluding the department store merchants, with whom I do considerable business." The doors were thereupon thrown open to man, woman and child, and the souvenir hunters were again in their glory. Now, the point I wish to emphasize is this: The conventions are rendered possible by the joint efforts and contributions of the members and exhibitors, and their convenience should be first of all considered. I suggest the issuing of admission cards to members of the S. A. F. and their families and also to non-member florists upon making their identity known to the secretary. The general public should be charged an admission fee of a nominal sum, say 25 cents per person, to keep out children and the merely curious, and should be conducted in parties by a guide through the exhibition hall, and cautioned not to touch the exhibits. The guide might answer all the questions asked, although I fear this would be impossible. The proceeds of admission fees might either be deposited in the society's treasury or devoted to the entertainment of members by the local committee.

To suggest another improvement, I refer to the hour of closing the exhibition hall each evening. Under the present system there is no definite time fixed for closing. I would suggest that the hall be cleared of both spectators and exhibitors promptly at 9:30 each evening, notice being announced by the watchman at 9:15. In this manner exhibitors and their employees will be given a much needed rest, or an opportunity to mingle with their friends.

I trust that my humble observations may be of service to the S. A. F. by the evolution of a more perfect system, which will surely redound to their benefit. Sydney B. Wertheimer.

OUT-OF-DOOR ROSES.

BY W. C. BARRY, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

[Read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.]

In consenting to prepare a paper on "Out-of-Door Roses" for the twenty-fourth annual meeting of the S. A. F., I must admit that I did so with considerable hesitation, realizing full well that my statements, observations and conclusions would be subject to the consideration and criticism of experts.

Your fame for rose growing under glass is world-wide. You have achieved a reputation of which not only you who are directly engaged in this business, but our countrymen as well, may be proud. This happy condition is the result of hard work, serious study and long practice on your part. Aiming to grow the best, you have adopted and pursued methods which have accomplished the end. Your practice has been commended and followed by workers in other countries. Each year you have made advances, and your ability has been amply demonstrated in the careful selection of varieties which you have adopted for forcing. It would be an easy matter to blunder seriously in this regard, but your judgment has been tried and found to be wise and correct.

I premise my remarks with these statements because you have justly won a high place in floriculture and I am among the number of those who believe that your pursuit is so commendable, beneficial and elevating in its aim and influence, that it should be justly valued and your achievements should have the recognition and appreciation which they deserve.

The Acknowledged Queen of Flowers.

I have been invited to consider a subject hardly in line with your work and you may feel that I am occupying your time unprofitably, and yet I know and appreciate your great love for the queen of flowers. The queen of floral beauties has been uppermost in your mind for years; you have thought about her, dreamed about her, exerted your best efforts in her behalf and your success in every case has been most gratifying. In the floral kingdom are to be found innumerable beautiful and choice subjects, each one possessing charms peculiar to itself, but among the vast number the rose has been accorded the highest place. To her we bow. To her do we exclaim in endearing tones: "Your charms of color, and form and fragrance are unequaled. We recognize your incomparable beauty, and as loyal subjects we vow to do all in our power to secure a better and higher appreciation of your virtues."

With this in mind, I trust you will not feel that I am wasting your time, but that you will cheerfully lend your attention for a brief period, while we consider together, as lovers of the rose, what may and should be done to forward the movement of out-of-door rose growing in this country.

Protection in Winter.

We have, I know well, in many sections, a climate so severe that rose culture is extremely difficult if not impossible, and yet I can truthfully say that that territory is of small extent. In the southern states rose growing is comparatively easy. In the north we will confess that it is somewhat difficult; that is, roses grown in the north need some protection in winter, such as hilling up with earth or covering with evergreen boughs, or both. The care and attention required to carry out these important details are often neglected and disappointments and discouragements follow. With the introduction and employment of the hybrid teas, more care than ever must be taken in this particular. In addition to the covering referred to, a shelter of boards to shed the water is recommended for the more tender varieties.

Roses should always be planted in a place and in a manner which will permit of their being protected. By this I mean that instead of scattering the plants here and there in the garden, border or lawn, I suggest planting them together in beds, groups or masses; not in the most conspicuous place in the grounds, but rather at the side, or in the rear, or in an enclosure, with a hedge about them, the idea being that the plants may not be too prominent when out of flower.

Location of the Rose Garden.

I think many planters err in this regard frequently. Rose gardens, large and small, have their place, but surely it is not in the front yard or in the most conspicuous part of the lawn. The ever blooming sorts, like Baby Rambler, Killarney, Gruss an Teplitz, Testout, Kaiserin, Cecile Brunner, Baby Dorothy, White Cochet, Pink Cochet and Clothilde Soupert, are such continuous bloomers that they may be excepted and may be planted where they may be seen to advantage all summer long, but most varieties should be planted as I have suggested.

If quantities of bloom are desired, then the plantation should be on a large scale in the rear of the grounds, setting the plants in rows and beds with grass walks between them. This arrangement is practical and ornamental. In large places a garden should embrace 1,000 plants at least, and in smaller places a proportionate number. The amateur, even, cannot expect to get satisfactory results from a few plants. We must be generous in our plantings. The soil cannot be too good or too rich. If planted in good garden soil and manured heavily with well decayed manure, I can predict with utmost certainty that the result will be satisfactory.

The rose in good soil grows wonderfully, escapes diseases and insects, and looks well, having ample foliage. Whenever possible, means for watering the plants should be provided, and a liberal use of water will produce a marvelous effect. Water can be easily and cheaply conducted to various parts of the grounds in small iron pipes laid on the surface. This is better and cheaper than rubber hose. The expenditure in this direction will not only insure the health of plants, but render them capable of producing blooms continuously.

Budded and Ownroot Plants.

Some planters will have nothing but own-root plants, because of disappointments and success in growing the stock, whether it be Manetti or briar, rather than the variety of rose sought. Growing the stock has given a black eye to rose culture and it is difficult to persuade those who have once been disappointed to repeat their efforts with budded plants.

In general, budded roses are the most satisfactory, because the plants are stronger at the start and they continue so. They produce more and larger blooms, and if they are watched and the suckers removed when they appear, no trouble will ensue. How to distinguish the stock from the budded variety is not by any means difficult, if pains be taken to study the difference. On request, any gardener will cheerfully point out to the amateur the points of distinction and, when once they are recognized and understood, no difficulty will be experienced. But there are many who will insist on having own-root plants and I believe their wishes should be respected.

Diseases and Insect Foes.

I will not take your time mentioning remedies for the control of diseases or the destruction of pests, but I will say that if the plants are maintained in a healthy condition by stirring the soil, watering frequently, removing faded blooms and diseased foliage, they will not be troubled seriously. Weakly plants are the victims of insects and diseases, and it is the duty of every rose grower to furnish ample nourishment and copious waterings to maintain health. It is a mistake to conclude that rose culture is unsatisfactory, if not impossible, because of insect pests and diseases.

Pruning.

If there is one reason more important than another for the failure of roses, we would attribute it to faulty pruning or perhaps to an entire lack of pruning at planting time. Thousands of roses are planted annually without being pruned at all, either at the tops or the roots, and consequently fail and the seller has to take the blame. At planting time it is absolutely necessary that this operation should receive attention or loss will ensue. Dormant plants should always be cut back to two or three eyes when set out, and in this way growth insured. Each year thereafter, in the spring, they should be cut back to two or three eyes. Some varieties need hard pruning, others moderate pruning.

Out-of-door Roses.

For growing out of doors, beginning with the hardiest, those adapted to the severest climates and requiring the least care and attention, I would name the Japan roses, rugosa and their hybrids. Extra hardiness is the distinguishing and most valuable characteristic of this family, although their showy and handsome foliage and fruit are almost as important qualifications. The single red and single white varieties are quite well known and have been extensively used for shrubberies and hedges, as well as single specimen plants.

Atropurpurea is a very beautiful single, bearing maroon crimson flowers. Mrs. Anthony Waterer, having semi-double, deep crimson, fragrant blooms in clusters, has special value. Agnes Emily Carman, with semi-double crimson flowers, is one that has been planted quite largely, being much esteemed in some places. Mme. Georges Bruant, bearing large, double white flowers in clusters, is a beautiful rose, as is Blanc Double de Coubert, a large and showy double white form of rugosa alba. This will be prized by all on account of its large, well formed blooms. Conrad F. Meyer, of recent introduction, is a rose with a great future. The flower is very large, well formed, of a silvery rose color and highly perfumed. Continuous flowering may be added to the list of its good qualities. Of still later introduction is Nova Zembla, equally free flowering and with well formed blooms, of a pearly white color. Parfum de l'Hay produces carmine red flowers and is delightfully fragrant.

William C. Barry.

The rugosa roses are really shrubs possessing great vigor, and their foliage and fruit are so handsome that they are beautiful at all times. No roses that I am acquainted with are so generally useful, possessing, as they do, so many valuable qualities. They should be very popular and may justly be styled "The Rose for the Million."

Hardy Climbing Roses.

Climbing roses rank next in value for general use, as they can be employed advantageously in so many different ways to cover buildings, pergolas, arbors and summer-houses, as well as to hide unsightly objects and to make them attractive. In all grounds of large and small extent there are opportunities for their employment and, when used, they quickly transform an objectionable or unattractive view into an interesting and delightful picture. It is simply a case of accomplishing much with a little effort and at small expense. If climbing roses were planted as frequently as they should be, many old and unsightly buildings would be changed into things of striking beauty. The truth of this statement will be verified when, touring through the country, we see on every side opportunities for the improvements I suggest.

Crimson Rambler, introduced some years ago from Japan, became popular at once and has been widely disseminated. Dorothy Perkins, Lady Gay and Farquhar, pink varieties, are recent introductions of the highest merit; all three are distinct and should be included in a collection. Rubin yields ruby red flowers in great profusion.

Hiawatha and Other New Favorites.

Hiawatha, a new sort, bearing large, single, scarlet flowers with golden centers, is one of the most remarkable varieties yet introduced, and it will undoubtedly become the greatest favorite of them all. The flowers are produced in great clusters, are wonderfully durable, and appear in midsummer. To call it a grand new rose of the greatest value is not praising it too highly. Leuchtstern, a German introduction, producing large, single, cineraria-like flowers in bunches, bright rose with large, white eye, is novel and interesting. Tausendschon, or A Thousand Beauties, is one of the latest additions to this family. It bears abundantly very large flowers for its class, of a pale pink color, and it bids fair, on account of its size, to become greatly esteemed. Helene, Queen Alexandra, Waltham Rambler and Wedding Bells are also desirable kinds. Each one has merits of its own and I might add several others, but the list would be too extended.

What picture could be more beautiful to look upon than an arbor or pergola covered with these roses, the branches hanging over in festoons and bearing thousands of blooms? I do not think we appreciate how valuable climbers are for the embellishment of buildings and garden structures, and how beautiful and attractive we can make our homes with them. The latest novelty is one called Trier, a pale pink rose, small, almost single, and borne in large clusters. It is said to be the first of a new race of roses, valuable on account of its being constantly in bloom.

Hybrid Perpetual Roses.

The so-called hybrid perpetual roses constitute the main reliance for blooms for garden and house decoration. If they were perpetual their value would be greatly enhanced, but as it is there is nothing to take their place. They do not flower as long as we could wish, but when in bloom there is nothing that equals them, hence they are valued more than any other roses.

The old and well-known General Jacqueminot is still a favorite, on account of its vigor and hardiness. M. P. Wilder has beautiful, well formed, rich dark red blooms, and delicate fragrance. Mrs. John Laing is almost perpetual, and bears profusely blooms of a beautiful pink shade. Frau Karl Druschki is a new white, extremely floriferous and almost perpetual, and although only brought to notice a year ago, has already attained the distinction of being called the best hardy white rose. Paul Neyron, the peony rose, is so large as to command attention everywhere, notwithstanding its coarseness. If cut when in bud or partly open, it is admirable and it should never be omitted from the garden. Ulrich Brunner is a red rose, very valuable for cutting, as the flower is showy and the stem is free from thorns. Earl of Dufferin is a velvety crimson rose of perfect form, has a delightful fragrance, and is in every respect an exquisite rose. American Beauty, which does so well under glass, does not succeed out of doors, I regret to say. Clio is a large, flesh-colored rose, shaded with rosy pink, a most delightful combination, rendering it a general favorite. Baron de Bonstetten is one of the best very dark roses, a good flower, produced abundantly, and it justly deserves a high place in a collection.

Other meritorious varieties are Magna Charta, Captain Hayward, Francois Michelon, Mme. G. Luizet, Marchioness of Londonderry, Margaret Dickson and Prince Camille de Rohan. Hugh Dickson, a crimson rose sent out a year ago, gives promise of great value. I might enumerate many other hybrid perpetuals which should be grown, but I will not make the list too long.

Dwarf Polyantha Roses.

In the last few years the dwarf polyantha or miniature roses have received great attention from rose growers and their introduction marks a new era in rose culture. They are quite hardy, flower freely and continuously, and the blooms are produced in clusters, rendering them very effective and valuable for bedding. Baby Rambler is one of the best, being covered with crimson blooms all summer long. Clothilde Soupert, bearing very large and beautifully imbricated pearly white flowers, has proved to be a most excellent bedder and is rapidly winning wide recognition. Baby Dorothy, a new variety, is similar in growth and habit, but bears pink flowers. It, too, will be prized as a bedder. Cecile Brunner is one of the prettiest, bearing freely miniature flowers of perfect form and salmon pink color. It is dainty and beautiful, grows well and flowers freely.

There are several others in this class which can be recommended, like White Baby Rambler, Catherine Zeimet, Canarien Vogel and Leonie Lamesch, each one having charms of its own. Time will not permit me to refer to them at length, but let me assure you that they are real beauties, deserving of our most careful attention. From this time on it may be said that we possess real bedding roses, and our supply must be drawn mainly from this and the next section for that purpose.

Hybrid Tea Roses.

I have left for the last the consideration of the hybrid tea roses, which are marvelously beautiful. The introductions of Dickson & Son are of the highest merit, possessing all the charming qualities of the older roses, but intensified to a remarkable degree. The combinations have been most successful and the new varieties may be said to be almost perfect. The buds are large, long and of fine shape, the shades of color new and charming and the open flower surprisingly beautiful.

Killarney is one of the best known and grows in favor every year. It flowers freely and continuously, and is a good bedder. Other beautiful sorts are: Bessie Brown, creamy white; Dean Hole, silvery carmine; Florence Pemberton, creamy white, suffused pink; Lady Moyra Beauclerc, bright madder rose; Liberty, brilliant velvety crimson; Mildred Grant, ivory white, shaded pink, and Belle Siebrecht, bright rosy pink. Kaiserin Victoria, La France and Testout are too well known to need any recommendation. They are still held in highest esteem by rose lovers, and whoever plants them will not regret it. Gruss an Teplitz, a very free flowering crimson scarlet rose, is useful and effective. It grows vigorously, flowers freely, is quite hardy and may be styled a good bedder.

I think that I have nearly exhausted your patience in presenting this long list, but before closing I wish to mention two tea roses of rare beauty and excellence, which, even if they require extra care when grown out of doors, should always have a place in every garden. I refer to the Cochet roses, white and pink. I think when their merits have been fully realized they will be rated as the best roses we have.

A Remarkable Rose.

In concluding I will refer to the new rose of Pernet-Ducher called the Lyon rose, the result of a cross between the Mme. Melanie Soupert hybrid tea and an unnamed variety. The flowers are of large size, moderately full, globular in form, of a superb shrimp pink color and fragrant. The buds are large, long and of a coral red. Mr. Pernet says that although this magnificent rose belongs to the class Pernetiana, it possesses all of the precious qualities of the hybrid teas, from which it has derived its principal character, and, above all, the advantage of perpetual flowering.

Among the new roses judged at Paris in the Bois de Boulogne recently, eighty-seven varieties being submitted, the Lyon rose received from the jury the maximum number of points and it was the only one to receive the full number, our friend and member E. G. Hill being one of the jury of award. The race of roses called Pernetiana is a result of a cross between Persian Yellow and Antoine Ducher. Soleil d'Or belongs to this new race. It is certainly gratifying to note the wonderful progress made in these crosses. The Messrs. Pernet-Ducher have been most successful and this latest production is excellent and will be greatly valued. It is a novel and most distinct rose. The flowers which I have seen the past summer have impressed me greatly and I consider it a novelty of the greatest importance.

On this occasion I can extend to you all, as lovers of the rose, my heartiest congratulations upon the achievements of the past, as well as upon the bright future that is before us. The new varieties of today show great progress in every direction. The work of crossing is being conducted with skill and discernment, and we may expect great results in the near future. Let us one and all do our utmost to extend out-of-door rose culture, believing that the rose is for the masses and it should be enjoyed by them, and that its culture, in a general way, will be for the good of mankind. There are thousands of homes where the queen of flowers will be joyously welcomed, bringing cheer, happiness and contentment into them and dispelling gloom, unhappiness and discontent from them. This being a fact, let us engage earnestly in this missionary movement.

E. G. GILLETT.

E. G. Gillett, whose portrait appeared in last week's Review, was born February 2, 1857, on the home farm four miles east of Springfield, O. There he resided till 18 years of age, helping his father about the place and gaining a general idea of farming. It would thus seem that his early training furnished the impetus for his later vocation.

At 18 he started to college and then engaged in the book, stationery and wall paper business in Springfield, O. His general inclination toward the products of the soil can easily be seen, for he soon after entered the seed business in the same city. In his retail seed store flowers were sold; also funeral work was made and decorations furnished. This was the beginning of his experience as a florist.

Later, through the recommendation of George McCullough, a position was offered to him by the J. M. McCullough Sons Co., of Cincinnati, O. For this firm he acted as manager of the wholesale cut flower department for five years. This marked the beginning of the wholesale commission cut flower business in Cincinnati. In September, 1896, he opened a commission house of his own, located at 113 East Third street, Cincinnati, where he remained until January, 1908, when he removed to larger and better located rooms at 114 East Third street, where he is now located.

Mr. Gillett has been honored by being elected to various offices in local and national florists' societies. In January, 1891, he was elected secretary of the Cincinnati Florists' Society, which position he filled until 1895, when he was elected president of the society, and he served in this capacity till 1898. He also served a term as vice-president of the American Carnation Society. He is a popular member of various other organizations, being a Blue Lodge, Chapter, Council, Knight Templar and Scottish Rite Mason.

It was principally through his efforts that Cincinnati extended the S. A. F. an invitation to hold its twenty-fifth meeting in that city, and in recognition of this, at the meeting of the society held July 11 a resolution was unanimously passed indorsing him for vice-president of the S. A. F.

Cleveland, O.—G. M. Naumann has sold his property to J. H. Wade, but will occupy it two years yet.

Berlin, Md.—O. Harrison, of J. G. Harrison & Sons, did not attend the Southern Nurserymen's convention this year. He is on the way to France to look after the apple seedling business.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Wire Supports.

The question of supports is one which presents itself to every grower each year and, since reading the REVIEW'S recent article showing illustrations of several patterns, I am prompted to give our experience in the use of patent wire supports.

Realizing that something better than the old network of wire and twine was needed, we purchased for trial 500 Model, then manufactured by Theron Parker. The results were so satisfactory that the following season every plant on the place wore one of the supports.

Our only mistake in the trial order was in not purchasing the three-ring pattern, but those 500 of the two-ring style paid for themselves that year in the increased number of salable blooms secured from plants thus supported.

A Good Investment.

My actual experience with other makes has been confined to samples sent me for trial, but at other places I have seen nearly all those now offered on the market and have yet to hear any complaint except as to the matter of first cost.

This is quite an item, but aside from the saving in time required to put in place and their practical indestructibility, the added number of desirable blooms gained per plant places the matter in the light of an investment rather than an expense.

It may appear unreasonable to some that a batch of plants should give a larger number of salable blooms under this system than under the one of wire and twine, but when it is considered that under the latter there is no adjustability to individual plants, it will be seen wherein lies one of the advantages of the patent wire support.

Adjustable to Suit the Plant.

Growers who are compelled to plant two or more varieties on the same bench will appreciate the adjustable feature of the wire support, and those wishing to throw out part of a bench toward spring may do so without the slightest disarrangement of the remainder.

These supports should be applied before the plants have attained a size which would necessitate bunching or crowding; on the other hand, it is advisable to wait until the soil has been weeded and cultivated a few times.

Stated briefly, the success of wire supports consists in accommodating the contrivance to suit the plant, instead of allowing the plant to get beyond benefit from any support before applying.

MULCH FOR CARNATIONS.

Our carnations have been benched since July 10, from stock grown inside, and they are doing nicely. I would like to know if a mulch of some kind would be beneficial now, or would it be better to wait and put on bone in a few weeks? The soil was sod plowed last fall, with a light coating of manure. R. H. G.

After you have gotten rid of the weeds and your plants get to going nicely, a thin mulch of light material will do them good. This mulch should not be for the purpose of adding plant food, of which there is an abundance for the present, but to prevent quick and severe drying out of the soil. At this time of the year it is about impossible, without the aid of a mulch, to keep the beds evenly moist all over. Severe drying out in spots will cause the plants to harden, and a very uneven growth will result.

The bone can be added any time you see it is wanted. The mulch will be a splendid material to stir it into, to be washed into the soil gradually. In fact, this light mulch need not interfere in the least with your feeding or mulching with richer material later.

SPACING CARNATION PLANTS.

Visiting a neighboring town a few days ago, I dropped in to see how the greenhouse man was getting along, and found carnation planting about over. I saw what was to me a new wrinkle. The benches were five feet wide; in such a bench I would put six plants in a row, nine inches apart. I found, however, that in place of six plants nine inches apart in the row, there were five groups of plants, the outside groups having two plants and the three inside groups three each, making thirteen plants. The plants in the groups were about two and one-half inches apart. Will such a plan answer, or is that the up-to-date method?

Y.

Under ordinary, favorable conditions the method you describe would certainly not be considered up-to-date by any expert grower. When the plants are of average size there is no other way of planting so good as to set the plants singly in rows across the bench, spaced according to variety, etc. Six or seven plants across a 5-foot bench and the rows from ten to twelve inches apart are the most generally practiced distances. This allows each plant a vacant airspace clear around it, which is a splendid thing in itself.

I am inclined to think, however, that if you had made inquiry you would have found conditions which necessitated or justified the method used to some extent. For instance, if we are planting a variety of which we want to bench all the plants we have, we will usually find among the batch all sizes of plants from large to small. This is caused by part of them being from early cuttings and others from cuttings struck as late as they could be rooted. Instead of planting the large plants together, by themselves, and the small ones together, and giving the small ones less space, we plant them all together, putting the small ones in the edge rows, setting two or three of the plants in a space and setting them two or three inches apart. If there are three, they are set in a triangle. Some growers will take several small plants and place them close together, holding them as one plant while planting them in. This is, perhaps, the more commonly practiced of the two methods, but is not as good as the other, because stem-rot or any such trouble is sure to attack all the plants if one of the group should happen to be affected. The plants can only develop on one side, whereas, with the other method, they can grow on all sides just as though there were only one plant.

If all the plants were exceptionally small, so that the usual amount of space would be too much for each plant, I would rather plant closer together and set the plants singly. Better results will be obtained than where they are grouped as you describe. This is where the wire and string method of supporting has the advantage over the patent wire supports. You can plant as many rows on a bench as you wish, and the rows can be made any desired distance apart. As long as the whole bench has the same number of plants in each row across it, it will cause no trouble. You need only add or leave out a wire for each row added or left out, and a string on each side of each row of plants is required whether the rows are eight inches or twelve inches apart. Your wire rings are made one size, and if they are large enough for the largest plants they are too large for the smallest ones. Adjustable rings are certainly to be preferred. Perhaps that is why your friend planted as he did. Ask him.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Bouvardias.

While we may not have any frost for some time yet, it is well to lift the bouvardias during the present month and either pot or bench them. Where a considerable number are grown, the bench system is to be preferred. A house where a winter minimum of 55 degrees can be maintained will flower bouvardias finely. In lifting, try to retain a little soil on the roots. Some growers, we are aware, prefer to shake away all compost when lifting such plants as these, but our experience has been that when a little ball is retained the plants wilt for a much shorter period.

A soaking of water as soon as planted, shade for ten days or so, and frequent light sprayings overhead are necessary to allow the plants to become established. Pot plants will require a little shade during the hottest part of the day. This can be provided by running lath shadings over them. Reduce the shading a little daily, and root action will soon become active. Do not stand the plants under trees or in dense shade. They will take longer to establish themselves under such conditions.

Berried Solanums.

Berried solanums planted in the field will now be full of berries. While there is no immediate hurry about lifting these, the work can be commenced at any time. As a rule, 6-inch pots will be found sufficiently large for the biggest plants. Ram the soil in the pots firmly. Keep well soaked with water, and it is surprising how fast the plants will establish themselves. A little shade will be needed for a few days, but within a week they will stand full sunshine. Solanums are inexpensive plants to grow, but shapely, well berried specimens always meet with a ready sale at Christmas.

Chrysanthemums.

Growth with the mums is now rapid, and the work of keeping side shoots removed and tying is one of increasing magnitude. It does not pay to neglect this work, for too often growers wait until they can rub off the side growths literally by the armful. It is poor policy to allow your stock to get into this condition. Look over a bench each day, choosing morning or evening for the work, and you will soon take care of a large number of plants. The early benched stock will now require a lot of water, and if a mulch of well rotted cow manure has not been applied, it should go on now. Do not use green cow manure. It will do more harm than good.

Bush plants should now be in their flowering pots. Any not yet lifted from benches or the open ground should be potted as soon as possible. Get necessary staking done or high winds will damage them badly if outdoors. As the pots become well filled with roots, liquid stimulants alternated with a top-dressing of a good chemical fertilizer can be applied once in four or five days. Except on robust growing kinds, pinching should now cease. On these the strongest shoots can still be stopped. Aphis must be fought persistently, either by fumigation or syringing with a nicotine extract.

Stevias.

The every-day, easily grown, winter blooming stevias are rather a commonplace subject, but can hardly be dispensed with by any country florist. There should be no more pinching done to these after this time. It is not a good plan to leave the plants in the field until frost threatens. By that time winds will have shattered them badly and lifting will be a harder task than if done now. We like to see our plants potted before September 1 and the tall variety will be made all the safer if a stake is used in each pot. The dwarf variety does not require any support. It is well to keep the pots of stevias outdoors as late as possible, but remember that the least breath of frost spells death to them.

Cattleya Labiata.

The Cattleya labiata can now be secured so cheaply that it is no wonder that more and more florists are trying a few each year. As a rule, the first crop of flowers will easily pay for the initial cost of the plants, and there is no reason why any florist, who can give them a winter temperature of 55 to 60 degrees, should not produce enough to make an attractive show at his store, or to use in design work or help out his group at the local fall exhibition. Just now the sheaths are well advanced and the plants should have a little less shade. A good water supply is still needed, for the sun still has great power. An abundance of fresh air and a position as near the light as possible is what all cattleyas enjoy. The earliest labiatas usually open in September and the crop lasts until after Thanksgiving. The long season of bloom makes them of particular value to florists who have calls for choice flowers for design work.

Tritomas.

For decoration of store windows the tritomas, or kniphofias, as botanists now prefer to call them, are of great value in the fall. For room decoration they look well arranged in large vases. In the garden border, clumps are very taking at this season. These plants are of such easy culture that no florist need be without a row in his garden. Seed sowing is the best means of propagation. It is not too late now to sow seeds to produce flowering plants for next fall. Sow the seed in rows rather thinly in a coldframe and afford sash protection after freezing-up weather. Plant out in nursery rows two feet apart in April and a large proportion of the plants will bloom in the fall. In the following year a much heavier lot of flowers will be produced. If your land is of a sandy or gravelly nature and the plants are on a slope, they will winter out with a coating of leaves or strawy manure. On land with heavy soil, where water is liable to stand, it is safer to lift and store the roots on a cellar floor, giving them a covering of sand or dry loam. The old variety Tritoma Uvaria grandiflora, with spikes of rich crimson and orange flowers, blooms freely in September and October. The variety Pfitzerii starts blooming in August, continuing until frost, and makes a brilliant show with its orange scarlet flowers. It makes a striking feature for a show window or in a decoration.

German Iris.

To keep them in excellent condition, Iris Germanica should be transplanted every other year. It is true that we can see clumps which have not been moved or separated for many years, and which still flower freely each year. These same plants would, however, be vastly improved by being lifted, divided and replanted in fresh land. It may seem somewhat early to start transplanting iris, but the plants are now in a good condition for removal, and the earlier the work is done the better crop of flowers will you have next May and June.

Entirely apart from any value it may have for cutting, and this is considerable, the iris appeals strongly to all lovers of hardy plants and the florist who carries an up-to-date variety is sure to have many orders for plants. The following list comprises a few fine sorts: Pallida Dalmatica, Mme. Chereau, L'Innocence, Queen of May, Her Majesty, Gracchus, aurea, Bridesmaid, Celeste, Florentina and flavescens. The German iris likes ground which has been well manured, but should not be planted where water will stand in winter.

Miscellaneous.

With weather conditions such as exist now, it would seem to be a far-off cry to winter, but each year frosts occur in many of our northern states sometimes as early as the middle of September. Temperature changes, when they come, are often sharp and sudden and it behooves us to be prepared for them. There is a lot of work still to be done on most places before all benches are filled with their winter crops, and in the rush of such duties the heating plant is apt to be overlooked. Attend to any necessary changes now, while the weather is warm, and do not wait until frost threatens before commencing on them.

There can be no better time than the present for painting and glazing. Get this work under way now. How about the coal supply? Prices are this season strictly moderate on all greenhouse coals. Better lay in a good store now, while your dealer can deliver the goods with promptness. This is the time to do any necessary pointing to the stone or brickwork about chimneys or cellar walls. Cement sets quickly now. It will be otherwise if you postpone doing it until the early winter blasts remind you of the necessity for it.

Scranton, Pa.—The florists of Lackawanna and Luzerne counties held their second annual outing at Moosic Lake, August 12. A large number were present. A basket lunch was partaken of at noon, and the afternoon was occupied with athletic events, including a baseball game between Wilkes-Barre and Scranton florists. The party returned late in the evening.

SCHOOL GARDENS.

BY L. C. CORBETT, WASHINGTON, D. C.

[Read before the Society of American Florists, in convention at Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.]

As gardeners and florists we are naturally interested in any movement which makes for the upbuilding of the craft which we represent. The school garden, however, carries a broader conception than the upbuilding of a single craft. It aims to offer to the developing mind an opportunity to obtain a symmetrical education. By training the hands and eyes the brain acquires the power of interpretation and discrimination, two of the basal factors of knowledge. The aim of the school garden is to interest the youth in nature by close association —to teach science, logic and mathematics by observing the development of natural objects.

This instruction without books robs the school of its transition period bugbear, the textbook. Before the age of textbooks instruction was oral; with the advent of written language instructors depended not upon personal ability, but upon the preserved knowledge of others, which they required to be taken in steady, regular doses, according to the size and age of the scholar, regardless of his ability or liking for the subject. In other words, the course of study was and is, in most schools, a carefully prescribed one, which must be followed by every student who enters the school, regardless of his birth, desires or fitness for the work.

Defects in Our School System.

This condition in our schools is undoubtedly the outgrowth of our modern commercialism. The public school has come to be a stupendous organization, managed in great measure under the same rules and by the same type of men as are the trusts. In fact, the public school system of our country might with propriety be classed "The Great American Educational Trust." In our desire to perfect a system we have in great measure lost sight of the individual, and in so doing we are defeating the primary object for which our public schools were instituted—the perpetuation of the republic through the education of the masses.

The teaching methods of our great city schools seem to be based on the idea that all men are born equal and have a common destiny. Each child is so much mortar to be cast into a building block for the state, which will fit into the great wall—the foundation of the republic. There is no training for the work of life in our public schools, properly so called. A few city schools are advanced enough to teach sloyd, manual training, cooking, sewing, and in Washington we have a business high school in addition to the other variations above enumerated. Most of our public school work is confined to the "three R's" and goes no farther. In this respect our public schools are a type of educational trust.

Methods of a Great Educator.

The school garden idea aims to break the monotony of the curriculum by opening the way for the exercise of individual tastes and ideas within certain limits. The modern conception of the plan is not as broad as the original idea, as conceived by Pestalozzi and Froebel. Pestalozzi believed in teaching out-of-doors, because children are both barbaric and nomadic—they want to go somewhere. Like all wise investigators, he proved his ideas. "He at first took several boys and girls of from 8 to 12 years of age, and had them work with him in his garden. They cared for fowls, looked after the sheep, milked the cows. The master worked with them, and as they worked they talked. Going to and from their duties, Pestalozzi would call their attention to the wild birds, and the flowers, plants and weeds. They would draw pictures of things, make collections of leaves and flowers and keep a record of their observations and discoveries. Through keeping these records they learned to read and write and acquired the use of simple mathematics. Things they did not understand they would read about in the books found in the teacher's library. Books were secondary and quite incidental to the scheme of study. When work seemed to become irksome they would all stop and play games. At other times they would sit and just talk about what their work happened to suggest. If the weather was unpleasant, there was a shop where they made hoes and rakes and other tools they needed. They also built bird-houses and made simple pieces of furniture, as all the pupils, boys and girls, became more or less familiar with carpenters' and blacksmiths' tools. They patched their shoes, mended their clothing and at times prepared their own food. Pestalozzi found that the number of pupils he could look after in this way was not more than ten. But, to his own satisfaction, at least, he proved that children taught by this method surpassed those who were given the regular set courses of instruction."

History Repeats Itself.

This experiment of Pestalozzi's, out of which, under the genius of Froebel, grew the "kindergarten," is now nearly 100 years old. In it, however, we find all that we now include in manual training, nature study and the school garden idea. It is only another proof of the old saying that "history repeats itself." The reason assigned for the failure of this early effort was the lack of coöperation in the home. It is to be hoped that the present movement along this line may not suffer a like fate. Let all who are interested in the success of this form of education give it the support which will make for its success.

The modern school garden idea will probably spread more rapidly than did the old, because we are more accustomed to liberal ideas in education and because the modern interpretation is more restricted in its application. Instead of attempting to replace the existing schools, the idea is to supplement them —to add a department which shall help to round out the course of study for those who have an interest in natural things.

Mental Discipline in Gardening.

For some students it will be the means of stimulating an interest in subjects which, without it, would ever have remained a sealed book. It has the important advantage that through it the child is led to make discovery, one of the most important elements in the success of education. The steps followed in the planning, planting and cultivation of a garden contain the elements of sound logic; each step is taken for a definite purpose and the results are the logical outcome of the action of natural laws.

These results are of the utmost importance when obtained under the guidance of a skilled teacher, for they furnish the elements necessary for instruction in every one of the so-called common branches, as well as in elementary science or nature study. But instruction received through the laboratory method is much more effective than that received by textbook alone. The reason for this is that experiments require the united use of several faculties, which naturally makes a more lasting impression upon the developing mind than the mere exercise of the memory, which is the textbook system. Facts observed through one of the natural senses are more firmly fixed than statements memorized.

Well Founded Knowledge.

Then, too, the student in possession of the means of reproducing or proving a law, either in the laboratory or in the field, has a great advantage over him who has only his memory to depend upon. The one can always be certain of his stand, while the other must have recourse to his authority. One is in the position of a skilled engineer, while the other is like the artisan who works by rule of thumb. The one makes its possessor resourceful and capable of handling new problems; the other is good for routine work only. The difference in these types of education is represented by the apprentice system contrasted with the training of a well equipped technical school. One teaches the art alone; the other teaches the art and the theory on which it is based as well.

Science Made Interesting.

The school garden carries this type of instruction into the public school in a simple, direct way. The trained teacher is capable of demonstrating the art in a simple way, but what is most important is that he is able to make a story out of the scientific principles or truths underlying the art. When a seed is planted, the part played by heat, moisture and air in the process of germination can be woven into a true story of the wonderful awakening of life which takes place. The function of the seed leaves in the early life of the seedling can easily be demonstrated by removing one-half of each seed leaf from one set of seedlings and both seed leaves from another lot, and at the same time comparing these with others which are normal. The growth of the plants so treated will indicate in a measure the part the cotyledons play in the development of the plant.

Similar tests arranged to show the bearing of light, moisture, heat and cold upon the growth of plants can easily be planned as supplements to the work of growing crops in the school garden. A knowledge of the theory of growth raises the work of plant production from a laborious task to an enjoyable art. This type of instruction tends to make life worth living, by making common things our companions. Half the pleasure of life is lost because the common things that we come in contact with every day bring no message to us; they are commonplace and excite no curiosity in us. Tell the child the secrets of the rocks, the trees and the flowers and every one of these becomes a life companion instead of a mere object, to be used or destroyed according to man's necessity.

Training Men to Live.

The work of education should be to train men to live and, as nine-tenths of the people of the world must earn their bread through their own efforts, that education which best fits them to do this work makes for the upbuilding of the state and nation. One-fourth to one-third of the average life is spent in securing an education. That is a large proportion of one's time and it should be so directed by the teacher and the parent that when the training period is over the young man or woman will be fitted to do some useful thing well.

Do our schools, as at present conducted, accomplish this? I am sorry to say they do not. The truth is that the graduate from our public school system finds himself poorly prepared to do the work of the world. It is the hope of the nature study, school garden and manual training enthusiasts that this fault will be corrected by the elevation of the useful arts to a place in the course of study.

An Ancient Agricultural School.

It is not strange that our schools teach abstractly. When we study the origin of our common school system, we find it to consist of ideas borrowed from the college men and not an evolution from the common conditions of life. But the college itself has greatly departed from its original conception. King Alfred, the first great ruler of England, founded Oxford and his idea was to establish a school where the youth of the land should be taught to do those things needful in the family, on the farm and for the betterment of the general community. Oxford was, in fact, an agricultural college. It was founded on ideas growing out of the necessities of the people. This is the type of education which fits men to live and to do the work of the world.

In this respect history has been shown to repeat itself. The wise course adopted by our nation in founding state agricultural colleges, and by many of our states in establishing rural high schools, in which instruction in the useful arts forms an important part of the course of study, indicates that our ideas of education are changing and that we are soon to have a school system founded upon the requirements of the people rather than borrowed from the college men. The nature study and school garden idea is the manifestation of the desire for instruction in the practical affairs of life in our public schools. This is as it should be, because statistics show that only about two per cent of the population ever attend our colleges or universities. If instruction in the useful arts is to be made available to those who need it, the mass of the people, it must be made a part of our public school system.

WHY INCORPORATE?

Please advise me as to the advantages, legal or otherwise, of a concern being incorporated. It seems to be the prevailing tendency to incorporate even small concerns. H. C.

In a partnership each partner is an agent of the firm, with full powers, and he may, by an injudicious or dishonest use of this authority, bring the firm into difficulties. All of a partner's private property is liable for the debts of the firm. If a partner wishes to retire he must, as a rule, sell his whole interest to one person and that person cannot become a member of the firm without the consent of the other partners. When one partner dies, or becomes a bankrupt, the firm is dissolved and the business must usually be wound up.

A corporation chooses its own agents and clothes them with only such limited powers as it may see fit to confer. The amount invested by the stockholder is all that he has at risk. He can increase or decrease this amount by small increments without the consent of the corporation or any of its officers. A corporation has a term of existence fixed by law. Its life is not dependent on the life of any individual, and it may be extended for any number of successive terms if the stockholders so desire. These are the principal considerations that usually make the corporate form seem preferable.

GROWER AND RETAILER.

[Read before the Canadian Horticultural Association at Niagara Falls, Ont., August 19 to 20, by George M. Geraghty.]

The difficulty between the grower and the retailer is a matter that has been discussed on many occasions and, so far as I know, with little benefit to either one or the other, as the grower goes calmly on his way and does his business as he thinks for his best interests—for the time being—and the retailer continues to send us his usual growl, that "the flowers are not this and the quality is not that." It is a subject that, here in Canada, so far as I know, can just as well be left out of discussion, for, without patting anyone on the back, I find no difficulty whatever—that is, so far as the large and influential growers are concerned. They try to meet the demands of the retailer as to quality and manner of boxing their output, as they know well that the retailer will buy where he can get the best stock, which, when received by him, is salable and attractive.

It is with the small grower, who makes a specialty of one or two varieties, that the retailer has any trouble, and it seems impossible to convince such a grower that he will get a far better price for his stock if he will grade it in the proper manner. Too often the thought of a few cents more makes him put in two or three flowers of an inferior grade, thinking that if it cannot at once be detected he will be that much ahead. But how frequently he deceives himself, he little dreams, as the retailer soon "gets onto" this scheme and will at the first chance go elsewhere for his stock.

This is the real difficulty that I have found, as between the grower and the retailer, and, as I before stated, it is confined almost entirely to small growers. If those gentlemen would carefully sort out their stock and grade it as should be done, I am sure that it would be only a short time before there would be a demand, and at a good market price, for all their wares. When the retailer, after purchasing several hundred—shall we say roses?—graded as No. 1 stock, finds on going through the box or boxes that two or three in every row are No. 2 or even No. 3, this is where the grower thinks he is getting a little extra profit, but let me say that in this he is wrong, as the retailer soon "gets onto" his way of doing business and, unless circumstances compel, buys very little from him.

It is so all down the line. I have in mind two cases in point—one where the grower has to be carefully watched for inferior stock and short count, where it is impossible to have a box left unless it is very carefully sorted and counted; the other where I can depend upon the best and freshest stock, full count and one or two extra, and where it is never necessary to open the box before paying the bill. Needless to say which grower will build up the best trade and whose stock can be marked "sold" before it is cut.

In conclusion, let me again repeat that so far as any real difficulty is concerned, I have been unable to detect any and have found the growers, as a body, only too willing to meet the wishes of the retailer, for the wise grower knows that his output and income depend upon his being fair and honest in his dealings with the retailer.

PETER CROWE.

Peter Crowe, of Utica, N. Y., is in the height of fashion this year, for the republican newspapers insist this is the day of the men of ample girth. Mr. Crowe casts fully as broad a shadow as "Big Bill" Taft.

It was forty-two years ago that Mr. Crowe made his start in the florists' business, being employed by Richard Perdue, at Orange, N. J. He remained at this place only about a year, securing a position on the private establishment of O. S. Carter, also at Orange. After he had spent about three years in charge of Mr. Carter's garden he removed to Utica, N. Y., in September of 1870, and started in the business for himself. His beginning, like that of most of the old hands at the trade, was on a small scale, but the love of flowers was spreading throughout the land and his business grew, with the popular appreciation of his product, until he became one of the noted growers of roses in New York state. Mr. Crowe's roses were mostly consigned to the New York market and he did so well at the business that in 1902 he had 90,000 feet of glass devoted to roses, with the exception of some space given to adiantum. Along in 1900 to 1904 Mr. Crowe was a leading prize winner at the exhibitions, his Maids and Brides being the best exhibited at the eastern shows. In 1900 and 1901 at the Eden Musee, New York, and the following year at the Waldorf-Astoria exhibition, he took the leading prizes for these varieties, and the next year scored at Philadelphia.

It was in 1902 that Mr. Crowe's son died. This was the only child and the blow was a heavy one. It resulted in the leasing of the larger part of Mr. Crowe's glass to the firm of Brant Bros., who came from Madison, N. J., to take charge.

For several years, therefore, Mr. Crowe has been out of rose growing, but none the less interested in that subject, and this season he is resuming his old occupation, growing mostly the newer varieties, such as Richmond, Killarney, Rhea Reid, Mrs. Jardine, My Maryland and Queen Beatrice. He has taken hold of the work with much pleasure and the start has been so satisfactory that he has nothing but good words to speak of the untried varieties on his list.

Mr. Crowe's name will be associated with the market for greens after he has ceased to figure in the rose market, for it is due to him that we have Adiantum Croweanum. This variety originated on Mr. Crowe's place at Utica, where a large stock was worked up and sold to W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, for dissemination.

In speaking the other day of his years in the business, Mr. Crowe said: "I believe that I am one of the two oldest rose growers in the United States. Forty-two years is a long time in the business, and I know only one who has been at it that long. John N. May started in business about the same time, I think, and Alexander Montgomery comes next."

BAR HARBOR JOTTINGS.

The Mount Desert Nurseries, owned by George B. Dorr, and managed for nearly twenty years by William Miller, have a large area devoted to phlox, peonies, lilies, delphiniums and general collections of popular and rare perennials and bulbous plants. They also grow a splendid assortment of evergreens, including many of specimen size, and a general collection of deciduous trees and shrubs. The greenhouses are devoted to the culture of gardenias, ferns, palms and other decorative plants, also to raising of bedding and general nursery stock. A splendid store for the sale of cut flowers and plants is located on the main street of the town. The nursery is one of the most interesting to be met with in the east.

At Joseph T. Bowen's, A. E. Chilman gardener, were noted some splendid beds of pentstemons, which at Bar Harbor flower as well as in Scotland. Lilium superbum, naturalized, was unusually fine. Shasta daisies, tuberous begonias, beds of Geranium Alphonse Ricard, gladioli, sweet peas eight feet in height and smothered with magnificent flowers, impatiens, salpiglossis and dahlias were all flowering in a way difficult to approach on the mainland. In the greenhouses were noted good collections of begonias, achimines, gloxinias and ivy geraniums, and a fine house of Winter Beauty tomatoes.

Mr. Shand, at A. C. Gurnee's, has a fine estate, interestingly planted. A wide perennial border, 525 feet long, was gay with delphiniums, aconitums (a great feature at Bar Harbor, growing six to eight feet high), rudbeckias and phlox, with a bordering of candytuft. Beds of Swainsona galegifolia alba, Calceolaria Golden Gem, carnations such as Enchantress, White Perfection and Beacon, and dahlias were in fine flower. A new deep scarlet decorative dahlia, of compact habit and with free blooming qualities, will be heard from later. Greenhouses are devoted to palms, furnishing plants, tomatoes and melons. Several divisions of the latter, including Ringleader, Superlative and other favorite English sorts, were unusually good.

At George W. Vanderbilt's, where Edward Kirk presides, we noted a fine house of Muscat and Hambro grapes and two fine divisions of English melons; also a good house of tomatoes. Fewer flowers for cutting were being grown than usual, in the family's absence this season.

At Edgar Scott's, A. Mitchell gardener, we saw an interesting garden of the old-fashioned type, containing a wealth of flowers, but somehow these lady designers do not produce the pleasing effects of some of their male competitors. Sweet peas, hybrid tea roses and carnations outdoors were good here.

At D. C. Blair's estate, Blair Eyrie, there are, among other features, an Italian garden and rose garden. The grounds are picturesque and commanding views are to be had from the highest points. Eugene Mitchell is gardener here.

A. W. Ekstrom has charge of the estate of Joseph Pulitzer and his productions prove him to be an expert plantsman. We were unable to see the grounds to good advantage, owing to a drenching rain, but they were attractive and the ocean view was superb.

Joseph S. Kennedy has a large and tastefully laid out estate, one of the most interesting it has been our lot to see. The Italian garden appealed to us strongly. There are many larger and more expensively constructed ones, but we have not seen any which give the seclusion and generally restful feeling of this one. There are no paths, but velvety turf, with occasional specimens growing from beds of pentstemons, calceolarias, swainsona, verbenas and other plants blooming superbly, side borders of perennials and lilies and everything in perfect taste. Sweet peas here were unusually fine, growing with a vigor sufficient to excite the envy of anyone from a warmer and drier clime. In the greenhouses several divisions are devoted to melons, one to peaches and nectarines, and others to begonias, gloxinias, geraniums and other summer flowers. Mr. Burton, the skillful gardener here, has everything in splendid condition.

E. C. Cushman, John Renwick gardener, was one of the most successful exhibitors at the late show, capturing no less than twenty-one first premiums. His big specimens of fibrous begonias in tubs were a feature on the lawn. Pentstemons, phlox, cannas, tuberous begonias, salpiglossis, geraniums and hybrid tea roses were all unusually fine.

PLANTING FOR WINTER EFFECT

By George E. McClure, Buffalo, N. Y.

[Presented to the Society of American Florists, in convention at Niagara Falls, August 18 to 21, 1908.]

During the really marvelous decade through which we have passed, in which the masses have shown a response to the education which has been imparted to them by the many landscape gardeners, artists and nature lovers who have labored with such untiring devotion to the cause of outdoor art, the people of the northern states have learned to appreciate the beauties of the winter season. To many, no doubt, the term winter is equivalent to death, in that all activity of growth is at rest; they do not realize that rest is as necessary as growth and that even in the tropics there is a season of rest, though it may not be expressed in the same manner as in our snow-bound latitudes. Yet to others winter means only a change from the pervading green of summer, through the high coloration of fall, to the gray effect of the woods and the brilliant berry and evergreen effects with a groundwork and background of glistening snow. The subtle effects are always lost in summer by the massive foliage and it is only the hand of winter that can reveal them to us.

The Long Northern Winters.

When we realize that in the northern parts of the northern states there is a winter season of from four to five months' duration, it behooves us to study our material thoroughly, in order to make our home surroundings, whether large estates or small city lots, as attractive and delightful as the art of the landscape artist can suggest.

The aim of this paper, which might more properly be called "Planting for Winter Effect in the Northern Part of the Northern States," is to stimulate the growing desire of æsthetic people in this belt of our country to produce landscape pictures which will gladden and cheer through the winter season. Although many excellent articles have appeared in recent years in our best journals on the subject of planting for winter effect, yet almost all of this valuable information has been written for winter effects which could be produced in the latitude of New York city or along the Atlantic coast as far north as Boston, and in many cases this information, as applied to the region of the Great Lakes, has often resulted in partial, if not complete, failure. This has served to discourage those who sought to reproduce the winter pictures painted by writers from a more temperate region. Although a great many of the trees and shrubs which are useful for planting for winter effect come from foreign lands and are useful in this country only when extremes in temperature are not very severe, yet a long list of iron-clad materials is at hand to select from for the extremely cold regions of our northern states.

The Beautiful Winter Woods.

When we contemplate planting for winter effect, the mind turns first to the evergreens, then to berry plants, and to the bright colored branches of the dogwoods and osiers, etc., but seldom do we think of the beautiful effect of the winter woods, the persistent foliage of some of the beeches and oaks, which, although brown and dry, yet is cheerful in its effect. Little is thought of the beautiful shades of brown, gray and white, in the trunk and branch, or of the variety of the framework of the various trees, which gives an element of strength to the winter landscape, or of the variety in trees and shrubs, in the delicate tracery of their smaller twigs, as evidenced by some of the birches and alders, etc., in the trees, and in the shrubs by such as Stephanandra flexuosa, the coral berry (Symphoricarpus vulgaris) and some of the spiræas.

Deciduous Trees in Winter.

Among the deciduous trees which are attractive during winter might be mentioned the oriental plane (Platanus occidentalis), which, with its pendent balls of fruit borne high against the sky, seems to take away the barrenness of the deciduous trees, and is suggestive of the Christmas decorations so admired by the young folks, on Christmas trees. While this tree is beautiful in winter, it has also much to recommend it as a fast-growing tree for summer effect. Its beautiful bark, with the irregular patches of green and gray, are also interesting in the winter season. In much the same manner the liquidambar (Liquidambar styraciflua) is interesting, with its fruit in pendent spiked balls. Its symmetrical form of growth and extremely corky branches are noticeable to those who are only casual observers. The shellbark hickory (Hicoria ovata), while suggestive of strength, is also especially interesting on account of its peculiar bark formation, which is unlike that of any other common species of tree. If planted near the shellbark hickory and other trees with rough bark, the American beech (Fagus ferruginea) shows to advantage, as its gray bark is the smoothest of any of our hardy American trees, and never fails to attract attention from those who seek the beauties of winter as found in our woods. It is also especially attractive in winter, as the young trees often hold their dry leaves, as do some of the oaks, well into the winter.

Among other trees which might be mentioned as being attractive in winter, from the standpoint of their bark coloration, are: The yellow branched linden (Tilia platyphyllos var. aurea), the Babylonian willow (Salix Babylonica), and the white willow (Salix alba), with its brownish yellow branches; the white poplar (Populus alba) and its fastigiate variety, Bolleana, with their gray-green bark; Acer Pennsylvanicum, with its white striped bark and greenish twigs; the red birch (Betula nigra), with its brown bark; the canoe birch (Betula papyrifera). The white birch (Betula populifolia), and the European white birch (Betula alba) are the most beautiful white-barked trees. Their graceful outlines are one of the delights of winter landscapes, but unfortunately they are afflicted with the birch borer, which in some localities is so destructive that the culture of the trees has been abandoned. When it is possible for them to thrive they are charming, if planted along with some of the pines, such as the white pine (Pinus Strobus), and the pitch pine (P. rigida). The birches also thrive in sandy soil, which is favorable to the pines themselves. The effect of the white bark against the perpetual green background of the pines is, to many, more delightful in winter than when the birches are covered with their summer foliage. This beautiful effect is particularly noticeable in the region of Albany, N. Y., where it is the feature of the winter landscape.

The Mixed Forest.

Excellent winter effects are also obtained by what the forester terms the "mixed forest," which is a mixture of deciduous and coniferous trees. This forest growth is often to be found along the Great Lakes belt and the effect is often very beautiful. It would be well if we would learn from nature and reproduce these effects in our parks and large estates. While it is out of the realm of this paper to mention fall coloration effects, this "mixed forest" effect is unparalleled when we behold the tints of the maples mixed with the dark green pines, and the impression produced is one that lingers in the memory of the most casual observer.

While we can secure much pleasure from the observation of trees in their bark, twig and fruit formation, yet the most impressive winter effects are largely produced by using the hardy coniferous evergreen with a lavish hand. In this connection it may be said that an infinite variety of evergreens is not necessary to produce fine effects, and while the list of the ironclad evergreens, suitable for northern climates, is woefully short, yet we have no reason to be disturbed. On larger places the liberal planting of pines and hemlocks for screening unsightly buildings and checking the force of the winter winds will have much to do with the successful treatment of the place, for one can better appreciate the subtle beauties of a winter landscape if protected from the force of the icy wind by an effective screen of tall and stately evergreen trees.

Large Growing Pines.

The most useful large growing pines for northern planting are the white pine (P. Strobus), the Austrian pine (P. Austriaca) and the Scotch pine (P. sylvestris). The soft effect of the delicate needles of the white pine when young, and its stately appearance when old, places it preëminently in the lead, while the larger needles of the Austrian and Scotch pines contrast well and give variety.

The only objection to the use of the American hemlock is that it cannot be employed near large cities on account of the smoke and sulphur gases, which are always present in manufacturing districts. In both large and small places the Douglas spruce (Pseudotsuga Douglasii), with its dark green foliage, and the Colorado green spruce (Picea pungens) and its varieties glauca and Kosteriana give variety to the winter landscape. For immediate effect and for filling in between the more permanent pines and spruces the Norway spruce (Picea excelsa) is useful, but as it often outlives its usefulness at an early age, it is only useful for the purpose of temporary effects. The mountain pine (P. Mughus) is the most useful of the low growing evergreens for our northern climate, and is not out of place on the smallest lawn. When massed at the foot of larger evergreens it is extremely effective. Some of the junipers can safely be employed in the north. And by far the most effective of all is Juniperus Virginiana glauca, the glaucous form of the common red cedar. It is much more hardy than the type and it will thrive in the smoky atmosphere of the city as will no other cedar. Its whitish effect, like that of the Colorado blue spruce, is particularly striking. Juniperus Chinensis stricta is also an evergreen of the first rank for the north.

Evergreens for Low Planting.

For low planting, Juniperus Sabina, the savin juniper, is excellent, while Juniperus communis var. nana, which is still lower in growth, gives us an opportunity to produce an evergreen carpet when it is desired. As a useful, hardy evergreen we cannot overlook the Japanese yew (Taxus cuspidata). It is a welcome addition to the list of really hardy evergreens. The American arborvitæ (Thuya occidentalis), in its numerous varieties, is also useful as a northern evergreen, but prefers the shelter given by wind breaks. Its golden variety (var. aurea) is extremely useful, as it is really golden and adds a touch of bright color which harmonizes well with the prevailing deep green of the majority of evergreens. In sheltered positions it is safe to use the pea-fruited retinispora (R. pisifera), and in some cases the silver retinispora (R. squarrosa var. Veitchii), but, although this is fairly hardy, it is often injured by the winter sun. While the evergreens enumerated do not include all of the coniferæ that are hardy along the region of the Great Lakes, yet they do include the very hardiest species, and these are sufficient to produce a winter picture which, as far as coniferæ are concerned, will be effective and leave little to be desired.

What is true of the paucity of the really hardy coniferous evergreens in the Great Lake or northern regions, is still more true of the broad-leaved evergreens. One of the very few which is hardy under all conditions is the yucca (Y. filamentosa). When planted in large masses it is a cheering sight in winter, to say nothing of its profusion of bloom in summer. It is doubly welcome, but its value as a winter plant is its chief asset. Even a solitary specimen on the lawn is an evidence of life in the snow.

Rhododendrons, Laurels and Boxwoods.

The rhododendrons, which are first thought of among the broad-leaved evergreens, can be used safely and effectively in the northern parts of the northern states, but only under the most ideal conditions and with the best of care, and it is only too often that they eke out a bare existence. Conditions under which they would flourish in the regions of New York and Philadelphia would be fatal in the lake regions, and success is only reached by eternal vigilance. When such a sight is seen as that in Highland Park, Rochester, N. Y., we are forced to believe that rhododendrons will thrive and be considered a factor in the winter gardens of the north. If the planting beds are thoroughly prepared and epsom salts judiciously used, they will be a success. Effective grouping can be obtained by using the great laurel (R. maximum), R. Catawbiense and the numerous hardy hybrids.

What is true of the rhododendrons is also true of the mountain laurel (Kalmia latifolia) and Andromeda floribunda. The boxwood (Buxus sempervirens) cannot be called a northern plant, but the more uncommon Buxus arborescens will stand a temperature below zero without covering if well established. Excellent examples of it are to be seen in Geneva, N. Y., which are over four feet in height. Its foliage is coarser, but it is an excellent substitute for the European species. Its usefulness as a winter plant cannot be overestimated, especially in formal work. I have the temerity to mention this species of box only after having seen it withstand severe winters.

The best evergreen ground cover is undoubtedly the periwinkle (Vinca minor). Its ability to thrive under adverse conditions of light render it useful for other things besides winter effect. It is an excellent ground cover between evergreens and rhododendrons. Its cheerful green is not only beautiful to the eye, but the plant acts as a protection from deep freezing of the soil. When it is planted in mass in the open, or on the edge of shrub borders, in company with Rosa blanda, it makes a unique combination, as the brilliant, large fruits of the rose, borne near the ground and just over the groundwork of green vines, have an effect suggestive of the Christmas season.

Another broad-leaved evergreen which is useful in the northern latitudes is Euonymus radicans, which as a low climber takes the place of the English ivy. As a creeper it is seen at its best. The sun of February and March often burns some of the upper leaves, but whenever it produces its red berries it is a thing to be desired.

The Japanese honeysuckle (Lonicera Halleana), while not considered an evergreen, yet retains its green leaves until long after Christmas in sheltered situations, when used as a trailer, but not when used as a climber, as the leaves are more exposed to frost and wind and are not as persistent. As this plant is used for covering banks in open ravines, and around rocks and boulders, it has a cheery effect on a winter day.

Berried Shrubs and Trees.

One of the chief delights of a winter garden is the effect of the berried shrubs and trees, and of course we always think of berried plants in relation to Christmas, and very naturally of the holly, which is so extensively used at that time. The northerner is denied the use of this most regal plant, but whenever evergreen leaves and red berries can be combined, it is regarded as the highest perfection of winter effect.

A few years ago I conceived the idea of using the winter berry, or leafless holly (Ilex verticillata), which is more profuse with its berries than the southern holly, along with the English privet (Ligustrum vulgare), mixing the two kinds and planting in masses. The privet retains part of its green leaves until January and has splendid trusses of brilliant black berries, and the effect of these black berries and green leaves, with the dense masses of red berries of the leafless holly, gives the effect that is obtained in English gardens by the famous holly plant. The ilex is vigorous, as also is the privet, and the whole in time becomes a tangled mass and the effect glorious. Sometimes the leafless holly is planted along with the mountain laurel, but as the laurel is low and the ilex high, the green leaves and berries are not together and the effect is not so good. Even though it is not always possible to secure a background of green for berried plants in the winter, it is not always desirable, as the snow itself is a sufficient background for many berried plants.

The Best Berried Plants.

Among the best and most common of our berried plants are: The common barberry (B. vulgaris), with its racemes of brilliant berries which remain well into the winter; the Japanese barberry (B. Thunbergii), with its single yet thickly borne berries of as brilliant a hue, and the high bush cranberry (Viburnum Opulus), whose bright and large trusses of berries last until the new leaves are formed in the spring and are very striking. Many of the endless number of forms of cratægus are useful for winter effect, and, although their fruits are not persistent during the entire winter season, yet many are glorious in the early winter. Euonymus Bungeanus holds its fruits very long; in fact, it is better than the "Wahoo" or strawberry tree (E. Americanus). The sea buckthorn (Hippophae rhamnoides) is also attractive in winter, because of its yellow, black-dotted fruit, which is very persistent. Many of the roses are extremely beautiful, as their fruits are often large. One of the best is the Japanese rose (Rosa rugosa), whose large haws or berries are highly colored and remain long on the plant to brighten up the landscape; also Rosa multiflora, whose fruits, although smaller, are borne in large clusters and last all winter. Rosa lutescens has the largest fruits, some of which are one inch long and are borne in clusters of four. Rosa blanda is also useful.

The Privets and Other Shrubs.

The privets, both the common (L. vulgare) and the Japanese (L. Ibota), have large clusters of shining black berries, and are very striking with a background of the snow. The snow berry (S. racemosus), with its profuse masses of white berries, and the coral berry (S. vulgaris), are both splendid species for effective winter planting. When planted in masses in richly prepared borders, they produce riotous masses of fruit. The European buckthorn (Rhamnus cathartica), so often used for a wind break, has attractive black fruits, as has also Rhodotypos kerrioides. The staghorn sumach (Rhus typhina) produces a marked effect in a winter landscape, with its antler-like, dense clusters of berries. The smooth sumach (R. glabra) is also useful as a winter fruited plant.

The European mountain ash (Sorbus Aucuparia), with its bright red berries in large clusters, is especially useful for winter effect, and the yellow berried form is also useful for variety. With an evergreen background they are especially attractive.

Among the vines for winter effect, nothing can surpass the bitter-sweet (Celastrus scandens), with its winter array of orange berries. When the vine is allowed to grow as a shrub, forming an uneven mass of twining stems covered with attractive fruits, it is particularly fine. C. articulatus is also a splendid berried vine, similar to the bitter-sweet. Vitis heterophylla, whose grape-like clusters of whitish-blue berries offer a variety in berry color, are also interesting from the standpoint of winter effect.

The variety of berried plants is not seriously limited by the effect of the higher latitudes, and when planting for winter effect is planned we may enjoy a profusion of color all winter, which will please the eye and make our winter walk through park or home grounds a joy which belongs peculiarly to the winter season.

Bright Colored Twigs and Stems.

One of the very best opportunities for brightening up the winter landscape is offered to us with a lavish hand in the bright colored branches or twigs in shrubs and trees. Who of us has not been charmed, after the leaves have fallen, with a large mass of the red osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera)? As seen from the window of a train, the effect is lasting. A number of the cornus are useful in planting for winter effect. The best are: C. alba Sibirica and C. stolonifera for red stems, and C. stolonifera var. flaviramea for the yellow effect of its branches. When planted in large masses beside the brilliant green branches of Kerria Japonica, the effect is really wonderful. There are numerous species of cornus, among which might be mentioned C. Amomum and C. circinata, with bright colored bark, which gives us shades of color which are useful for winter effect, and as their berries are quite persistent and usually of a bluish white shade, the contrast between stems and fruit is good. The red stems of Rosa lucida are also used to advantage.

In large shrub borders, along margins of ponds and edges of creeks, the brilliant osiers form an important part of the winter landscape. About the best are the golden branched willow (Salix vitellina var. aurea) and the variety Britzensis, with reddish branches. Salix viminalis, the basket willow, has also bright yellow stems and is especially valuable. Salix purpurea, the purple osier, gives us a chance to introduce a purple hue into the winter landscape, which in the distance is particularly enchanting. Salix palmæfolia has also purple branches and is very useful. As a purple branched shrub, Berberis vulgaris purpurea, the purple leaved barberry, is often used in small plantations.

Effects in Somber Colors.

For gray effects in stem and twig coloration, we can resort to the sea buckthorn (Hippophae rhamnoides), and to one of the oleasters (Elæagnus argentea). Effects in gray are sometimes very desirable in the winter landscape picture. For effects in green branches, we have the grass-green stems of Kerria Japonica, and the green stemmed variety of the red dogwood (Cornus sanguinea viridissima), and the golden bell (Forsythia viridissima).

We look to the coral berry (Symphoricarpos vulgaris) for a magenta shade. For soft brown shades we have ample opportunity to select from a long list, such as Stephanandra flexuosa, Spiræa callosa, the golden bell (Forsythia suspensa), the tree of heaven (Ailanthus glandulosa), Cratægus crenata, and many others.

Many fail to notice the beautiful, soft effects that can be obtained by mass planting of the brown stemmed shrubs and trees, but it is particularly agreeable during the months of January and February to see a mass of brown stems as a relief from the blinding glare of the sun on the snow. It is then that we value the brown stemmed shrubs along with the osiers and dogwoods.

In order to secure exceedingly good effects in stem coloration it is well to remember that the highest color is produced in the growth of the current year, and in order to secure this growth we must not be afraid to prune heavily in the spring, so as not to destroy the effect in winter. This is particularly true of the willows, dogwoods and kerrias.

Planting With a Definite Purpose.

All planting should be done to a definite purpose. If it is for a place that is to be occupied throughout the entire year, we should not fail to make ample provision for the effect which we can produce in the winter. If successfully planned, such a planting would be a work of art, which would not only appeal to every artistic eye, but would at the same time serve as an education to the people.

The efforts of many landscape gardeners in the past have been to plan for summer effects only and we are often sated with the profusion of summer bloom. It is in the winter that we more fully appreciate what we can get by way of color and tone.

Too often we see the home grounds arrayed with bundles of straw, burlap, and barnyard refuse, and the graceful shrubs, which are absolutely hardy and need no protection, tied up in an unspeakable manner, suggestive of the hair dressing of an African chief.

The effective arrangement of plants for winter effect can never be taught, as it is more difficult than the more or less stereotyped summer effects can possibly be, yet it is worthy of careful study and will repay every effort. Winter travel and constant observation will enable us to add to our storehouse of knowledge.

The growing desire for outdoor exercise, especially in winter, when indoor ventilation is so often neglected, cannot be too much emphasized, and if it can be stimulated by the creation of better winter gardens and by rendering more beautiful the great out-of-doors, in the winter season, the art of the landscape profession will have taken a long stride forward.

PITTSBURG'S NEW FIRM.

Beginning September 1, Pittsburg will have a new wholesale cut flower commission house and dealer in florists' supplies. The name of the new firm is the McCallum Co., and its headquarters will be at 937 Liberty avenue. The officers of the company are as follows: President, E. J. McCallum; secretary, K. Klinke; treasurer, F. B. Woods; manager supply department, W. Q. Potter. Each of these gentlemen has for a number of years been connected with the older firms in the trade in Pittsburg, so that there is plenty of experience back of the new organization. It is stated that A. T. Lorch & Co., F. H. Westhoff and S. J. Hatch, of De Haven; the South View Floral Co., of Carrick; Charles Hoffmeyer, of Carnegie; P. M. Maier, of Woodville, and other growers of Lancaster county are interested in the firm.

Pittsburg is one of the best flower towns in the country and with a return to normal business conditions in the steel and iron industry the business there is sure of continued rapid development, with room enough for everyone who produces good stock or whose service in selling is what it ought to be.

GARDENERS' OPPORTUNITIES.

A Philadelphian writing in the Journal of the British Gardeners' Association says in part:

"One remedy, to a certain extent, for the overcrowded condition of the horticultural profession in Great Britain is for the more enterprising of the younger gardeners to emigrate to one of our colonies or to the United States. Here, in the Philadelphia district, most of the good gardeners in private places are British born and trained. So far as I can ascertain, there are few gardens here where apprentices or young gardeners are trained, and, in fact, there are few places where they could obtain so thorough a training as do the young gardeners at home.

"This is due to the fact that the gardens are on a smaller scale than those in Britain, and that the whole system of gardening is what a British gardener would call a slipshod system. Thus it follows that it is quite easy for a gardener trained under the more exacting system in Britain to adapt himself to the methods in vogue here, and to improve upon them in some cases. But he must come prepared to adapt himself, and not expect to be able to thrust British methods on the Yankees, for they strongly object to this.

"There are few, if any, private places in this country where there is a bothy for the gardeners. The staff in the garden usually consists of a head gardener, called the superintendent, who has charge of the stock and farm. There are one or more assistant gardeners inside and outside who are trained men, and the rest of the hands are usually Italian or Irish laborers, who are paid about $1.50 per day. The head gardeners' wages are from $75 to $100 per month, with house and other privileges. The wages of the assistant gardeners are from $25 to $45 per month, with board and lodging.

"Commercial rose, carnation and chrysanthemum growing is an important industry in this district. Good wages are paid for experienced rose growers. I have seen in advertisements $100 per month offered for really good men; but for this work American experience is required. On the whole, I think that the prospects of advancement for a young gardener are much better than in England. Life near Philadelphia is very similar to that in the old country; we have all modern improvements—in fact, the natives firmly believe they are far in advance of British methods in all things. I tried Toronto, Canada, before I came here, but found that the demand for gardeners was not so good; the wages are about the same, but there is more demand for commercial men than private gardeners. However, Canada is growing rapidly, and in a few years will compare favorably with the United States for gardens and gardeners."

DOUBLE WHITE MEADOW SWEET.

Enclosed you will find leaves and blooms of something which I think is some kind of spiræa. Please let me know just which kind it is. It is perfectly hardy and a fine shrub. A. C. T.

Spiræa Ulmaria flore pleno, commonly known as the double white Meadow Sweet, or Queen of the Meadows. It is a hardy and useful herbaceous perennial. C. W.

THRIPS IN GREENHOUSES.

A bulletin on "Thrips in Greenhouses" has been prepared by Prof. A. will soon be ready for distribution from the Illinois Agricultural Experiment Station. The following summary of the C. Beal, of the Department of Horticulture in the University of Illinois, and contents of the bulletin has been supplied by the author:

Thrips injury to cut flowers in greenhouses is a recent trouble.

Thrips are very small, winged, sucking insects, which lay their eggs in the green parts of plants.

The "hothouse species" was not found, but a closely related species is widely distributed.

The great damage to roses and carnations is due to the work of two common outdoor species—wheat thrips and onion thrips (E. tritici and T. tabaci).

Cucumbers are injured by onion thrips (Thrips tabaci-Lind.).

Observations made show that T. tabaci is the most abundant species in greenhouses in autumn and winter, but that Euthrips tritici becomes the most abundant species in rose houses in summer. Thrips tabaci appear to prefer the carnation to the rose.

Eggs are laid inside the calyx of carnations, on the outside of the calyx of the rose, and in the tissues of the lower side of the leaf of cucumbers and callas.

Injury is caused by withdrawal of the sap from the cells of the petals and leaves of plants, leaving white blotches on colored flowers, a browning of petals of white or light pink flowers, and a gray, hoary appearance to leaves.

All species are more or less sensitive to bright sunlight and generally seek shaded positions.

Temperatures at night above 60 degrees are favorable to thrips, and their appearance and worst injury may be expected in the warmest parts of the house. Conditions favorable to red spider are favorable to thrips.

Thrips injury is greatest in autumn and spring and least in midwinter.

Some varieties of carnations are more subject to attack from thrips.

Experiments with insecticides on carnations in a commercial establishment.

Fumigation slightly more effective than sprays.

Experiments on cucumbers in very large commercial houses.

Hydrocyanic acid gas, one ounce to each 1,000 cubic feet of space, dangerous to young cucumber plants, but sufficient to destroy an average of ninety-two per cent of the thrips.

Hydrocyanic acid gas, one ounce to each 3,000 cubic feet of space, destroyed aleyrodes (white fly), but only eleven per cent of thrips, while it did not injure the plants.

Daily sprayings with nicotine insecticide on the upper surfaces of the leaves, and the spray syringed off, gave good, practical results. Spraying thoroughly will clean out thrips, provided the plants will stand the hard syringing necessary to remove the spray.

Tobacco smoke is not a very efficient insecticide for thrips.

Sprays made with two-thirds of an ounce of any of the stronger nicotine insecticides per gallon of water gave promising results.

Nicotine is the poisonous principle in the insecticides used. Pure nicotine in very dilute solutions kills thrips almost instantly when sprayed on them.

The nicotine content is the factor determining the value of a reputed tobacco extract or nicotine compound.

WHEATON COUNTRY FAIR.

The country fair at Wheaton, Ill., opened August 25 with an excellent display in the department of plants and flowers, of which E. T. Wanzer, the Wheaton carnation grower, is superintendent. Emil Buettner, of Park Ridge, acted as judge. The plants were staged on Tuesday and awards were made as follows:

Twelve palms, A. T. Peterson, Wheaton, Ill.
Specimen palms, Vaughan's Greenhouses, Western Springs, Ill.
Cycas revoluta, A. T. Peterson.
Araucaria, Vaughan's Greenhouses.
Six Boston ferns, L. A. Miller, Glen Ellyn.
Fern dish, A. T. Peterson.
Whitmani fern, Vaughan's Greenhouses.
Collection of geraniums, E. T. Wanzer.
Hanging basket of Sprengeri, A. T. Peterson.
Specimen Boston fern, L. A. Miller.

The cut flowers were staged on Wednesday, the following awards being made:

Twenty-five American Beauties, Bassett & Washburn, Hinsdale, first; Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago, second.
Twenty-five Richmond, Bassett & Washburn first, Poehlmann Bros. Co. second.
Twenty-five Bride, Poehlmann Bros. Co. first, Bassett & Washburn second.
Twenty-five Killarney, Poehlmann Bros. Co. first.
Fifty white carnations, Poehlmann Bros. Co. first, E. T. Wanzer second.
Fifty light pink carnations, Poehlmann Bros. Co. first, E. T. Wanzer second.
Fifty deep pink carnations, E. T. Wanzer first.
Display of cut lilies, Poehlmann Bros Co.
Collection of hardy perennials, Vaughan's Greenhouses.
Collection of asters, E. T. Wanzer first, C. E. Randall second.
Collection of gladioli, Vaughan's Seed Store first, E. T. Wanzer second.

J. L. Raske, Chicago, made a fine display of cut flowers for exhibition only. The cut flower work is reserved for the third day of the fair. T. E. W.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Business began to pick up toward the end of last week and may be said to be unusually active for the closing days of August; ordinarily the last fortnight of August is about the dullest period of summer.

Conditions are radically different from those of a year ago. There is no glut of asters and all outdoor stock is either scarce or poor. There are many thousands of gladioli, but a majority are too poor to be worth sending to market and do not count in considering the supply. There are few indoor flowers and supply is in general much lighter than usual at this date. Light supply always means brisk demand, at least by contrast, and there is an appearance of activity the market has not had for months. Everything of usable quality is cleaned up each day.

In the rose department Killarney predominates. It is in large supply and although the most popular rose, there are quantities adequate to all requirements. Beauties also are more abundant than they have been. There is little change as to other varieties.

The midseason asters now being on, the quality is improved, but the supply is nowhere near so large as it would have been with normal weather conditions. There is no glut, as is usual at this date. The best asters bring fine prices and even the poorest sell out after a fashion.

Carnations once more are available, some growers having begun to cut from the freshly benched plants in the houses, while others are sending in increased quantities of field grown stock. Of course, the stems are short, but most of the stock is clean and salable.

There continue to be adequate supplies of lilies of all kinds. Valley is again plentiful. The approach of the autumn season is shown in that a few chrysanthemums are seen.

Beginning September 1, all the wholesale houses will be open until 6 p. m. and the new season may be said to be fairly on.

Death of Mrs. Pieser.

Mrs. Myra Pieser, wife of Gabriel H. Pieser, president of the Kennicott Bros. Co., and mother of George H. Pieser, died August 18, after a long illness. She was in the hospital, but was thought to be much better, when an internal hemorrhage caused the end to come most unexpectedly. The funeral was held from Furth's chapel on Grand boulevard August 20, with interment at Graceland cemetery. Mr. Pieser, being left entirely alone, has broken up housekeeping and will in the future make his home with his son, George.

Thompson Scores a Point.

Judge Dibell, at Joliet, has handed down a written opinion in the matter of the petition filed by J. D. Thompson for a modification of the injunction now standing against him in the matter of the J. D. Thompson Carnation Co. The court declines to interfere with the present order of things in the company, but interprets the injunction so that Mr. Thompson will have the right to vote, at the annual meeting in September, any stock which he may hold at that time and to exercise the rights of any office to which he may be elected by the votes of the stockholders.

Various Notes.

The A. L. Randall Co. was represented at Niagara Falls last week by Frank Johnson, Miss Tonner and Frank Farney, the latter having his samples at the International hotel, where some good orders were taken.

N. J. Rupp, of the John C. Moninger Co., says they were specially well pleased with the amount of business booked at Niagara Falls last week. The first two days they took orders aggregating $2,800, with a large number of prospects for future business. They gave customers a handsome pocket-book souvenir.

R. H. Woodyard, of Sharp, Partridge & Co., represented that firm at Niagara Falls last week.

E. C. Amling says he looks for a quite unusual season this fall, some growers being ready with good stock and others late in beginning to cut, with the result of higher average prices than a year ago and some growers doing splendidly while others suffer, particularly carnation growers whose stock is small.

A. C. Spencer has returned from his fortnight's outing in Wisconsin.

E. E. Pieser and wife started east August 22 by way of Mackinac Island, the lakes and the St. Lawrence. They will be absent about a month.

The E. F. Winterson Co. received the first chrysanthemums of the season August 20. They were Golden Glow from Elmer D. Smith & Co., Adrian, Mich.

E. Asmus, formerly in business in Chicago, is here from Helena, Mont., for a visit. Mr. Asmus is a nephew of Emil Buettner. He is now with the State Nursery Co.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. shows another sign of the approach of autumn, cosmos in two colors, the first arriving August 21.

Bassett & Washburn began to cut chrysanthemums August 22.

Wietor Bros. say they still are selling chrysanthemum plants and in the last week have made shipments to points as far away as New Jersey.

Brother-in-law Frank Ayres is in charge of C. W. McKellar's business while Mr. and Mrs. McKellar are visiting friends in Michigan on the way home from the S. A. F. convention.

Zech & Mann say this has been their best summer and that they look forward to a good increase in business during the approaching busy season. They recently have added to their list of consignors.

Miss Furlong, who presides in the office of Weiland & Risch, has returned from her vacation, five weeks of which were spent at Laury, Colo. J. P. Risch is now at Antioch for his outing. A large new safe has been installed in the office in anticipation of the approaching of the busy season.

C. M. Dickinson, at E. H. Hunt's, returned Tuesday from a trip to Toronto and Detroit, following the Niagara Falls convention. He says that at the convention in two days they sold over 600 of the Wittbold clamps for building concrete benches.

Miss Nelda Wolf, of J. A. Budlong's city store, has returned from an outing with her sister at Lake Geneva, The Dalles, Kilbourn and other points in Wisconsin.

Scheiden & Schoos say they have sold out on field grown carnation plants, 47,000 having been disposed of within a couple of weeks.

August Poehlmann, Adolph Poehlmann and their wives are on a trip down the St. Lawrence, but will be home next week with fresh energy for the job of rushing up the twenty-three new greenhouses to be built this fall.

Webster Randall spent a few days on his brother's farm in Michigan last week.

Vaughan & Sperry say that Friday and Saturday of last week were the best days they have enjoyed since June.

Percy Jones says things are beginning to pick up at the Flower Growers' market. In his own place Beauties and Killarney both are in good supply, but selling well.

J. A. Valentine, president-elect of the S. A. F., spent Tuesday in Chicago on his way home to Denver. H. E. Philpott, also a conventionite, was here en route to Winnipeg.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business last week was a duplicate of the week before. The demand was just about the same and the supply likewise. Beauties sold best of all and, next to them, first quality asters. Other roses sold only fairly well. The weather was hot up to the middle of the week, when at last a break came and it has been delightful ever since. Several good rains supplied a much needed want, as it was extremely dry in the country and several growers were suffering for want of water.

Cincinnati as a Convention City.

The florists of this city are happy in the fact that the S. A. F. has voted to visit them in 1909. They appreciate the honor that has been conferred upon them and they have resolved to do all in their power to make the meeting here next year one of the greatest ever held by the society. The central location of Cincinnati ought to bring out the largest attendance ever known. And for the same reason the trade exhibit ought to excel all others. Cincinnati has a great place in which to hold the trade exhibit. There will be plenty of room for all and there will be every facility for staging any kind of an exhibit a firm may want to put up. Besides that, we have many beautiful hotels and there will be ample accommodations for all at whatever price they wish to pay. Cincinnati is one of the greatest cities in the country when it comes to summer amusements. There can be no question but that all who come to the convention will be glad that they came and those who remained at home will be sorry that they did not come. At the next meeting of the Florists' Society the first steps will be taken towards setting the machinery in motion and from that time on no stone will be left unturned to make the meeting in 1909 the greatest in the history of the society.

Various Notes.

Vice-president-elect E. G. Gillett arrived home Saturday evening, accompanied by his family. He has been busy since then receiving the congratulations of his many friends, in the trade and out, in this city.

Frank Huntsman brought in a sample of the fruit from his seedling peach tree. In this he has quite a good thing, as the peach has passed judgment before many experts and they pronounce it an exceptionally good one.

Gus. Adrian has joined Max Rudolph on his trip among the Great Lakes. They will be away for several weeks.

Park Superintendent J. W. Rodgers has returned from his trip through several of the large cities of the middle west. He visited the parks and has come home full of ideas which he will try to have adopted in our parks.

F. E. Howald, of the Atlanta Floral Co., Atlanta, Ga., was a visitor between trains on his way to the north.

Wm. Murphy is another of those who are spending a few weeks in northern Michigan.

DENVER.

The greenhouses near Westminster, about five miles from here, were damaged by fire August 4 to the extent of about $1,000. The boiler room, cut flower room, potting room, coal bins and work room were destroyed and the adjoining part of several houses damaged. The boilers were full of water and were not damaged. Unfortunately, the insurance had expired only a few hours before the fire. A few days after the fire the greenhouses and forty acres of ground were bought by H. R. Mosnat, of this city. The greenhouses are planted to carnations, and fine new stock is now being cut. The new owner will replace the destroyed buildings with concrete structures and will also make extensive improvements. The men did splendid work in controlling the fire as well as they did.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

Since my last report the chrysanthemum crop seems to have taken a bad turn. Many complaints are heard from growers who have lost some of their plants, the long spell of wet weather having created a soft, rank growth, which does not agree with the dry, hot weather we are having now. That will give an advantage to the plants grown under glass.

Various Notes.

A communication from the Society of Southern Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists has been mailed by Secretary Paul Abele to many florists of the south, calling their attention to the importance of the organization which is going to have its next meeting at New Orleans in November, at the same time as the show of the New Orleans Horticultural Society. The trade is invited to make an exhibit, the price of space being fixed at 20 cents per square foot; minimum, ten square feet.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society had a meeting Thursday, August 20. President R. P. Steckler appointed a committee of three to act in conjunction with the Society of Southern Florists. They are M. M. de Lapouyade, H. Doescher and R. C. Eichling. The finance committee for the next term will be in charge of Otto Abele, Otto Werner and Charles Eble. There were three new applications for membership—John Hern, H. A. Steckler, M. J. Gurtler. The attendance at the meeting was not large, some members being out of town.

H. Papworth, Charles Eble, M. Cook and a few others were at the convention.

Why don't you dispose of your surplus?

Miss Catherine Rehm, having joined the Ladies' Auxiliary of the society, was also present at the Niagara reunion.

E. Baker, late superintendent of Audubon park, says he is preparing for publication a work which he believes is badly needed in the south. It is a plant culture or working handbook, especially written for the southern climate. Many valuable treatises of this kind, referring to the north, are of no value to us, and many directions published in northern papers are quite erroneous when followed in the south.

Abele Bros., who not many years ago started business in a small way, are now coming to the front as wholesalers. They are erecting four new houses to grow young stock in. They have to increase their production, having formed a contract with the Joseph Steckler Seed Co. to furnish that firm with the plants and nursery stock needed for its catalogue. Their stock is already large and in fine condition. Having lately purchased an adjoining piece of ground, they have increased their place and are on the way to become one of the largest flower establishments around here. They believe in raised outside benches for the growing of roses and carnations and, judging from what they have, it is certainly worth while to consider the advantages of this new system.

P. Kaul roots Magnolia fuscata layers in sphagnum moss, the same way as ficus. They form roots well enough, but the question is how they will stand when separated from the plants. He claims that they can be established in pots.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Dull trade ruled in cut flower circles last week and it looks as though there would be no special improvement for some weeks to come. Outdoor flowers continue to dominate the market. Asters are at their full flood tide, prices varying all the way from 25 cents for ordinary stock to $2 for best blooms of Comet or Ostrich Plume. Gladioli are overplentiful and hard to dispose of; $4 per hundred has been about an average price on these. Roses are abundant but small, and meet with sluggish sales.

The old crop of carnations is now done and a number of growers have started with the new crop. These are rather short-stemmed yet, but are making better prices. Lilies are abundant, and lily of the valley sells fairly well, but at low rates. Among outdoor flowers, Euphorbia corollata, Veronica longifolia subsessilis and some varieties of the helianthus are seen. A good many dahlias come in, but always meet with a slow trade. Asparagus and adiantum meet with moderate sales.

year was held at Horticultural hall, August 22 and 23, the main hall and one of the smaller ones being filled to overflowing. Gladioli were never shown in larger numbers or greater perfection in Boston. John Lewis Childs had an extensive display, comprising many excellent commercial varieties, such as America, Melrose, Blue Jay, Contrast, Cardinal, Alaska, Fireside, Blanche and Aline. B. Hammond Tracy, a specialist in these flowers at Wenham, Mass., had a superb collection, including many beautiful seedlings. The varieties Dawn and Butterfly received honorable mention. For 100 vases gladioli, arranged for effect, B. H. Tracy was first, but he was beaten for twelve named varieties by W. Whitman, M. Sullivan gardener. For fifty vases China asters, Francis Skinner; Mrs. J. L. Gardner, W. Thatcher gardener; and W. Whitman won in order named.

Perennial phloxes were shown in large quantities. For not less than thirty vases, T. C. Thurlow led, followed by Blue Hill Nurseries, W. Whitman and George Hollis.

Among miscellaneous displays were large collections of herbaceous plants from Farquhar & Co., F. J. Rea, Bellevue Nurseries, W. Whitman and Blue Hill Nurseries. Farquhar & Co. made a big display of Lilium auratum, Henryi and Leichtlini. They also had a collection of new dahlias, which received honorable mention. J. F. Flood & Co. had a large display of phloxes.

There was a splendid display of fruit, the pears, plums, peaches and melons being noteworthy features. Among the vegetable displays the mammoth onions, Prize Taker and Ailsa, from W. J. Clemson, J. O. Christensen gardener, were of special merit. The Boston Mycological Club had, as usual, a large assortment of mushrooms, which were a potent attraction to many of the visitors.

Various Notes.

Among those bringing in the first of the new season's crop of carnations are Peter Fisher, S. J. Goddard, James Tulis, H. H. Rogers and P. E. Richwagen. The last grower to bring in the old crop was Andrew Christensen, of Stoneham.

A special car will await the party at Arlington Heights and run directly to the nurseries.

There will be a special exhibition of products of children's gardens at Horticultural hall September 5 and 6. The general autumn exhibition comes on September 11, 12 and 13.

M. H. Norton is receiving many sympathetic messages on the death of his promising son, Francis J. Norton, which occurred August 14. The deceased was well and favorably known to the trade here and many expressions of sorrow are heard over his early death, he being only in his twenty-ninth year.

PITTSBURG.

Various Notes.

Trade conditions continue much the same, except that there is more good stock coming every day. This market never saw such quantities of good stock in summer.

The new wholesale house is now an assured thing and the only question is, will this city support four commission houses? Three of the new firm have been employees of the older houses; the other member is a real estate man. Their friends wish them success.

A jolly bunch of florists left for Niagara last week in a special car. Their names were found in the list of "those present."

Wm. Edlefsen, of Milwaukee, Wis., was a visitor in the city for a few hours on his way to New York to meet his family, who are returning from a six months' tour of Europe. Hoo-Hoo.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

There seems reason for indulging in the hope that the lowest ebb of midsummer dullness is past. Business in cut flowers was so dull during the convention that it seemed impossible for things to be worse. Friday and Saturday saw a slight improvement, which was continued on Monday. The demand was chiefly for fancy asters and for Beauties, but this demand had a perceptible effect on several other varieties of flowers.

The market conditions vary from last week in that there are more really fine asters coming in. The quality of many of Semple's Branching and of Vick's leaves little to be desired. The flowers are large, firm, and well colored, the stems long, the foliage good. Beauties are also improving, the cooler weather of the last few days having a perceptible effect on the color of the really nice new crop blooms now coming in from local growers. The eastern stock continues superior in body and in color, but the difference is not so marked as a fortnight ago. America continues the most popular gladiolus, good spikes of this variety bringing excellent prices. Carnations have made their appearance from indoor-grown plants, Afterglow, Beacon, Enchantress, Lieut. Peary and Guardian Angel being most prominent so far. They are beautifully colored, of fair size and substance, but with stems far below market requirements. Ethel Crocker, I think from field-grown plants, is fine. White are apt to bring 50 cents a hundred more than colored carnations in the market. Dahlias have made their appearance. A. D. Livoni, a show pink, is prominent.

Of the other flowers it is only necessary to say that there has been a dreadful slaughter of Kaiserin, especially in the poorer grades, that Brides and Maids are improving in quality, that asters that cannot be classed as choice are bad stock indeed, and that the outdoor flowers do not, as a rule, sell at satisfactory prices.

A London Letter.

The following extract from a letter recently received in this city is of more than usual interest to horticulturists:

"This afternoon we all went to a flower show, the finest I have ever seen. It was held by the Royal Horticultural Society in the grounds of Holland House; they had numbers of large tents and a band. Some of the roses were fully twice as large as any rose I have seen (among them Frau Karl Druschki and Mildred Grant), but they were grown on standard bushes. We saw some Harry Kirks which father was rather disappointed in; they are a deeper yellow than our own, and larger, but not as fine as some of the other yellow roses. The Killarney was no better than at home. Dickson had an exhibit there."

A Seed Warehouse.

Through the courtesy of J. Otto Thilow, secretary of the Henry A. Dreer corporation, I was enabled a few days ago to see the company's seedhouse at 714 Chestnut street and the warehouse at Seventh and Locust streets under particularly favorable circumstances. We began by ascending to the roof at 714, where a new greenhouse 9x20 is nearly completed. Just think of it, a greenhouse on the roof of a four-story Chestnut street building. It seems decidedly modern. This greenhouse is built of cypress roofing material, with sides of corrugated iron, and heated by hot water. It is intended for testing the seeds, especially vegetable, before they are sent out. A few seeds from each bag will be tried immediately after their arrival, under as nearly natural conditions as possible, and the result carefully noted. When the soil has been once used for germinating a crop of seeds it is purified by air and hydrated lime before it is used a second time. The value of such test to a seedhouse priding itself on reliability cannot be overestimated.

The interesting features of the third and fourth floors are the changes recently made. Flower seeds and bulbs are presided over by George D. Clarke; the vegetable seeds are looked after by Charles H. McKubbin. These two kinds of seeds have heretofore been associated, but the growth of the business in each has rendered more room imperatively necessary. System is the watchword of both departments. On one side you see drawers containing smaller quantities of each variety of seeds, on the other side larger quantities of the same seeds. The difficulty encountered in filling orders is the great variety of seeds called for in one order. This difficulty has been met here by the introduction of a large number of small movable drawers in which the order can be placed and the seeds thrown in and checked off as the order passes from department to department, the danger of error thus being reduced to a minimum. Another feature is the printing machine used for labels, tags, etc. The second floor is devoted to the office, the department presided over by Herbert G. Tull. The ground floor, as is well known, is the general salesroom, where samples of better stock in the upper floors and in the warehouse are carried and sold.

The Vacuum System.

The Keller Pottery Co. closed down its plant for three weeks during July in order to install the vacuum system, and also to get the place in general running order for the coming season. Charles Keller, president of the company, showed a representative of the Review through the extensive workshop a short time ago. Two suction pumps have been installed to bring back the water from the return pipe to the boilers; also an automatic high pressure damper, which works within a half pound of the desired pressure. There are other improvements, making the machinery on this progressive place fully up to if not ahead of the times. Mr. Keller understands every practical detail of his business thoroughly, and fully deserves the success which is attending his company's efforts.

Visitors in Town.

Quite a large number of visitors well known in the profession have been here during the last few days, among them C. B. Mills, Jacksonville, Fla.; Samuel McClements, of Randolph & McClements, Pittsburg; C. H. Huesman, Reading, Pa.; John Wolf, Savannah, Ga.; E. H. Horgan, of the Idle Hour Nurseries, Macon, Ga.; the senior members of the firms of Ratcliffe & Tanner, Richmond, Va., and Hammond & Gumpf, Lancaster, Pa.

Various Notes.

Frederick J. Michell, who was prevented at the last moment from attending the Niagara convention, said that his company felt fully repaid for making so large an exhibit at the convention by the interest shown and the generous orders received from those who were present. Israel Rosnosky, who represented the company there, is now in Boston.

Albert Swan, catcher for the All-American baseball team at Niagara last week, has returned to this city. Mr. Swan says that the convention was a great success, and that an overcoat would not have been amiss at times.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., was greatly pleased with the interest taken in his firm's convention exhibit. Mr. Eschner says that everything went off well.

Edw. Reid was successful in getting his measure to secure twenty-five per cent discount for weight of ice from the express companies before the legislative committee of the S. A. F. Mr. Reid feels sure that cut flowers can and will be given this discount, and that the shipping business will be greatly benefited thereby.

Paul Berkowitz, of the firm of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., left his desk on Monday long enough to say that he had been well pleased with the business done at Niagara Falls. His firm's exhibit was the largest and handsomest it has ever made. It was greatly admired by all the visitors, more especially by the Canadian florists, who had never seen anything approaching so handsome a display before. Mr. Berkowitz enjoyed especially greeting his friends again and thought the crowd of outsiders admitted to the exhibition hall was the only drawback to the pleasure of the occasion.

Hugo Kind, of Hammonton, N. J., has been sending some attractive bunches of early dahlias to W. E. McKissick. A. D. Livoni, a show pink, is the first variety.

William Stevens, the popular salesman for John Burton, made his reappearance at the store of Berger Bros. August 19.

R. J. Irwin has been greatly pleased with the many kind letters of congratulation received from business friends on the advent of the new company. S. S. Skidelsky, who is now in Erie, Pa., sent in an encouraging batch of convention orders on which to commence work.

William J. Baker is receiving some physostegia, quite a rarity in this market. They make a fine show on long stems.

Julius Wolff, Jr., had a handsome out-of-town wedding decoration August 24. Choice plants, cut asters, gladioli, asparagus, etc., were largely used. A pretty nice thing to have at any time, more especially now.

Edward J. Fancourt, secretary of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., returned to this city August 25.

H. M. Weiss & Sons, Hatboro, Pa., have commenced shipping new crop carnations to the Leo Niessen Co. Their Lieut. Peary are fine for the season.

The Primrose Flower Shop is the name of the new store to be opened on North Broad street, near the opera house.

William J. Young, Jr., has returned from his vacation, spent near Doylestown, with a windup at Atlantic City. It ought to be added that Mr. Young left his greenhouses in tiptop condition before leaving for his vacation.

Fred Ehret has arranged for an entrance on Broad street for his Fairmount avenue flower shop.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The New Yorkers who attended the convention came from the perfect weather of Niagara into rain, heat and humidity Saturday. Monday, however, was cool and stock came to the cut flower market in endless profusion. Quality is improving every day. Society is away—all of it, even the great middle class. The steady flower buyers of the winter time are in the hills and far away. The children are not yet back for school, and as Charley, of Thorney's, says, just back from his restful summer, "There's nuthin' doin'."

Most of the Beauties coming in are small and poor. The few really good ones that arrive are quickly snapped up at good prices. There are few carnations, but it will not be over a month until all the novelties are again in evidence. Of the asters, the new varieties and the best of the old are as beautiful as chrysanthemums and find a fair demand, but many a barrel of the poor stuff finds no outlet but the dump. What a lesson the growers are getting this year of the utter uselessness of growing common stuff! The same rule holds good as to every variety of cut flowers. It is now, and ever will be, the survival of the fittest. Even in this dullest of dull times, the good stock sells. This market has little room for mediocrity.

There is a tremendous lot of lily of the valley in the ice-boxes. Some of it from the east does not revive after arrival. The lily supply from outdoors is fine, especially rubrum and longiflorum. Coreopsis, rudbeckia, tritoma and hydrangea are abundant and help to make the retail windows attractive. Never were the gladioli so perfect as now. Grand stock arrives daily, with America still the most beautiful and the heaviest in demand.

Various Notes.

The S. A. F. president is back and at his desk again. We are proud of him. He did himself honor and everybody speaks highly of his good, practical common sense and his splendid executive ability. The young man eloquent, E. V. Hallock, was in conference with him and the secretary and other bright lights of Twenty-eighth street Monday. All who attended Treasurer Beatty's banquet at the Statler hotel, Buffalo, after the bowling ended, say it was a feast of soul, etc., long to be remembered.

C. C. Pollworth and wife, of Milwaukee, came via the Hudson river trip Friday, James McManus and family accompanying them.

D. Falconer, of Chatham, the rose grower, was in town Monday. He has been sending his fine stock to J. K. Allen for thirteen years.

A. L. Young has been away on a fishing trip with Theo. Hengstenberg and August Siegel, and ten-pound specimens and a quarter ton catch are among the claims of the Nimrods. W. H. Miller, of the same house, has even larger tales from the Highlands.

This week seems to be devoted to house-cleaning in the wholesale section. Everybody is painting, renovating, enlarging and preparing for the coming season. It will be a slick lot of mercantile centers that will open their windows to the buyers September 1.

Mr. and Mrs. George Stumpp spent a quiet Sunday in Toronto on their way by boat to Quebec and Boston.

New York to Niagara.

The following account of the trip to Niagara Falls was crowded out of last week's issue:

The New York delegation to the convention numbered 146 souls, and jolly old souls, as the poet says, were they all, for a more cheery, harmonious and happy crowd it would be hard to gather. The special train was comfortably filled, though it was short fifty of the number expected and twenty-five short of the acceptances Secretary Young received. In fact, when you add those who went ahead and those who ought to go to those who went, New York should have been easily represented by 300. It is hard to understand why any florist within 1,000 miles of any convention can afford to stay away from it, especially this year, when we met at the grandest spot on the globe.

The weather man was propitious. We started with a cool, cloudy morning and the whole day made good, none of the August heat of other years, and the road of anthracite made good, clean air, clean living and not a speck of dust, and many a stretch of level country whizzed over at a speed of sixty miles an hour. Beautiful scenery almost all the way, the Chemung and Genesee valleys, the verdure clad hills and the long vistas of river and mountain kept us wide-awake and interested all the way.

An enforced stop at Buffalo to accommodate the hungry brought us into the Falls an hour after scheduled time, but with still a witching hour of greetings and a cursory glance at the wonderful display of exhibits before the cry of "Lights out" sent us to welcome rest, the sound of the eternal voice of the mighty cataract and the most perfect atmospheric conditions lulling us to happy oblivion in sleep.

For beauty and precociousness and popularity, the youngest delegate and orchid queen, Miss Catharine McManus, easily won the prize. The gold medal to the handsomest man on the train, given by the ladies, was won by Will Rickards by a large majority. Fenrich and Manda also ran, but they ran bad. Rickards had a larger majority than the next president will have, comparatively.

The bowling team was in deep discussion most of the way, and have decided to stand or fall together. We also had a batch of lady bowlers on the train that will be heard from. Most of the territory within twenty-five miles of New York sent its delegation. The crowd from the city itself was far below the estimate. The New York Florists' Club added to its well known reputation for hospitality. Every comfort possible was accorded its guests and refreshments of every kind were abundant, even to ice cream and candy, of which there was enough and to spare. President Traendly, President Weathered, Secretary Young, Treasurer Allen and Vice-president Marshall did the official honors with constant interest in the comfort of the ladies.

Harmless games, in which Joe Manda managed, as usual, to draw four aces, kept the sporty element awake. Most of the politicians had preceded the special and were at the Falls when we arrived. Long Island did itself proud. The delegation from across the bridge was up-to-date and fat in numbers. Many of the excursionists brought their wives and quite a number are returning via Toronto, the St. Lawrence and Montreal. If weather and accommodations and grandeur of surroundings are considered, it would seem as if after Cincinnati this would be the ideal center to make permanent as the annual meeting place of the S. A. F. Altogether it was conceded by the occupants of the New York special that a more delightful day of travel to the convention was never experienced, and the only regret was that a larger crowd did not appreciate its opportunity and participate in the festivities.

ERIE, PA.

State of Trade.

Trade keeps up well during the warm weather. Many flowers are used for porch decorations. Golden Glow and gladioli are seen in profusion on the verandas. Carnations are scarce. Asters are plentiful. Roses are not at their best at present, though some good stock is shipped in.

Various Notes.

Miss Frances Berger, who has been employed at Offerle & Schaal's store, has gone to Cincinnati for a brief stay.

John V. Laver is moving his store from 711 State street to 704 State street, the place formerly occupied by the American restaurant. The room is fitted up with mirrors on all sides and white enameled woodwork. Mr. Laver will have an attractive store.

ASTER TRADE MARK Lady Roosevelt

THE QUEEN OF AUTUMN

CHRYSANTHEMUM TYPE

Cut Flowers for Sale In order to get introduced to the trade we hereby offer for sale to the retail florists of the United States and Canada cut flowers of this World Famous, Improved, Unexcelled Type of Aster. We expect by the time they come into bloom, which will be about the 15th of September, to have the plants standing 4½ to 5½ feet tall, possibly some few of same 6 feet, enabling us to cut bloom stems ranging from 33 to 48 inches (4 feet) in length, with flowers from 4 to 5½ inches in diameter. The prices, the same as Roses, will be graded according to the length of stems, ranging from 50c to $2.00 per dozen. On account of the extra length of stems, they being of a stiff, wiry nature, capable of sustaining the extremely large bloom, may be shipped 1500 to 2000 miles without deterioration, as they absorb sufficient water to preserve them in transit. A trial sample order of a few dozen is solicited, which will be, by far, more convincing as to the merits than all we might say.

A price list with terms of sale, embodied in an illustrated 1908 invitation folder, or hand bill, will be sent to interested parties upon application. Said folder also contains much of interest relative to the development of this new strain and type of Aster, seed of which we have sold, during the past spring, to parties in nearly every state in the Union, also Canada, Europe and Australia, receiving $3.00 per pkt. therefor, and $10.00 for our improved methods of culture instructions, which are original with ourselves and unlike the methods set forth by seedsmen and practiced by Aster growers generally. We already have orders booked from retail florists for sample shipments of Asters from cities far and near; viz.: Denver, Colo.; Boston, Mass.; New Orleans, La., and Toronto, Canada.

CAULIFLOWER TO FOLLOW MUMS.

I have a house with mums in solid benches, which I would like to follow with cauliflower. Will someone tell me what variety would be best to use? Please state also the time for sowing seed and give me a little idea as to culture. A. L.

Either Snowball or Dwarf Erfurt is a good variety for indoor culture. The time of sowing will depend on the date at which you expect to have your house cleared of the mums. If you are growing early varieties you can have the house empty sometime in October, but with late kinds it would be well into November before they would be all finished. However, you can make your own calculations, allowing six weeks from time of seed sowing until the plants are fit to set out in the house.

Cauliflower does better in solid beds than in raised benches, though good crops can be grown in the latter, only they need closer attention in the matter of watering. Being healthy feeders, the soil should be well enriched, either with barnyard manure or some good fertilizer, the former preferable. Dwarf varieties, like those above mentioned, can be set one foot apart. The most suitable temperature is 45 to 50 degrees at night, with a rise of 15 degrees by sun-heat, and air should be given on all favorable occasions, to keep the growth firm and stocky.

Caterpillars sometimes get into the house and prove troublesome. The best remedy is hand picking, as they seldom come in such large numbers but that they can be kept in check in this way. Greenfly can be got rid of by smoking with tobacco.

Syringing is seldom necessary, but a little overhead sprinkling on bright days will help the plants to resist the flagging influence of the sun. When the heads are well formed they should be shaded until finished by having a few of the leaves broken over them. The whiteness of the head goes a good, long way in procuring the best price for the product. WILLIAM SCOTT.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The Market.

Continued scarcity of flowers was the cry of the market last week. The demand is excellent. A number of funerals in prominent circles caused the florists some rapid fire thinking as to what to get, and principally where to get it. Asters and speciosum lilies were the main stock used. Carnations have not made their appearance to any extent on the market as yet, and roses are scarce. The weather continues cold, and florists are bracing up for fall business, about to begin.

Various Notes.

Oscar Carlson and R. A. Latham have been catching some fine fish lately on their week end trips to the country in this state and Wisconsin.

Miss Whitted returned August 22 from her trip east, having stopped at Niagara on her way back, and, in her own words, "had the time of her life."

The Minneapolis Floral Co. is getting in its large bulb supply in daily shipments. A fine crop of chrysanthemums is to be seen here, many in full bud, ready to burst.

The city workhouse has completed the stocking up of its new greenhouses, and everything is in shape for the winter growing. M. E. M.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

State of Trade.

Trade has been good since last report, with a great deal of funeral work, which used up a good lot of stock. Roses are coming in from new stock, mostly Maid and Bride. Carnations are rather scarce, as all the old stock is thrown out and those coming in are all from new stock. They are good, but not enough to go around. Gladioli are quite plentiful and move slowly, but are good for display purposes. Asters are coming in more plentifully, but most of them are rather small and short stemmed. First-class asters are scarce in this market.

Various Notes.

Only a few attended the convention from this city, as a great many were away on vacations and it tied others down.

Jas. McKellar and wife have returned from their camping expedition on the Muskingum river and report a fine time but few fish.

The Munk Floral Co. is cutting some good asters, which find ready sale.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is cutting some extra good roses and carnations from new stock.

Job Davies, an aged florist of this city, died of pneumonia August 21. The funeral was held Monday, August 24. Mr. Davies was 77 years of age. He embarked from England fifty-five years ago, first locating in Lancaster, O., and later going to Cincinnati, where he was a familiar figure in the markets for ten years. Coming to Columbus thirty-five years ago, he has been connected with the florists' business up to the time he was taken with pneumonia and was only sick three days. He was one of the oldest florists in the city and had fairly good health up to his last spell of sickness. He will be greatly missed by the trade here. J. M.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

The greenhouses established at Crescent Hill under the management of Mrs. M. D. Reimers have been completely renovated and will be in splendid condition for the coming season. The new houses will be devoted especially to novelties and choice flowering and decorative plants, which are always in demand at the retail store, 329 Fourth avenue, established for twenty-eight years. The chrysanthemum houses are in fine condition and the poinsettias are unusually promising. A heavy importation of azaleas, rhododendrons, lilacs and winter plants is daily expected and many novelties will be displayed during the coming winter and spring.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Season's Building Operations.

Florence A. Williard has been granted a permit for the erection of a greenhouse in addition to her range at 279 Massachusetts avenue. It is to be 10x47.

Since the beginning of the year there has been an unusual amount of building done by florists in this city. According to the records there have been eleven permits granted for greenhouses or additions. These include the following: A. E. Westcott, 552 Public street, 20x40 feet; estate of Owen McCarron, 402 Hope street, 20x20 and 18x50; Mary Cameron, Marlboro street, 14x40; E. J. Johnston, 462 Rochambeau avenue, 30x122 and 20x25; Thomas F. Carlisle, 66 Briggs street, 12x24; J. P. & C. T. O'Connell, 87 Vandewater street, 12x25; Theodule Coderre, Richland street, 20x25; Annie F. Peckham, 13x20; Florence A. Williard, 279 Massachusetts avenue, 10x47.

Florist Gets Damages.

At a recent meeting of the Lincoln town council, William Taylor, a Cumberland florist, was allowed $64 in settlement of a bill for services rendered by him. Last June two Greeks were celebrating in that town with a revolver, when the town sergeant and Mr. Taylor happened to come along. As they approached the Greeks the pistol was hidden, and the sergeant asked them who had been firing off the weapon in the street. Both denied any knowledge of the matter and the sergeant, in attempting to search the pockets of one of the fellows, was suddenly confronted with the pistol in the hands of one of them. Mr. Taylor rushed to the assistance of the officer, without being called upon, and was shot in the abdomen in the scuffle that preceded the arrest of the Greeks. The bullet has not yet been extracted. Mr. Taylor presented a bill to the town council, asking $50 for loss of time and $14 for medical attention. He signed papers releasing the town from further claim for damages.

Various Notes.

John F. Wood has sold his retail store at 112 Westminster street to William B. Hazard and has gone west.

T. F. Keller is now located at 147 Mathewson street, having moved from 190 on the same street.

The Florists' and Gardeners' Club of Rhode Island has adjourned its regular meetings until the second Monday evening in October, unless a special one is called by the president before that time.

Andrew Pow, of "The Breakers" greenhouses, at Newport, announces the marriage, August 26, in Boston, of his niece, Miss Lizzie Morrison, to George Dye, both of Newport. W. H. M.

CORNFLOWER.

Will you kindly let me know the proper time to sow cornflower (bachelor button) seed? Also the best way to grow same? W. C. G.

It is not stated whether the cornflowers are intended for outdoor or indoor culture. If grown under glass, a cool, airy house is essential and a night temperature of 45 to 48 degrees is sufficiently high. For an early spring crop, make sowings in drills two feet apart in November, after the chrysanthemums are cut. The same soil will answer, if some well rotted manure is added to it. Raised benches are to be preferred to solid beds for this early crop and a light house is necessary. Thin out the little seedlings where they come up thickly. Treat as you would ten weeks' stock or antirrhinum, and you will get a nice crop of flowers in early spring.

Outdoors, the first sowing of seed should be put in just as soon as frost leaves the ground. If wanted throughout the season, make additional sowings until July 1, at intervals of three weeks. Grow in nursery rows two and two and one-half feet apart, or, if you want to use a horse cultivator, better have the rows a foot wider. Cornflowers are of easy culture. Owing to their persistent flowering qualities, they are a useful annual. As a rule, the dark blue variety of Centaurea Cyanus, named Emperor William, has the chief commercial value.

Enclosed you will find a dollar, in payment of the Review for another year. The Review is brimful of good things and we obtain more information from it than from all other papers.—W. H. Morton, Hillsboro, Ore.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Watson S. Woodruff, Orange, Conn.; First Vice-pres., J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland.

TOMATOES are doing very poorly.

PEAS have been harvested and most varieties have given fair results.

SWEET CORN is coming along fairly well, but in the west will hardly recover from the early setback.

THE last boat from Portugal brought nine cases of Azores Harrisii bulbs for Henry & Lee, New York, and two for Victor Mordeno.

C. C. MORSE & Co., San Francisco, will put on the market this year a number of their selections of sweet peas of the Countess Spencer type.

THE Harrisii bulbs are practically all in, the boat from Bermuda which reached New York August 21 having but fifty-four cases, consigned to customs house brokers.

J. H. FORD, of Ravenna, O., who was at one time assistant secretary of the American Seed Trade Association, is the prohibition candidate for state treasurer in Ohio at the November election.

A REPORT has been received from Holland that the Dutch bulb crop has turned out twenty per cent short, but the general understanding is that the orders booked are a good deal shorter than that if compared with last year.

SEED CONVENTION REPORT.

Secretary Kendel, of the American Seed Trade Association, has issued the annual volume published by that organization, considerably enlarged, for in addition to the proceedings of the Detroit convention it contains the topical index to the reports for the years 1883 to 1907 and the proceedings of the congress of horticulture held at Jamestown in 1907. The cover carries the subjoined:

The following resolution was passed at the Detroit convention and ordered printed separately:

Resolved, That this association discountenances all indefiniteness in the use of a disclaimer, and urges all loyal members to stand by the official disclaimer adopted by the association, and by so doing strengthen the position of each and strengthen all; and that we urge the use of this disclaimer on all letterheads, bill-heads, contracts, catalogues, seed bags, order sheets, labels, tags and other printed matter, as well as framed store cards.

Should some members desire further conditions to those stated on this disclaimer, we nevertheless urge that for the first section of their printed disclaimer they use the official wording, viz.:

"We give no warranty, express or implied, as to description, quality, productiveness, or any other matter of any seeds, bulbs, or plants we send out, and we will not be in any way responsible for the crop. If the purchaser does not accept the goods on these terms, they are at once to be returned."

GERMAN SEED CROPS.

In general the seed crops in the Quedlinburg district of Germany are described as "middling." A cold, damp spring caused a weak germination and July was hot and dry. The acreage in many instances was smaller than usual and not many vegetables or farm seeds, except sugar beet, promise good crops. Spinach yielded fairly well. The same factors affected the yield of flower seeds. Asters, stocks, mignonettes, nasturtiums, petunias, verbenas, zinnias and some others promise medium results, but pansies suffered severely from the protracted drought and yielded but half a crop. Biennials and perennials promise medium to good crops. Pot plants, grown in the greenhouses, such as begonias, calceolarias, cinerarias, coleus, cyclamen, gloxinias, heliotropiums, pelargoniums, Primula Chinensis, Primula obconica, saintpaulias, streptocarpus, etc., are yielding a good crop.

At Erfurt the season has been about normal and the outlook is more favorable. Cauliflower, radish, leek, parsley and parsnip are in good shape. Brussicas are only middling, the winter having made great gaps in the plantations. Lettuces have not been largely planted, but appear in first-rate condition. Beets have not been so extensively planted as usual; long sorts promise well, but round sorts will be short. Some pea crops suffered by a recent hail. The flower fields look fine, those of phloxes, verbenas, etc., rivaling one another in brilliancy of tint. Most plants of this class are seeding well and promising satisfactory crops. Mignonette is rather an exception, having suffered considerably from black fly at an earlier stage. Asters are looking strong and healthy. Sweet peas, favored by the weather, are podding nicely, and a fair average crop is hoped for, though damage by hail will make some varieties short. Biennials have all seeded well, and the warm weather is favoring the ripening of the pansy pods. Most sorts of perennials are yielding satisfactorily, and so are the greenhouse plants as a whole, though large-flowered cinerarias have come out short, and a slight rise in price is probable.

GERMAN GRASS SEED CROPS.

It is too early yet to give a definite report as to the qualities and prices of this year's grass seeds and clovers, but it might be of interest to know the present state of things and we will give you in the following some short information.

The South German agrostis is only now being cut and the weather is very unfavorable at present for the harvesting. Lower prices than last year are hardly to be expected.

Aira flexuosa is an average crop. Prices will be about the same as last year.

The reports about the crop of Alopecurus pratensis are favorable; however, the great loss in cleaning the seed will cause high prices again.

Anthoxanthum odoratum is about the same as last year, while Anthoxanthum Puelii is not yet in.

No definite reports from France are to hand as to the crop of Avena elatior. The crop in Germany was an average one, but prices are not yet fixed.

Some growing districts report a fair crop of Cynosurus cristatus, while in others the crop is still uncut and unfavorable weather will do great damage and cause high prices again. Old stocks are exhausted, which also will influence the market.

There is almost no import of Dactylis glomerata from New Zealand this year and there is little chance of seeing reduced the high price of last winter for this variety.

The harvest of Festuca duriuscula and Festuca ovina seems to be an average one, but the great demand for these varieties and the exhausted stocks have already caused an advance in price and high prices for well cleaned seed are expected.

A larger quantity of Festuca ovina tenuifolia was brought in and we have secured a good part of the best parcels. Prices will be about the same as last year, owing to the wild speculation of some buyers of the rough seed.

Festuca elatior (arundinacea) has been harvested in smaller quantities than last year. Prices are not yet settled.

The quantities of Festuca heterophylla and Festuca rubra are very limited again and prices accordingly high.

The smallest crop was yielded again in Poa nemoralis and last year's high prices will be seen again and even be surpassed.

Prices of Poa pratensis are unsettled; the quality is better than last year.

Definite reports from the growing districts of Poa trivialis are not yet to hand.

Red clover and Lucerne are looking well. All depends on the weather now. Of yellow trefoil there was a smaller quantity harvested and the market is very strong for this article.

The prospects for Lotus villosus are good, but nothing is in yet and the weather may spoil all. Even if we get a good crop, there will be high prices for this article again.

We hope to be able to give early in September a full report, which will be sent to all our regular customers and on demand to any of your readers. Prices and samples also on application.

FRENCH SEED CROPS.

The early part of the season in France was much like that in the United States. In one section (the south) a long drought prevailed, while in the other (northwest) wet weather did equal damage.

Beets will be a poor crop this year, on account of scarcity of plants set in for seeds, and no doubt the lucky holders of good stocks of current varieties, such as Flat Egyptian, Eclipse, Early Dark Red Turnip, etc., from last season, may look forward to a good profit on same. Carrots were doing well up to lately, but in most parts of the country small caterpillars have again appeared in the heads of the carrots, as has been the case these last years, eating off the seeds and destroying a whole crop in no time. Cabbages, turnips and swedes are being harvested and only prove a medium crop. Leeks are standing nicely and should the temperature keep on favorable, we may reckon upon a good crop. Lettuces are also looking nice; they only want about three to four weeks of nice hot weather to give us a good crop.

Mangels have been planted again in large quantities for seeds, with the exception of Long Red Mammoth, of which there is not much about. They give every hope of a good crop. Onions have done badly lately, under the influence of continuous wet weather. Hot weather is helping them to recover a bit, but only a short crop is to be reckoned upon. Reports from Italy and the south of France on white varieties are bad, so that a big advance in prices must be expected.

Radishes will also be a poor crop, owing to scarcity of plants for seeds, a large quantity of them having perished soon after being transplanted, through a fortnight's drought which occurred at the time.

Boddington's Gigantic Cyclamen

The seed of Cyclamen is often sown too early in the year; from August to the end of September is the best time. Boddington's Gigantic Cyclamen are unequaled for size and quality of bloom. A magnificent strain of Cyclamen with flowers of extraordinary size and substance.

Gigantic White Butterfly. Pure white; immense flowers.
Gigantic Snowflake. The largest of all white Cyclamen.
Gigantic Cherry-red. Most brilliant and effective.
Gigantic Rose. Immense flowers of a pleasing shade of light rose.
Gigantic Pink. Exquisite shade of soft pink.
Gigantic Crimson. Most striking color; under artificial light appears to be almost luminous.
Gigantic Crimson and White. A magnificent flower of the largest type.
Gigantic Syringa Blue. (New.) A charming color.
Gigantic Lilac. A very pleasing color, lighting up well at night.

Any of the above varieties, trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50; per 1000, $12.00

Gigantic Mixed. A mixture of all the above varieties in proper proportion. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.25; 1000 seeds, $10.00.
PRINCESS MAY. A very pretty type of Cyclamen. Color pink, with suffused blotches of crimson at base of petals. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.
SALMON QUEEN. Undoubtedly one of the most distinct and beautiful salmon colors found in Cyclamen. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.
Cyclamen Persicum giganteum Salmonium splendens. The finest salmon-pink variety. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.
Cyclamen Persicum giganteum, Rococo, Mixed Colors. The beautifully fringed flowers measure 5 inches in diameter. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.
Cyclamen Persicum giganteum, Bush Hill Pioneer. A beautiful new feathered Cyclamen in various colors. Trade pkt., 50c; 100 seeds, $1.50.

Six Grand Novelty Cyclamens

Bridesmaid. New Cyclamen of the "Papilio" variety, with large, well-formed flowers of a pure white, with a red eye, while the beautifully fringed petals are broadly edged with bright red. Trade pkt., 50c.
Peach Blossom. An exceptionally handsome variety of an intense rose color. Tr. pkt., 50c.
Purple King. The best of all crimson varieties and strikingly beautiful. Trade pkt., 50c.
Phoenix. Bright cherry-crimson flowers, freely produced. Trade pkt., 50c.
Rose of Marienthal. Soft shell-pink; a very pretty variety Trade pkt., 50c.
Vulcan. The rich crimson color is very striking and contrasts admirably with the pure white of Butterfly. Trade pkt., 50c.

CYCLAMEN, JAMES' NEW SWEET-SCENTED

A fragrant Cyclamen, having a particularly pleasant odor, resembling that of the Honey Locust, or of the Lily of the Valley. The colors are pink, flesh pink, with carmine base, and white. Trade pkt., 50c.

THE COSMOS DAHLIA.

In connection with the work on the improvement of florists' flowers, performed by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Dr. Galloway says that a new summer-blooming dahlia has been developed by Geo. W. Oliver. "This new race of hybrid dahlias has been produced within the past three years and it is believed will fill a long-felt want in supplying flowers of brilliant colors several weeks before the ordinary types of dahlias are available. The ordinary types of dahlias which are now grown are the only ones which have been hitherto improved by gardeners and florists. The seed-bearing parent of the new race is a species discovered three years ago in Mexico at an elevation of 7,000 feet by Federico Chisholm. The plants were forwarded to the Bureau of Plant Industry and have been crossed with the ordinary species, and as the result of these crosses more than twenty new forms have been developed."

The principal feature of the new dahlias is the early period of blooming, which begins by the end of June or the first half of July. By October 1 the flowering capacity of the plants is practically exhausted, only a few scattering blooms appearing after that period. One of the desirable characteristics of this new dahlia is its long stem, making it possible to cut blooms with stems eighteen inches long without a waste of unopened flowers. The name "cosmos dahlia" has been suggested by Mr. Oliver for the new hybrids because of the profusion of bloom. The foliage is very diversified, some plants having fern-like foliage, others single and coarse leaves. Only three colors have appeared so far in the flowers, namely, crimson, scarlet and yellow in various shades. Three of the forms have shown signs of doubling, and the flowers of these were recrossed last summer in the hope of producing a reliable double variety. Both the single and double forms have set seed freely. When the seed is germinated in the month of January, good strong plants are ready for setting out by the middle of May.

BUDS OF OCTOBER FROST.

What bud should I take on October Frost, and when should I take it, so it will be large and full for November 1?

A. W.

Take the crown bud of October Frost for early November blooming. Ribes.

ROOTING MUM CUTTINGS.

Is it possible to root chrysanthemum cuttings at this time of year and grow them on for stock plants for next spring, or will the cuttings run to bud and fail to develop?

H. F.

There would be no trouble in rooting suckers from the old plants at this time, but there would be no profit in it, as the care required and room needed for this kind of work, unless for some new or scarce variety, would be thrown away.

Of course, cuttings taken now will in all probability produce summer buds, which are worse than useless.

Stock plants, lifted and either boxed, planted or potted after the blooming season is over, will give all the cuttings required at the propagating season.

Ribes.

I must have the Review; the florists' best paper.—D. H. Green, West Grove.

THE BOSTON EXHIBITIONS.

When the Massachusetts Horticultural Society decided to have its free exhibitions open on Sunday afternoons as well as Saturday, there were those who claimed that the experiment would not be a success. The experience June 14, however, would alone serve to justify the wisdom of the policy which has been pursued this year. While the day was one on which most people preferred to be out of doors, the hall was filled nearly all the time. When the "pay exhibitions" are held, with the accompanying attraction of music, there is no difficulty in bringing people to the hall. Those who come to the regular Saturday exhibitions, however, are brought there solely by their love for flowers and plants, and it is noticeable that since the Sunday exhibitions were opened there has been an almost regular increase in the attendance.

The Boston Transcript, which takes probably more interest in things floricultural than any other daily paper in the United States, says that when Sunday exhibitions were first proposed, at the time of occupying the new hall, it was contended that "the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was in a sense a public institution, and that by reason of its position it ought to do something to educate the public to a greater interest in country life and horticulture. That these exhibitions are doing such a work is not to be doubted. The character of the visitors to the hall has changed since the removal to the new location. The people of the Back Bay and the denizens of the South End lodging houses meet with a common interest. The broadening of the scope of the work done by the organization can only be productive of good results. It not only makes for education, but for democracy. The Saturday lectures through the winter and the Saturday and Sunday exhibitions in summer are one of the most useful features of the Horticultural Society's work, and the holding of exhibitions as frequently as possible, rather than a few great shows, is a policy which should be encouraged."

When Writing Advertisers

PACIFIC COAST.

Portland, Ore.—Mrs. A. C. Woodington, wife of the foreman at the Sibson Rose Nurseries, with her two sons, is visiting relatives at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Garfield, Wash.—Edwin G. Scott has moved his greenhouses to a better location and is adding two houses with concrete walls, thus making his total glass area about 6,000 square feet.

LOS ANGELES.

State of Trade.

Trade for the last week has been rather dull, almost all the retailers complaining, but we look for a rattling good business as soon as the result of the coming election has been determined. Flowers are now almost at the store man's prices. Centaurea is selling at present at the fancy price of $1 per thousand, with carnations not much more, and hard to move even at these prices. Stock is not very good. Roses are scarce, with few outdoor ones to be had.

H. N. Gage, a local grower, has opened up a stand in Hamburger's new department store, and there is every reason to believe that he will make a success of it.

Club Meeting.

The Los Angeles Florists' Club is growing rapidly, having a membership of over seventy-five in good standing to date. At a special meeting called for Saturday evening, August 15, there were over forty members present. At the conclusion of business they repaired to one of the leading cafes, where a bountiful repast was served. Several good speeches were listened to with evident interest and enjoyment, and after three good, lusty cheers for our president, O. C. Saakes, were given, everyone went home with a friendly feeling for his neighbor, the world in general and the Los Angeles Florists' Club in particular. C. E. M.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

We are passing through a quiet summer and there is nothing interesting, from a business standpoint, to report. The weather has been hot and dry and the smoke from the forest fires does not help the situation. The month of July was the dullest we have experienced in years. The present month, however, has shown some signs of life, and occasionally an opportunity comes to turn out some fine funeral work.

With no rain in seven weeks, all outdoor stock has suffered severely and the cut flower market looks sick. Asters and sweet peas are fairly good, although short-stemmed, and we are told that it requires the constant use of the hose to keep them blooming.

A Visit to the Sibson Rose Nurseries.

S. H. Forshaw, of Pendleton, Ore., well known to the trade here, was a most welcome visitor last week. He had not visited Portland since the Lewis and Clark Fair and was keen to note the progress this city has made in the last three years. As he expressed a wish to see the Sibson Rose Nurseries, the writer was ready to escort him to Sellwood. Mr. Sibson was on duty and brimming over with enthusiasm, as the owner of such a fine range of glass ought to be. Never have we seen stock looking as promising at this place.

The three 200-foot houses planted to Richmond, Ivory, Golden Gate and Kate Moulton denote skillful treatment and are models of perfection. The house of Richmond is a grand sight—strong, thrifty looking plants just coming into bud. There will be a big crop when the fall trade opens up.

O. C. Saakes.
(President Los Angeles Florists' Club.)

Mr. Sibson is still partial to Kate Moulton and says his customers prefer it to any other pink rose. It is doing splendidly this year. The smaller houses are planted to American Beauties and miscellaneous stock, the Beauties showing the same thrifty growth as the other roses. After leaving the place, Mr. Forshaw remarked that he was well paid for his trip to Portland and that he particularly liked Mr. Sibson's way of entertaining visitors. H. J. M.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business continues to improve slightly and the growers are having a much better demand for stock than at any time during the present summer. The weather continues even cooler than that of the last few weeks. The sun rarely shows itself until the middle of the afternoon, and the mornings and evenings are cold. This has its advantage in making it easy for the growers in their changing of houses, but is disadvantageous to the opening of all kinds of blossoms.

The prices of almost everything at present are fully equal to those of last year, but there is not quite so much stock produced as at the corresponding season a year ago. Asters are now at their best and cost the stores about $1 per hundred for the best stock. Mums of the earlier yellow varieties are coming into town in small quantities. They sell wholesale at from $1 to $2.50 per dozen. Another week will make quite a difference, from all appearances.

Amaryllis are a glut at present; $2 per hundred is the ruling price. Lilium album and rubrum are scarcer than they have been. The price averages from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen. Valley is in good supply and moves slowly. Sweet peas are rather short of stem in most instances, and good stock is quickly bought up. The price averages about $1 per dozen bunches. Other kinds of outside stock can be had at any price.

Various Notes.

Miss Charlotte Williams, our well-known decorator, had the big Schilling decoration in Oakland on Thursday of last week.

Alexander Frey has returned from a two weeks' trip to Los Angeles and San Diego. G.

VICTORIA, B. C.

Horticultural Society.

On August 12 and 13 the Victoria Horticultural Society held its seventh annual summer show. Trade exhibits were slim. The Lansdowne Floral Co., however, showed perennials; Flewin's Gardens showed perennials, bulbs and ferns, and James Simpson, the latest addition to our ranks, showed sweet peas.

The feature of the show was the sweet pea exhibits of the amateurs. The honors fell to Mrs. H. Beavan and W. C. Newberry. Forgive me, Mr. Editor, if I be overenthusiastic over these peas, but had you been here yourself your panegyric would have been louder and longer. We claim that nowhere in the world can such peas be seen—stand after stand with stems sixteen to twenty inches long and four and even five huge flowers on a stem. The variety Mrs. Henry Bell was in one stand, with five flowers on each of the twenty stems exhibited. This is a new pea, with pink and cream coloring.

Take heed, ye wise ones! Let me whisper a name in your ear—Audrey Crier. This is the best yet. The lady who put up a lovely vase of this pea told me she paid 10 cents per seed for it, and was more than satisfied.

St. George is a wondrous color, somewhat like Evelyn Byatt, but of fine size. Elsie Herbert is a blush Spencer of fine size and strong. Etta Dyke is a fine white, with ruffled standards; it will probably beat Nora Unwin. Helen Lewis and George Herbert are still the best in their color. Mrs. Collier seems to be the favorite yellow, but Clara Curtis was well shown. A. J. Cook is a new blue of promise, but I prefer Helen Pierce myself.

Some of these names are probably unknown to many readers, but in this city we fairly revel in sweet peas, and he who cannot produce the newest must take a back seat.

Various Notes.

Flewin's Gardens have bought out Wollaston & Wallace, the bulb growers, and will carry on the business as a retail concern only at present, as regards bulbs.

Carnations are now about replanted, though the price of flowers is still 25 cents per dozen. E. A. W.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.
Officers for 1908-9: Pres., Charles J. Brown, Rochester, N. Y.; Vice-Pres., C. M. Hobbs, Bridgeport, Ind.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester, N. Y.; Treas., O. L. Yates, Rochester, N. Y. The 34th annual convention will be held at Rochester, June, 1909.

GEORGE WILSON & SONS, Marysville, O., is the name of a new nursery firm that is just ready for business.

ARTICLES of incorporation have been filed for the King-Thurman Nursery Co., of Kalispell, Mont., by A. J. King and others. The capital stock is $10,000.

J. A. VAN KIRK, formerly of Riverside, Cal., has bought five acres of land just north of Phoenix, Ariz., and will start a nursery for trees of citrus fruits.

QUITE a number of nurserymen concur in the statement that the number of orders now on the books for fall delivery is not as great as it should be at this date.

DELBERT MITCHELL, of the Mitchell Nursery Co., Owatonna, Minn., has reached home from a trip to Rochester. He is looking for the largest season on record in the nursery business next spring.

THE nursery business hitherto conducted by R. A. Jones as the Riverside Nurseries, at Spokane, Wash., has been incorporated under the name of the Columbia River Nursery Co., with a capital stock of $80,000. The incorporators are R. A. Jones and Sadie E. Jones.

THE trade takes an active part in the affairs of the Texas State Horticultural Society. W. B. Munson, of Denison, is president and F. T. Ramsey, of Austin, first vice-president. The summer meeting, July 7 to 9, was a pronounced success and plans are already on foot to make the winter meeting the best ever.

A. A. N. COMMITTEES.

Charles J. Brown, who was elected president of the American Association of Nurserymen at Milwaukee in June, has announced his committee appointments. The chairmen of the principal committees are as follows:

Transportation—F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kan.
Tariff—Irving Rouse, Rochester.
Legislation—Wm. Pitkin, Rochester.
Co-operation with Entomologists—Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.
Forestry—J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.
Program—J. M. Pitkin, Newark, N. Y.
Exhibits—Thomas B. Meehan, Dreshertown, Pa.
National Council of Horticulture—Chas. J. Maloy, Rochester.

The Rochester nurserymen have already begun preparations for the 1909 convention by electing Wm. Pitkin to take charge of the entertainment features, which will be more elaborate than usual.

SOUTHERN NURSERYMEN MEET.

At the closing session of the convention of the Southern Nurserymen's Association, held at Atlanta, August 19 and 20, the following officers were elected:

President—Henry B. Chase, Huntsville, Ala.
Vice-president—J. C. Miller, Rome, Ga.
Secretary and treasurer—A. I. Smith, Knoxville, Tenn.

The next place of meeting will be Huntsville, Ala., in August, 1909.

Among others present at the convention were J. E. Smith, Concord, Ga.; J. Van Lindley, Pomona, N. C.; T. J. Fletcher, Cleveland, Tenn.; D. W. Hunter, Chattanooga, Tenn.; H. H. Hume, Glen St. Mary, Fla.; A. K. Miller, Monticello, Fla.; F. M. Smith, Concord, Ga.; James Cureton, Austell, Ga.; James W. Fraser, Huntsville, Ala.; J. A. Granger, Monticello, Fla.; J. N. Graty, Young's, S. C.; W. F. Heikes, Huntsville, Ala.; R. E. Allison, Bowling Green, Ky.; A. A. Newson, Knoxville, Tenn.; Harry Nicholson, Winchester, Tenn.; Henry B. Chase, Huntsville, Ala.; W. A. Easterly, Cleveland, Tenn.; R. C. Simpson, Monticello, Fla.; John A. Young, Greensboro, N. C.; J. C. Miller, Rome, Ga.; W. T. Hood, Richmond, Va.

The Southern Nurserymen's Association was organized nine years ago, has over 100 members, and represents investments aggregating $10,000,000.

GRAYISH BLUE CLEMATIS BUG.

A southern subscriber would like to know if anything will kill the grayish blue clematis bug without killing the plant. Paris green, strong enough to kill the bug, will kill the plant also. I have tried whale-oil soap and kerosene with indifferent success. It seems to me that a bug can take a dose of poison, go home, and afterward lay a thousand or two of eggs. F. J. U.

I am not acquainted with the clematis bug spoken of, but from what F. J. U. says I infer that it eats the foliage of the plants in question. Whale-oil soap and kerosene emulsion, while excellent insecticides to use against aphis or other sucking insects, which they kill by contact, are valueless against pests which gnaw and eat the foliage. To destroy the latter a poison spray is necessary. I would advise the use of arsenate of lead, using it at the rate of five pounds of poison to fifty gallons of water. There is no danger of this burning the foliage, and as it is of an adhesive nature it retains its poisonous properties several weeks. The water must be kept well agitated, or the poison, being heavy, will settle at the bottom of the barrel.

In using Paris green again, it would be well to add a little lime to the water. This lets loose some of the free arsenic and prevents burning. One pound of Paris green to 150 gallons of water is as strong a dose as is safe to use. If you will try the arsenate of lead, you will find that it will kill any caterpillar, bug or beetle which feeds on foliage, without in any way injuring the foliage. It is estimated that in Massachusetts this year over 300 tons of arsenate of lead have been used in the war on the gypsy and brown tail moths, elm beetle and other pests. W. N. CRAIG.

This variety first came to notice in the orchard of the late Jesse Hiatt, of Peru,

WAGNER PARK CONSERVATORIES—FIRST PRIZE PEONIES

After a number of years of experimenting we have selected three varieties of peonies out of our large list that we consider the best and most profitable for florists, and have called these three varieties our First Prize Varieties. Their selection was not only made on account of their beautiful large blossoms borne on long stiff stems, color, free flowering qualities, and being the best for cut flowers, but on account of their continuous and long flowering period, which is an important feature to the florist.

FIRST PRIZE WHITE—Has immense pure white blossoms, with carmine flaked tips to a few center petals. It is the first to flower and is succeeded just before its flowers begin to fade by the First Prize Pink.

FIRST PRIZE PINK—Blossoms immense on long stiff stems and in color almost identical to a La France rose.

FIRST PRIZE RED—This beautiful variety, resembling the American Beauty rose in color, succeeds the First Prize Pink, extending the flowering period for peony blossoms almost two months.

We are sure that our efforts in supplying the florist with three grand varieties of peonies, enabling them to have a continuation of bloom over such a length of time in place of overstocking him with blossoms all at one time, will be appreciated, and we are expecting a great demand for this stock, so advise the placing of orders as early as possible so there will be no disappointment in securing the best stock. Orders will be filled in rotation as received. Stock will be ready to ship September first.

WAGNER PARK CONSERVATORIES - SIDNEY, OHIO

Mention The Review when you write.

Madison county, Iowa, about 1881. It was then a sprout, supposed to be about six years old, from the stock of a Yellow Bellflower tree, the top of which had been destroyed. The beauty and fine quality of the fruit attracted Mr. Hiatt's attention and he at once began its propagation in a small way for his own planting. The tree proved to be a hardy, vigorous, upright grower, with very heavy, dark-green foliage, and a regular annual bearer. At fifteen years of age the original sprout was reported to be thirteen inches in diameter at the ground. The originator stated in 1896 that while three-fifths of his orchard had been destroyed by drought and cold during the preceding eight years, Delicious had not been injured in any respect. The name Hawkeye was at one time applied to the variety by the Hiatt family and locally used, but does not appear to have been published in connection with it and is therefore not entitled to recognition as a synonym.

The right to propagate and sell the variety for a term of five years having been sold to the Stark Bros. Nurseries and Orchards Co., about 1894, with the right to rename the variety, it was commercially introduced by that firm in 1895 under the name Delicious, which word was registered in the United States Patent Office as a trade-mark July 4, 1905.

Though lacking such marked and distinctive quality as characterizes our best apples, such as Esopus, Jonathan, Northern Spy, Grimes and Yellow Newtown, this variety is acceptable to most palates and is apparently entitled to high rank as a dessert fruit. The tree is a strong, upright grower, apparently sufficiently productive to satisfy commercial requirements. In the locality of its origin it is apparently rather susceptible to apple scab and will therefore need to be thoroughly sprayed for that disease in cool and humid climates. It has been fruited on young trees during the past four or five years in most of the apple districts, west of the Mississippi river and appears to be specially promising in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast states.

The Market.

Local trade among the florists was quiet last week and what little business was done was due to funeral work. Roses are still scarce. Some of the new cut are coming in and they are good. Carnations are scarce, almost a luxury. A few field-grown ones are noticed and are fairly good for this class of stock.

Asters are fairly plentiful, but particularly good ones are scarce. There is any quantity of inferior material, but that is not wanted. Gladioli are good and, while not abundant, are nearly enough to satisfy the demand, and they are becoming more popular every year.

Various Notes.

Another new flower store has been opened, at 624 Sixteenth street. The firm name is Walter & Hill.

B. E. Gillis, of the Park Floral Co., is enjoying a vacation in the mountains.

The Washington Park Floral Co. has recently put up a carnation house.

Mrs. Scott, of the Scott Floral Co., has gone east on a visit.

The craft here are well pleased with the election of J. A. Valentine to the presidency of the S. A. F. E. S. K.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade remains about the same as usual. Funeral work is good; this calls for plenty of white flowers. Asters are about the mainstay at present. They retail at 35 cents per dozen. Carnations are all thrown out. A good many of the growers have benched their plants.

The late crop of outdoor asters are now making their appearance in all colors. Roses are not much called for, as most of the retailers will not handle them on account of being so poor; $1 to $1.50 per dozen retail is the general price. A few sweet peas are still to be seen. They sell at about 50 cents per hundred retail.

Various Notes.

E. Y. Peirce has benched his plants and they are looking fine. His Boston Market is great. This is a general favorite with him. His house of roses could not be better.

George N. Briden, foreman for R. H. Woodhouse, is away at Jolly Island, N. H., for two weeks. Mr. Woodhouse is busy building and improving his range.

At the last meeting of the New Bedford Horticultural Society the question of the elm leaf beetle was taken up and discussed by the members. Wm. Keith, one of the park commissioners, and a member of the local society, was severe in his condemnation of the city's neglect in this matter. Mr. White showed some nice perennials. W. L.

MONTREAL.

Current Comment.

We have had considerable cool weather lately, with enough rain. Business is quiet, though the quality and quantity of flowers is improving.

The exhibition of the Lachine Horticultural Society, which was opened at the Town hall on Thursday evening, was a triumph for the executive, both as regards the character of the display and the patronage and appreciation bestowed upon it. The season has not been favorable for some varieties of flowers, but, generally speaking, the blooms were of great beauty and excellence. In the fruit section there was an exceptionally fine exhibit of peaches grown by Robert Burrows. A collection of gladioli sent in by William Cooper & Co., not for competition, was greatly admired.

The principal prize winners for flower and foliage plants were J. Bennett, Lachine, and G. Vreudge, Montreal. T. Pewtress and C. Smith were the most successful exhibitors in the department for cut flowers. In other floral sections the names of F. Watson, J. Bartlett and R. Massie, Jr., were prominent. Messrs. Cole and Edwards were to the front with their vegetables, and Messrs. Bishop and Cole were ahead with their fruit.

The exhibition was formally opened by A. J. Dawes, and brief speeches were delivered by the mayor of Lachine and F. D. Monk, M. P. The judges were: Messrs. Wilshire, F. C. Smith, Pascoe, Gibb, Dunbar, Eddy, Wright and Kirkwood.

Frank Bennett spent a fortnight in Montreal and Lachine recently, after an absence of about seven years.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business still halts; indeed, it is lame in both legs. The market is featureless and proceeds on the evenest plane of dullness. The weather is charming, barring an occasional day of muggy humidity, but the nights are cool and considerably below the average of the usual season.

Carnations are benched generally and some few blooms have made their appearance, but are small and very short stemmed.

Some few roses are being cut from young stock from inside, but are made to look insignificant beside the enormous quantities of Maman Cochet, and especially the white variety. This rose seems to have gained a foothold here that is unknown, to such an extent, in other quarters. Whether the season has been exceptionally propitious or it is adapting itself to our climatic conditions, this variety improves constantly in quality. In beauty of form, delicacy of tint, length of stem and neat foliage, with admirable keeping qualities, it is hard to surpass. Many of the stores consider it first for making up. And, as to the quantity produced, it simply is illimitable, swamping the market. At the Florists' Exchange on Saturday there were 25,000 Cochet roses on sale.

Various Notes.

The members of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club who attended the convention at Niagara Falls have returned home and speak in glowing terms of the hospitality shown the delegation from Baltimore. The Washington club was also on the same train and made the trip more pleasant, as they well know how to do.

---

Council Bluffs, Ia.—F. L. Lainson says that garden crops here have been poor this season, on account of the excessive rainfall during June and the drought later. Cucumbers and melons have been especially backward. Cucumbers under glass were badly attacked by greenfly.

Carnation Plants

We have about 1000 more plants to offer of May at $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. Don't delay in ordering if you want to plant this variety this season.

We also have fine plants of Enchantress, Rose-pink Enchantress, Crimson Glow and Mrs. Lawson to offer at $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000.

PALMS

Cocos Weddelliana

A grand lot of plants in 7-in. pots, elegant, graceful specimens, 30 inches high, perfect in every way, something entirely different from what you have been offering to your customers in the Decorative line heretofore, and a plant which will appeal to everyone. Price, $2.50 each; also a smaller size in 5-in. pots, 18 to 20 inches high, at 75c each.

Kentias

Although the stock of Kentias generally is scarce, not only in this country, but also in the Palm centers of Europe, you will find our stock of nearly all sizes very complete, and all of the stock here offered of excellent quality and market value.

We offer in Kentia Belmoreana

FERTILIZERS FOR SWEET PEAS.

What is the best fertilizer for outdoor sweet peas, and when is the best time to apply it? We raised the Dorothy Eckford and Nora Unwin for white this year, but could not get any stems ten or twelve inches, as our friend Bates, of Sugar Hill, speaks of in the REVIEW for August 6. We shall want to try again next year and want to do our best.

W. H. K.

---

There is nothing better than well decomposed cow manure. We like to apply a heavy coating to the land late in the fall, plowing it in and leaving the surface rough. This is much better than leaving this work until spring. Sow your seed as soon as the land can be worked and mulch well between the rows after the peas are well started. Sow thinly, or have courage to thin out your plants; otherwise you cannot expect strong stems.

DETROIT.

The Market.

There is nothing startling to report regarding business last week, the usual summer quietness prevailing.

All seasonable stock is plentiful. Roses are coming along nicely. Some fine La Detroit are helping out. There is a good supply of Brides, Maids, Killarney, Meteor and Richmond. Carnations are improving with the cool weather we have been having the last week.

Many fine asters are arriving from various sections of the country. The supply has been somewhat better than the demand the last few days; as a result, only the better grades were disposed of. Prices range all the way from 2 cents to 4 cents.

Various Notes.

Clyde Chase, of Schroeter's, has been having his summer outing.

G. H. Taepke's store is receiving its annual overhauling. The interior finish is to be olive green and gold. The whole force have had their vacations and are ready for another strenuous winter.

The delegates to the convention are all back again. All seem to have enjoyed themselves immensely.

September 5 is meeting night. The new officers will then be installed, and every member of the club should be present to give the new officers a warm reception.

F. J. Rosser, of this city, brought the writer a sample of some exceptionally fine pale pink asters recently. He hopes to have a good stock for next year.

C. Winterich and a party of friends stopped off at Detroit on their return home from the Falls. H. S.

Leominster, Mass.—When two men employed at the Kendall greenhouses went to work on the morning of August 21, they found Amos D. Merrill lying dead upon the floor of the office. Death was caused by acute indigestion.

Ashtabula, O.—R. W. Griswold, Jr., is a strong supporter of the movement which is being made for the annexation of Bunker Hill, a tract of territory south of this city, and it is reported that he contemplates building a $30,000 addition to his greenhouses in case the movement succeeds. An injunction was applied for by the opponents of annexation, and Mr. Griswold was called as one of the witnesses in the case. He testified that he owned land and a greenhouse within the limits of the proposed annexation territory, valued at from $12,000 to $15,000, and also twenty-three acres of land, worth $1,000 per acre.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

For the last week it can be stated that business was a little ahead of the week previous. Stock, also, was more plentiful. A nice shower August 11 put an end to the driest season on record since the establishment of our local bureau in 1871, for we were minus rain for twenty-three days, but all is well again and no doubt will remain so for the rest of the summer season.

Up to a few days ago white asters were plentiful and colored stock scarce. Now it is just the reverse and most of them are rather short-stemmed and not as large as in former years. Gladioli are good and enough to go around. The same can be said of young roses, while the supply of green goods exceeds the demand.

One grower still has some old carnations, which have been well taken care of, and these bring 2 cents and 3 cents. Still, it may not be such a good speculation on the long run, anyway.

Various Notes.

Miss Rose Semler, for more than fifteen years with the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co., has returned from her vacation, which lasted two weeks.

On Saturday, August 15, Holton & Hunkel received their first cut of roses, Rhea Reid, from their new houses at Brown Deer.

At the recent meeting of cemetery superintendents, James Currie, of this city, was elected president.

There have been many calls for field-grown carnation plants so far, and prospects are good for a rushing business in this line, for good stock is not overplentiful.

The following joined the Chicago party on their trip to the S. A. F. convention: Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Pollworth, Mr. and Mrs. Nic Zweifel, Mrs. C. B. Whitnall and Mrs. Potter. E. O.

A Wonderful New Nephrolepis

Nephrolepis Superbissima

Introduction of 1908

We desire to call attention to this new fern, which originated with us and which we are introducing this year.

It is a very unique and distinct novelty—as distinct from Nephrolepis Piersoni and Piersoni elegantissima as they were from Bostoniensis. It is, in fact, a complete break. The fronds are very heavily imbricated, the pinnæ overlapping, making the fronds very dense and compact.

It differs from the other Nephrolepis not only in form, but also in color, being a richer and darker green—entirely different from the yellowish green of all the other Nephrolepis. The plant is very sturdy in its habit, the fronds never breaking down.

While a photograph shows a similarity to its predecessors, it is absolutely distinct, not only in the formation of the fronds and color, but also in its habit and general characteristics. It makes a much more dwarf and compact growth, the fronds being very dense, firm and rigid, and having a great deal more substance, so that it will stand more knocking around than any other fern of this type.

It is a sterling novelty. Experts who have seen it consider it by far the best fern ever sent out. It is a plant that needs to be seen to have its great value and sterling qualities appreciated. It really is not in the same class with the other varieties.

It was awarded a First-class Certificate by the Royal Horticultural Society at Crystal Palace in London, November, 1908, the plants exhibited there having been shipped from New York two weeks before that time. After being exhibited in London, the same plants were shipped to Edinburgh, Scotland, where they were again awarded a First-class Certificate by the Scottish Horticultural Society. This will indicate the value of the plant as a novelty, and also demonstrates in a very conclusive manner its fine keeping and shipping qualities.

We have just begun shipping advance orders, and new orders can now be shipped immediately on receipt.

Fine, strong plants, 2¼-in. pots, $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100. 4-in. pots, $7.00 per doz.; $50.00 per 100. 6-in. pots, $1.50 each; $15.00 per doz.

SEEDS.

COBURN'S SELECTED PANSY SEED.
BEST MARKET STRAIN GROWN.

Our seed is saved from about 12,000 plants, carefully selected, when in bloom, from the 500,000 we grow for our spring sales.

Each plant is carefully selected, color, size, form and substance being taken into consideration, and the proportion of each color is properly balanced.

As a result of over 25 years' work along these lines, we feel justified in claiming to have the best strain of pansies on the market, and we invite trial and comparison.

Growing our stock in this manner, we have only a limited amount of seed to spare, and in order to distribute as widely as possible, we offer it in packets of 1000 seeds. Price, $1.00 per packet (only one to each customer).
I. E. COBURN, 291 Ferry St., Everett, Mass.

CEMENT FOR CAST-IRON PIPE.

What is the best material to use for cementing 4-inch cast-iron water pipe for greenhouse heating? C. J.

In answer to your query regarding a cement for cast-iron pipe, we have selected the following from several recommended by Bailey: "Sal ammoniac, two ounces; sulphur, one ounce; clean iron borings or filings, reduced to powder, twelve pounds; water enough to form a thin paste."

EXCHANGE THE PIPE.

I am completing a house 8x115 feet, running north and south. The walls are three feet high, and the ridge is seven feet high. I have a Wilks boiler 20x42 and about 350 feet of 4-inch boiler tubes I wish to use. How shall I go about heating my house? The location is Chicago and general stock is to be grown.
T. G.

Your house slightly exceeds the limit of the length for best results with hot water, especially with 4-inch pipe. For a house of these dimensions I would advise the exchange of the 4-inch pipe towards pipe of smaller size, preferably 2-inch. I would then pipe the house as follows: Carry a 2½-inch flow pipe under the ridge the length of the house and return by six 2-inch pipes, three on each side. Arrange the expansion tank at least fifteen feet above the highest point in the system. Place a pet cock on the high point in the flow pipe, which should be at the end of the greenhouse farthest from the boiler, and connect the expansion tank with the main return near the boiler. L. C. C.

GREENHOUSE AND DWELLING.

I am going to build a greenhouse, 18x60, with sides four feet high and the center eight feet high. I wish to connect the heat to a dwelling of 600 square feet. What size of lead pipe should I have? I will drop the pipe at the end of the greenhouse and take it sixteen feet underground into the dwelling. What size of return pipes will be needed in the greenhouse? I will have steam heat. with the average dwelling house temperature and a temperature in the greenhouse suitable for tomatoes or geraniums. I am located in Indiana.

The greenhouse 18x60 will be connected to a small greenhouse 12x50, with the north wall three feet high and the center five feet high, sloping to one foot on the south side. The center of the walk it two feet in the ground. I have used this for plants and it requires but little heat. D. W. L.

It is probable that a 2½-inch flow from the boiler to the end of the greenhouse, and a 2-inch extension from there into the dwelling, will answer the purpose. I should use 1¼-inch pipes for returns in the greenhouse. Ten 1¼-inch returns should maintain a carnation temperature in the house. I think it advisable to carry an independent return from the dwelling to the boiler, rather than attempt to tap the house return into the greenhouse returns. L. C. C.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

We are building two houses (King construction), each 21x100, eight feet to the gutter and fifteen feet to the ridge. We wish to heat them by steam, to carnation and sweet pea temperature in weather when the outside temperature occasionally goes down to 40 degrees below zero. How many runs of 2-inch and 2½-inch pipe shall we need in each house, and how would you distribute the same? Also, what boiler capacity will be needed? A. M.

Probably as good a plan as any to follow would be to pipe each house as though it were independent. This, on a steam basis, can be well done by using a 2½-inch riser under the ridge of each house, and dividing each at the most distant end of the house to supply sixteen 1¼-inch pipes arranged beneath the benches in such a manner as to allow an extra pipe under each of the benches next the outside wall in each house. A boiler with 300 square feet of heating surface, or one rated to carry 2,500 square feet of radiation, should be ample for the plant. L. C. C.

A HOUSE FOR MIXED PLANTS.

Please inform me how to pipe my greenhouse for hot water. The house is 16x42 feet, running east and west, and is eleven feet to the ridge. The north side is five and one-half feet high, solid wall. The south side is four and one-half feet high, two feet being glass. The ends are one-half glass. The location is Indiana. All pipes are to be under the two outside benches; also the flow pipes, if possible. The boiler is to be in the basement of the residence, twenty feet from the greenhouse. I intend to grow a mixture of plants. How many square feet of radiation have I? How large a boiler will I need to heat three times this area? P. F.

To maintain a temperature suitable for a mixed class of plants, it will be desirable to install about 400 square feet of radiation. If you use 2-inch pipe, this can be done by installing fifteen runs of pipe, all of which may be arranged under the benches. Two of the pipes can be used for flow pipes and thirteen for returns. This plan would require a boiler rated at at least 1,500 square feet of radiation, if you wish three times the required present capacity. L. C. C.

The Market.

The weather was not so hot last week and trade, considering the season, was fairly good, though nearly all the work done was for funerals. The local retailers are anxiously awaiting the return of our summer tourists and, with them safely back in the city, the cut flower trade should take a decided turn for the better.

A trip through the wholesale district last Monday morning found it in fairly good condition, with nothing in the overflow. There are plenty of roses to be had, but only few of the fancy grade. White and pink Cochets are coming in well and sell better than Brides and Maids. Beauties, when good, sell clean, but not any too many are coming in. Asters are selling well. Canfield's fancy grades have the call at Kuehn's.

Carnations are coming better in size and color, but short in stem. Anything good sells well. Single tuberose spikes are plentiful and selling cheap. Smilax has become scarce, but in other greens there is plenty.

H. M. Dunlap, of Savoy, Ill., opened the meeting. In his remarks he referred to the daily press calling them grafters, but insisted that the title was botanical and not political. The opening discussion was on spraying mixtures and the proper time for spraying. This was led by H. A. Aldrich, of Neoga, Ill.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, James W. Stanton, Richview, Ill.; vice-president, U. T. Cox, Rockwood, O.; secretary, T. C. Wilson, Kirkwood, Mo.; treasurer, Wesley Green, Des Moines, Ia. After the two days' session the delegates, in a body, paid a visit to Shaw's Garden, under the escort of Superintendent H. C. Irish, and were escorted through the garden by students of the Shaw School of Botany.

Henry Shaw Banquet.

The nineteenth annual banquet, as provided for in the will of Henry Shaw, for gardeners, florists and nurserymen, took place Wednesday, in the banquet hall of the Mercantile Club, at 7 p. m. All the delegates of the Apple Growers' convention were invited and in attendance, as well as a number of florists and gardeners. William Trelease, director of the garden, was toastmaster and presided in his usual happy manner. The tables were tastefully decorated for the occasion and the orchestra played selections bearing the names of flowers of the garden. After cigars, the toastmaster called on the different speakers. Members of the St. Louis Florists' Club, who were present and seated at one table, were: J. F. Ammann, W. C. Young, Emil Schray, John Connon, C. A. Kuehn, E. W. Guy, F. J. Fillmore, Frank Weber, Edwin Denker, Carl Beyer, Charles Schoenle, W. C. Smith, Walter Retzer, J. W. Dunford, A. G. Pring, H. C. Irish and J. J. Beneke. The attendance numbered nearly 400, and all had a good time.

Deake, his aunt, of Asheville, N. C., spent Saturday in St. Louis on their way to Snake River Valley, Idaho, where they will make their future home, having sold out their business in Asheville.

R. A. McPheron, of Litchfield, Ill., called on the florists last week.

J. W. McNeill, of Jackson, Tenn., with his family, spent a day here on their return home from a two weeks' vacation.

W. C. Smith, John Burke and Fred Alves left Sunday morning for a two weeks' fishing and hunting trip in the Ozark mountains.

President W. C. Young, of the Florists' Club, has fully recovered from his recent sick spell and called on friends downtown last week.

Miss Minnie Beyers, bookkeeper for F. C. Weber, is spending her vacation this week at the Meinhardt cottage, on the Illinois side, near Alton.

Mrs. M. M. Ayres has everything in fine shape for the fall trade. A new coat of white paint all over the inside and a fine show of extra fine fern plants of all kinds make the place a great attraction in that neighborhood.

J. F. Ammann is cutting a fine lot of Killarney and Ivory roses for this market. He will also grow Perles this year. A nice cut of carnations and asters also comes from his place to Kuehn's.

Christ Sanders, of Smith's, who has been confined a week through sickness, is out again and back in the store.

For the funeral of Councilman O'Brien the following florists had large and expensive floral designs to make: Ostertag Bros., Grimm & Gorley, Riessen Floral Co. and Foster Floral Co. Nearly all in the trade had some work for this funeral.

Alex. Waldbart & Sons, at Horton place, have had a splendid summer trade. Their store and show houses are great attractions for flower lovers in that neighborhood.

W. J. Pilcher, of Kirkwood, has returned from his vacation trip to Chicago, much pleased with what he saw at the big plants around the city.

Henry Ostertag, trustee-elect of the Florists' Club, has already gone to work laying plans for the fall and winter meetings of the club. He says, "Leave it to me and, with Charlie and Billy, we will make things interesting for the members, so that all the meetings hereafter will have some special feature, which will bring out the members to attend the meetings." The September meeting, which takes place at Edwardsville, Ill., at the home of J. F. Ammann, will have special features, so no one can afford to miss it.

C. C. Sanders, chairman of the executive committee of the local Horticultural Society, reports that the fall show of the society will be held the first week in November, in the Armory hall, corner of Grand avenue and Market street. The committee is holding regular meetings and the show should be a success in every way. J. J. B.

LENOX, MASS.

Horticultural Society.

The summer exhibition of annuals and perennials, under the auspices of the Lenox Horticultural Society, was held in the Town hall August 12 and was very successful. Practically all the summer residents attended and in the evening the hall was thronged. The exhibits of perennials were remarkable for the fine quality when the unfavorable season is taken into consideration. Never before at any of the society's shows has there been seen such a fine collection of Phlox decussata. Owing to the extremely hot season and the heavy electrical storms of the previous week, sweet peas were not so numerous as in former years, but, nevertheless, some fine varieties were staged.

Giraud Foster was awarded a diploma for a collection of twenty-five varieties of sweet peas.

For six vases of sweet peas, six varieties, fifty sprays to a vase, John Sloane first, Miss H. Meyer second, Giraud Foster third.

In perennials, Mrs. E. R. Wharton was first in eighteen varieties, W. D. Sloane and Miss H. Meyer in twelve and six varieties.

In classes for eighteen varieties of annuals, twelve and six, the prizes were won by Mrs. E. R. Wharton, W. D. Sloane and Mrs. John E. Alexandre.

For twenty varieties of Phlox decussata, twelve and six, there was a magnificent display, the competition in the various classes being extremely keen, and the winners were Miss A. Kneeland, Mrs. George Westinghouse, Mrs. Wharton, Giraud Foster, Mrs. John Sloane and Mrs. John E. Parsons.

For a vase of twenty spikes of gladioli there were eight competitors, G. H. Morgan and W. D. Sloane winning with magnificent spikes of America.

In classes for six vases of asters in separate colors, twelve blooms to a vase, and three varieties, twelve blooms to a vase, the prizes were won by John E. Parsons and Mrs. Wharton.

Some fine vases of salpiglossis, scabiosa, pentstemon, delphinium and antirrhinum were exhibited, and first prizes were awarded to W. D. Sloane, Miss Barnes, Mrs. John E. Alexandre, Miss H. Parish and Charles Lanier. The last named also won for twelve tuberous-rooted begonias in eight pots, and the vase of dahlias.

For a vase of sweet peas, own foliage allowed, the prize was won by Giraud Foster, with St. George.

In the fruit and vegetable classes competition was keen. Mrs. John E. Parsons, G. H. Morgan, Giraud Foster, Joseph H. Choate, W. D. Sloane and Count de Heredia carried off the principal honors. The following certificates and diplomas were awarded:

Mrs. John E. Parsons, R. Speiro gardener, for a fine vase of 100 spikes of Stenanthium robustum.

Cultural certificate to Count de Heredia, G. H. Thompson gardener, for grapes, peaches and nectarines in pots.

Diploma to Giraud Foster, E. Jenkins gardener, for some fine spikes of Dendrobium Phalænopsis Schroederæ and Odontoglossum grande.

Diploma to G. W. Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., for fifty vases of gladioli.

Diploma to Charles Lanier, A. H. Wingett gardener, for a dish of Yellow Transparent apples.

The judges were Mr. Orpitt, of South Lancaster, Mass., and W. Angus, of Chapinville, Conn.

Geo. H. Instone, Sec'y.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held on Wednesday evening, August 12, with President Jaenicke in the chair. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. President Roosevelt and Capt. De La Mar were elected honorary members and three new active members were elected. The preliminary schedules for the fall show were distributed, considered and approved.

The schedule for the dahlia show, to be held at the October meeting, was submitted and, with some amendments, was adopted. Walter Shaw, of Huntington, was appointed as one of the judges. It was agreed to have the dahlia show October 14, to open at 4 p. m.

Mr. Johnson reported that his supply of copies of the by-laws was exhausted. The executive committee was asked to look them over, to see if any amendments were required, and to report at the next meeting.

Committees throughout the county were appointed to solicit advertisements for the schedules of both exhibitions. Special prizes were offered and accepted by two ladies and a gentleman.

The awards for points on vegetables and flowers are as follows:

Tomatoes, John Drombroski, 72; eggplant, H. F. Meyer, 77; asters, Valentine Cleves, 74.
H. F. Meyer, collection of vegetables, certificate of culture.
James Elmslie, asters, and John Higton, vegetables, certificates of merit.
Valentine Cleves, beans, honorable mention.
H. F. Meyer, cucumbers, honorable mention.
H. F. Meyer, Phoenix Roebelenii, honorable mention.
Oscar Adder, hydrangeas, honorable mention.
Oscar Adder, grapes, honorable mention.

James Elmslie, by invitation, told his experience in growing the asters he exhibited. President Jaenicke exhibited a photograph of his fine new daisy.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Wittbold Concrete Bench was The Only Bench to RECEIVE A

Certificate of Merit

THE HIGHEST AWARD

Of the Society of American Florists at Niagara Falls Last Week

THE FOLLOWING POINTS WERE THE ONES ON WHICH THE JUDGES BASED THEIR DECISION:

FIRST—DURABILITY. When constructed along the lines outlined by the attached booklet it will outlast the present wooden bench; in fact, it will outlast the life of the greenhouse it is constructed in.

SECOND—PRACTICABILITY. It is practical in shape, being the exact reproduction of the present wooden bench; in drainage, as this can be governed by the builder in making more or less round drainage holes. It is our experience that this style of drainage holes evenly distributes the drainage throughout the bench, whereas, if the drainage is obtained by a series of long slots the heat from the pipes makes the earth over these slots dry, baked and unfit for proper root action of the plants; however, at the option of the grower either method of drainage can be constructed. In strength, as it is made of a substance many times the carrying strength of wood; in substance, as cement is a better conductor of heat than wood, hence more practical for the greenhouse.

THIRD—ADAPTABILITY. It can be used for the growing of all classes of plants grown in greenhouses.

FOURTH—CONSTRUCTION. In construction it is simple, quick and can be made in any length, width or depth required. It requires no beams or carriers for support, is only an inch in thickness and no reinforcing material is required except common two-inch mesh poultry wire.

FIFTH—ECONOMY. The materials used in construction do not cost over 2¼ cents per square foot. A bench 100 feet long and 5 feet wide requires only six barrels of Portland cement at $1.00 per barrel, eighteen barrels of sand at 20 cents per barrel and 100 feet of 6-inch wire netting at 2½ cents per running foot, making a total cost of only $12.10 for the material to build 500 square feet of bench surface, and this includes the material necessary for 50 5-inch cement posts 24 inches long. The wood used in making the mold can be used over and over again, as can the clamps for holding the inner and outer sideboards; also the molds for making the cement legs are indestructible and can be used many times.

Many hundreds of clamps and leg molds (the only things you need to buy of us to build this bench) were sold to those who saw our exhibit at Niagara Falls. Everyone will have to adopt concrete in time. Why don't you buy now? :: :: ::

NAME OF PLANT.

I am sending you a specimen of a new plant which is growing in a neighbor's yard. Everyone around here is quite curious about it, as the like of it was never seen here before, and if you could tell us the name of it and a little about its family, you would oblige me and my neighbors. J. H. K.

The plant is Solanum rostratum, belonging to the natural order Solanaceæ, nightshade family. It has no common name that I am aware of. This solanum is found wild in abundance on the plains west of the Mississippi river and is occasionally found as a weed in our gardens in the east. W. N. C.

COHASSET, MASS.—John Clark has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities amounting to $1,779 and no available assets.

The Garland Concrete Bench

The above is a cross section view of bench, showing the perfect drainage

THE sections can be made during the dull season and set up in a hurry. The outfit is inexpensive and it is the cheapest and best bench on the market. It can be made at about the same cost as a good wooden bench. It can be used with cement posts, wood stringers, cement or tile bottoms and wood or cement sides. Complete mold outfits sold, or the mold for any part. Every florist should have at least one of these post molds, as the cement posts are cheaper than cedar and easier set, no hole being required; they are everlasting and can be used for complete cement construction if in the first place used with the balance of the bench made of wood. One of our largest growers has adopted this bench construction and now has 600 barrels of cement on the place to be used in this construction this winter.

For prices of the molds or other information, address

PEORIA, ILL.

Current Comment.

The weather here has been somewhat cooler the last few days, but a heavy rain is much needed. Corn crops are suffering and the country people are becoming alarmed.

There is but little doing among the cut flower firms throughout the city. Chas. Loveridge says business among the retail cut flower stores is dull.

J. E. Hack, salesman for D. U. Augspurger & Sons, returned home this week from a seven weeks' trip through Iowa and Nebraska.

D. U. Augspurger & Sons received a large shipment of poinsettias last week. Mr. Lomuel has secured a position with this firm.

J. C. Murray disposed of a lot of begonias and ferns to a local wholesale firm.

Mr. Kuhl, of Pekin, Ill., was a Peoria visitor Friday. He purchased a quantity of palms and boxwood trees from a local wholesale firm.

Mr. Hastings, representing A. H. Hews & Co., of Cambridge, Mass., called on the local florists last week.

LENOX, MASS.

The last semiannual exhibition of the Lenox Horticultural Society was held in the Town hall in the afternoon and evening of August 12. In most classes the show was of a high standard. In the classes for sweet peas, however, there was a rather low rating, due to the hot weather and electric storms of the preceding few weeks.

One of the most noteworthy exhibits of flowers was from the gardens of Mrs. Edith Wharton, the novelist, at the Mount. In her old-fashioned flower garden near Laurel lake she has been for years cultivating beautiful blossoms.

John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, L. I., made an exhibition of fifty varieties of gladioli, which had been sent to Lenox for exhibition only. The varieties, America, Contrast, Sulphur King, Alaska and Blue Jay, received special commendation and a diploma was given to Mr. Childs for his display.

Norfolk, Va.—E. J. Newton will build an additional greenhouse, at an estimated cost of $1,000.

Mount Pleasant, Ia.—D. H. Smouse has nearly completed a new greenhouse, 14x72, and expects to build another of the same dimensions. He says that business at present is somewhat slow, but the prospect is good for fall and winter trade.
